PRESIDENT WOULD PROTECT OUR MID-PACIFIC POSSESSIONS AGAINST JAPANESE AGGRESSION

Gov. W. F. Frear Hawaii.
Pres. Roosevelt

Hawaii and Its American Commerce, at the mercy of Japan and her fleet of a hundred and fifteen effective warships.

FOR DEFENSE.

MUST FORTIFY HAWAII AND FORTIFY IT QUICK.

President Startles Officers of National Guard by Emphatic Statement.

Reported to Have Declared That Islands' Defenses Must Be Strengthened at Once—Hopes for Big Appropriation from This Congress—Persistent Rumors of Mysterious Movements of Japanese Fleet.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] To officers of the Iowa National Guard, who called at the White House today, President [illegible] ify it quick."

Some of the Iowans, who are not acquainted with the intenseness of the President were inclined to connect the remark of the President with foreign newspaper reports, which ascribe great mystery to the movements of the Japanese fleet.

ANXIOUS FOR APPROPRIATION.

It is well known in Washington that the President has strenuously advocated the strongest kind of fortification at Hawaii, and that he is anxious that this Congress shall grant a liberal appropriation for this purpose. So far as known, there is no other reason given in official circles at this time for activity in Hawaii.

That President Roosevelt is determined to hurry the fortifications of the Pacific Coast, of the Philippines and of Hawaii as rapidly as possible, in spite of all the peace talk coming from Tokio, is apparent to all.

It is recalled with interest that several months ago big guns were taken from Atlantic Coast forts and rushed to the Philippines in special cars across the country, and as special freight on ocean liners. That was when the talk of sending the battleship fleet to the Pacific was first heard, but as yet unconfirmed. Since then the public may have imagined that the President was resting on his oars. But he was as keen as ever.

Secretary Straus of the Department of Commerce and Labor has received a communication from Canada, announcing that that government, as a solution of the Japanese race problems, plans to restrict Japanese coming from Hawaii.

The plan will mean that hereafter Canada will admit only those Japanese who come direct from Japan on through tickets, and in all probability bearing proper passports showing their destination.

CONSIDERED SIGNIFICANT.

If this programme is carried out by Canada the action will be highly significant. It will indicate that Canada is following closely the United States in dealing with the subject.

If this action shall prove to be the result of Minister Lemieux's recent visit to Japan, and the programme outlined has been accepted by Japan, it will also indicate that Japan has little real official grievance against the United States for steps thus far taken to end the race troubles on the Pacific Coast.

Furthermore, the action of the Canadians will have the effect of cutting down the large number of Japanese who are now coming into the United States from that quarter.

OFFICERS ARE GUESTS AT GRAND BALL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

RIO DE JANEIRO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A grand ball was given in the Crystal Palace at Petropolis tonight under the auspices of the Diario Club of Rio de Janeiro.

At least 100 officers from the various American vessels attended. All the prominent members of society in Rio de Janeiro and the members of the legations and their families, as well as prominent people of Petropolis, were present. The ballroom presented a brilliant scene, with the costumes of women and the brilliant uniforms of naval officers and foreign diplomats.

The collier Arethusa arrived in the harbor this morning. The fleet has been coaling all day, and the work has been completed on most of the vessels. Many visitors have been entertained on the various ships.

There was a boat race in the harbor today, in which a crew from the Minnesota beat one from the Georgia.

Monday will be the feast of [illegible] the patron saint of Rio de Janeiro. The bands of various ships will play in the parks in honor of the occasion, and there will be baseball matches between teams from the various ships, at Nicheroy. On Sunday numerous private dinners and receptions will be given in honor of the visitors.

Rear-Admiral Evans took occasion today to express appreciation of the magnificent reception accorded the fleet by the Brazilian government and people.

A severe attack of rheumatism, from which he suffered soon after leaving Port of Spain, and which has persistently troubled him ever since, has prevented his enjoyment of the many receptions and entertainments organized in honor of the visitors, but has in no wise lessened his appreciation of the efforts of the nation to make the sojourn here a pleasant and a memorable one.

The Admiral is now anxious to press on to his destination. Punta Arenas, on the east coast of the Brunswick peninsula, the most southerly town of any importance in the world, will be the next stop.

Admiral Evans said today that he did not anticipate any difficulty in the passage of the Straits of Magellan by the fleet in regular column formation. The so-called dangers of the Straits he does not consider serious, and he believes that the fleet of battleships under his command, with the accompanying flotilla of torpedo boats, will make the tortuous trip without a jar.

TO SPEED BULLETS.

TONS OF POWDER ARE ORDERED.

ALL RECORDS FOR ONE YEAR ARE EXCEEDED.

Instructions Are Issued for Government Plant Near Dover, Del., to Work at Its Full Capacity—Twelve Million Rounds Sent to the Philippines and Hawaii.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The War Department has ordered that the government powder plant near Dover, Del., shall within ten days begin to manufacture powder at the full capacity of the works.

The capacity of this plant is 1000 pounds a day. The War Department, therefore, expects an annual supply from that source of 300,000 pounds. In addition to this supply, the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department has advised the purchasing of 3,200,000 pounds of smokeless powder. In round numbers the government, on the War Department side, finds that the annual amount to be recommended should be 3,500,000 pounds.

Experts say that this exceeds all records, even the extraordinary purchases for the Spanish-American War, for one year.

The navy is said to be plentifully supplied with powder. The activity of the government and its lavish expenditure for powder, it is carefully explained by officials, is not due to any immediate or even remote causes of alarm.

AMMUNITION FOR ISLANDS.

They declare that the enormous amount is simply called for by the ever-increasing number of the guns, great and small, which are used by the army. The tremendous figures obtained today, however, throw a vivid sidelight on the WOMAN SCORNED.

FORSAKEN WIFE NOW FURIOUS.

AFTER MUTELY SUFFERING SHE BECOMES SCORNFUL.

Mrs. Jere Knode Cooke, Whose Ministerial Husband Eloped With Floretta Whaley, Says She Played With All Her Strength for His Forgiveness Until He Denounced Her.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Jere Knode Cooke, wife of the fugitive minister who eloped with Floretta Whaley, turned when her husband said that he had married the wrong woman, and his life had been a hell, and the woman scorned proved that the place her husband mentioned had no fury like that of the scorned in petticoats.

She not only broke the long silence that held her mute while her husband was away—not only mute but forgiving—but she declared that she would institute suit for divorce just as soon as she could get the proof from San Francisco she required to make the suit stick. She said:

"I was like a woman torn apart—robbed of half of her own being. My husband had been a very part of myself. Next to God he held my deepest trust and confidence. Could I make public property of this sacred story of unbroken love extending over nine years of married life?

"There was only one thing for me to do—this was to shield my sinning husband as much as possible, to add nothing to the hue and cry against him, and to pray with all my soul's strength for his forgiveness and rescue.

"But the hard truth is now clear. He fled with this girl simply because their sins could no longer be concealed. This revelation was desperately hard for me to bear, but the harder blow fell from my husband's lips.

"Need I repeat his interview from San Francisco? All the world has read it, doubtless, and men and women everywhere are wondering what manner of woman I am.

"It was an interview that only a coward could utter. With clear, malicious purpose, so I am forced to believe, he struck, with contemptible innuendo, at a wife who had crucified her heart to shield him."

FROM DEEP GRAVE.

MINERS ARE RESCUED FROM LIVING TOMB.

Workmen Strike Timbered Ground and Rush Excavation to Reach Comrades Buried Thousand Feet Below Surface—Survivors' Story.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ELY (Nev.) Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Today marked the forty-sixth and last day of the imprisonment of the three miners in the Alpha shaft of the Giroux mine.

Until today noon it has not been thought the men would be rescued before February 1, but at noon the rescuers encountered some interlaced timbers just below a depth of six hundred feet. When they had made an opening through the obstruction, a large cavity was discovered. Cautiously investigating and descending the ladder for more than a hundred feet, no wreckage was found.

The ladder was torn away. Another was built and not until a depth of 970 feet was reached was dirt again found. This left but thirty feet between the imprisoned men and the rescuers.

The tension was great. The walls of the shaft were found intact. The cage was lowered and the dirt hastily removed. The ground was so soft that when a few feet of it was taken out the balance sank beneath the workers and they tumbled into the mouth of the drift carrying the rescuers with it.

Affectionate greetings were exchanged between the liberated and the rescuers. In a short time the men were taken into the cage and hoisted to the surface.

The tension wrought by the expected early rescue had taken hundreds of people from the city to be present at the time of the rescue. When the three men stepped from the cage there were most affecting scenes as relatives and friends again met.

BIG DEMONSTRATION.

The news was soon flashed into the city, and the biggest and heartiest demonstration the city of Ely may ever expect to boast in the way of a welcome was started. Seemingly every bell and whistle in the city had been waiting to be the first to tell the good news.

The men were taken from the shaft at 9 o'clock. The bodies of Turner and Constanti are still at the bottom of the shaft, under a hundred feet of dirt. Preparation for recovering them are already being made.

The three heroes are to be banqueted with rescuers as well. Heroism has marked every stroke of pick and lift of shovel. Time after time has death threatened to bury the workers under a fresh cave. But as the trembling walls settled quietly, with no more than an angry threatening, after a hurried withdrawal from the shaft, these men returned unflinching to the work.

Foreman John Gallagher is also one of the most-talked-of men in town. To his cool judgment, commanding presence and practical ideas are the liberated men indebted for their freedom. The men say that but for the first three or four nights they felt no actual inconvenience during imprisonment. Those nights they could not sleep, and the dust filling the drift had not settled.

On December 7, 8 and 9, they made cots, and later bed clothing was furnished in strips by friends on the surface and which they sewed together themselves. It felt "mighty" good then to crawl into a warm bed, they said.

A continual feast of good things was sent down. On Christmas they had roast chicken, ice cleam, plum pudding from England, sent by McDonald's sweetheart, seasoned with love for Mac in particular, but this was no hindrance to Bailey and Brown. They fully appreciated the great danger faced by their rescuers.

MINERS' OWN STORY.

Late last night the rescue party struck timbered ground and found that a passage way extended down a great way toward the entombed men. Mine Foreman McFate undertook to see how far the passage way extended. He succeeded in getting down 970 feet, where he encountered solid ground. This was only thirty feet from where the men were prisoners and the work of cutting through to the imprisoned men was pushed with much energy.

Following is the story of the experiences of the three men, written by A. D. Bailey and sent to the surface, through the six-inch pipe:

"On December 4, 1907, at 7 o'clock, A. D. Bailey, P. J. Brown, C. W. Turner, Fred McDonald, and Hercules Constanti, reported at the Alpha shaft, as was their custom, and went down to work, Bailey as pump man, McDonald and Constanti as machine helpers and Brown and Turner as machine men with Brown as shaft boss.

"All went well until 9:30 o'clock, when the cave-in took place with Bailey at the 1000-foot level, and the balance of the men in the bottom of the shaft.

TELEPHONES WARNING.

"I got out of the tank and was running for the telephone, when McDonald just fell into my arms and he called, 'Bailey, Bailey!' but realizing the danger we were in, I stood McDonald against the wall pump station and went to the telephone and called up the engineer at the surface and told him to shut off the steam. When I got through phoning I stepped out of the booth and discovered McDonald and Brown in the pump station, but there was so much dust on them and the dust was so thick at the station

GRAFT PROSECUTION.

LANGDON DECIDES TO PROSECUTE ABE RUEF.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Dist.-Atty. Langdon announced late tonight that the negotiations between his office and Abraham Ruef were at an end that Ruef had broken the agreement, made last May, granting him complete immunity, and that as a result of Ruef's failure to live up to his promise, he would be placed on trial Monday morning in Judge Lawlor's court.

With this sensational statement, the District Attorney gave out the complete text of a remarkable agreement made by himself, Heney and Langdon.

This immunity contract was sweeping in its assurances to the ex-boss. It promised him liberty in every way that legal language could describe it. When his cases should be brought to trial, the District Attorney would ask that they be dismissed. Should he be sentenced, an appeal would be made to the Governor for a pardon. Every one of the 122 indictments, except the joint indictment with Schmitz on the French restaurant extortion case, would be quashed. Ruef was assured of practically complete immunity.

In return for this tremendous and historic piece of clemency, Ruef promised on his part to testify truthfully, without reservation, to everything which he knew about the so-called "graft" cases.

Dist.-Atty. Langdon stated tonight that the conferences with Ruef during the week have concerned themselves with the fulfillment of this immunity contract and with the change in the status of the case brought about through the refusal of the trial judge to join in granting Ruef immunity. Landon stated that, while the terms of the contract had been faithfully observed by him, they had been broken by Ruef. Hence the wheels of justice would be started over the discredited ex-boss.

VOTERS TO CHOOSE.

TO POLL THE STATE

Unofficial Primaries to Be Held.

Choice of the Republicans for President Will Thus Be Learned.

State Committee Confident Sentiment Is Two to One for Taft.

Convention Will Be Held at Sacramento on May Fourteenth.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 18.—The Republican State Central Committee, which met at the St. Francis Hotel, this afternoon, with seventy-five out of 110 members present, selected Sacramento as the place for the next Republican State Convention for the election of delegates to the national convention, adopted the call for and fixed the date of the convention for May 14, and unanimously adopted a resolution offered by Gen. George Stone, chairman, calling for an unofficial primary to be held throughout the State on May 2 for the purpose of giving the voters an opportunity to express by ballot their choice for candidate for President at the coming election.

County committees of the several counties are directed by the State Central Committee to issue calls for this unofficial primary in their respective districts, and the formation of clubs in aid and support of this plan is strongly urged so as to obtain as full an expression of the Republicans of the State as to their preference for President as possible.

The final result by counties is to be transmitted and certified by the chairman and secretary of the State committee to the chairman of the State convention with the recommendation that the delegates elected by the State convention shall be instructed to support the candidate who shall receive the highest number of votes in the State.

The resolution was adopted without debate and headed off a resolution indorsing Secretary of War Taft as California's choice for President, which Col. E. A. Forbes of Sacramento had prepared and intended to introduce. The latter, however, expressed no dissatisfaction with Gen. Stone's resolutions, declaring he was confident the Republicans of California were overwhelmingly in favor of Taft as the Republican nominee for President.

Gen. Stone, chairman of the Central Committee, stated to the Associated Press that he believed the sentiment in the State was 2 to 1 for Taft.

SULPHURED FRUIT.

The committee also adopted the following resolution on the question of sulphuring dried fruits, introduced by Judge J. C. Daly of Ventura, who declared "that while I am a great admirer of President Roosevelt, that admiration does not extend to the administration of all departments." He attacked Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief chemist of the Agricultural Department, whom he called an "extremist and a faddist."

"Resolved, by the Republican State Central Commitee of California, that we request our representatives in Congress to at once investigate the actions and rulings of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Agricultural Department, and to curb any assumed authority of such Bureau of Chemistry prejudicial to the dried-fruit industry of California, and that they cause the abrogation of rule No. 76, if possible, so far as it relates to fruits dried by sulphur fumes, until the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of that product is determined by positive and competent evidence."

There was little or no contest between cities for the convention. Sacramento received 65 votes, Oakland 5, and Santa Cruz 5.

The convention will consist of 629 delegates.

Less than two hours was occupied by the committee in completing its work, everything having been prepared by Gen. Stone, Secretary E. F. Woodward and Assistant Secretary J. Steppacher. One delegate for each 200 votes, or major fraction, cast for Gov. Gillett is the apportionment fixed by the call, and the convention will consist of 629 delegates. The representation of San Francisco was cut down from 159 delegates, based upon the vote for President Roosevelt, to sixty-seven.

PARTY TEST.

The following was adopted as the party test, in accordance with the provisions of the law passed at the last Legislature, which will be applicable at the primary election on May 5, for the election of delegates to the State convention:

"I do solemnly pledge myself to vote for and support the nominees of the Republican party at the general election to be held in the State of California on Tuesday, November 3, 1908."

Sacramento was placed in nomination for the convention by former Lieut.-Gov. Alden Anderson, and but little opposition was offered by other cities. Judge J. C. Daly of Ventura nominated Santa Cruz, and Mayor Frank Mott of Oakland declared that both Sacramento and Santa Cruz had been favored often enough by the Republican party, and asked that the FINANCIAL.

EASY MONEY IS MAIN FACTOR.

Banks Make Loans Freely at Normal Rates.

Foreign Trade Another Favorable Condition.

Public Is Now Nibbling for First-Class Bonds.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Easy money has been the most influential factor in Wall street this week.

The banks have been receiving such quantities of out-of-town cash and the release of hoarding money so long that a heavy increase has been shown in reserve to take the place of the $54,000,000 deficit six weeks ago.

The result has been that the outstanding loan certificates will soon disappear, and the banks are already lending money freely at normal rates. With money offered at 3½ per cent., and good stocks selling on a basis yielding between 5 and 7 per cent., those who have good stocks to sell are naturally pleased at the turn of events. The real truth, however, is that the bankers have the stocks, and so far the public has refused to buy.

Another favorable factor in the general situation is shown in the foreign trade statistics for December and the calendar year, just published. The excess of exports over imports for December aggregated $105,000,000, thus giving us a trade balance for that month. During December, $44,000,000 foreign gold was received, making $105,000,000 for two months, by far the largest on record.

After two months of heart-breaking inactivity, bankers are elated over the prospects of a good bond market. On all sides the same story is told—"the public is nibbling for first-class bonds." That there is plenty of work ahead of the bond houses as soon as the artificial easiness of money is removed, is evident.

SITUATION ABROAD SHOWS IMPROVEMENT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Bank of England rate will not be lowered from the 5 per cent. fixed by the Thursday reduction, unless such action is impelled by forces outside of our own immediate market, such as a return movement of gold from America or a large increase of the French bank rate.

Monday's lowering of the Berlin bank rate, and the Imperial bank's strong statement prove that the German situation is better, for the moment, at any rate, but there are indications not favorably regarded here that German bankers are seeking further elasticity of the currency rather than endeavoring to check an overexpanded commercial activity.

That the American financial position is greatly improved, in the sense that the monetary stringency is over, Europe now realizes. Nevertheless, it is believed that commercial depression is inevitable and that failures are yet to be forced.

CURRENCY BILL.

BANKERS DRAFT NEW MEASURE.

COMMISSION OF ASSOCIATION COMPLETES ITS WORK.

Bill Embodies Practically All of the Provisions of the Old Fowler Bill of Last Year and Some of the Points of the Aldrich Bill—Provides for Elasticity of Currency.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Ten hours of painstaking deliberation on the part of the currency commission of the American Bankers' Association today resulted in a tentative draft of a new currency bill, which, it is expected, will furnish such elasticity in the medium of exchange as to make financial flurries practically impossible.

The bill, which was looked upon with favor by practically every member of the commission, which gathered in the directors' rooms of the Commercial National Bank during the day, embodies practically all of the provisions of the old Fowler bill of last year and some of the points of the new Aldrich bill. The tentative draft of the new currency bill contains the following provisions:

That any national bank may take out "national bank guaranteed notes" up to 40 per cent. of the amount of its bank notes secured by government bonds, but in no case to exceed 25 per cent. of its capital.

Upon the total amount of these notes the bank must pay a tax of 1½ per cent. semi-annually. In addition to this 40 per cent. of the amount of its bank notes the bank may further issue notes up to an additional 12½ per cent. of its capital, but upon these notes the bank must pay 2½ per cent. semi-annually, a rate which is practically prohibitive, made so in order to prevent too great circulation of the credit notes.

A cash reserve of 25 per cent. of the amount of notes taken out must be held in banks in reserve cities, and a reserve of 15 per cent. in cash must be held by institutions in other cities.

The taxes must be paid in gold coin, and will be a guarantee fund to redeem notes of failed banks.

"Redemption agencies" will be established in numerous cities for the sake of convenience. This will be done in order to make redemption as easy as possible.

MARK TWAIN ON FINANCES.

Declares It Costs More to Keep Permanent Receiver Than It Does to Keep Harem.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The plan for the rehabilitation of the Knickerbocker Trust Company having received the support of depositors representing more than 85 per cent. of the total deposits, Justice Clark of the Supreme Court of Richmond county today readily granted an extension of two weeks, which the Depositors' Committee requested that they might complete their work on obtaining consents.

Herbert L. Satterlee, counsel for the Depositors' Committee, announced that up till midnight last night assents had been received representing more than $34,000,000 out of $41,000,000 deposits. He added that a large number of assents had arrived in this morning's mail too late to be tabulated. The receivers, who have hitherto opposed the reorganization at every step, did not oppose the two weeks' extension asked for today.

One letter assenting to the Satterlee plan was from Mark Twain, in which he said, in part:

"It costs more to keep a permanent receiver than it does to keep a harem. Anybody who has had experience in these matters will indorse this statement."

IMMENSE SUM.

ISSUED SCRIP BY THE BUSHEL.

NEW YORK BANKS DURING PANIC CONSERVED CASH.

President of Clearinghouse Association Says That Total of $97,000,000 in Certificates Were Issued, but That by Far the Greater Portion Have Been Retired.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—The loan certificates issued by the New York Clearinghouse during the recent financial stringency, reached a total of $97,000,000, according to a statement prepared by President Alexander Gilbert of the Clearinghouse Association.

Of this amount, however, only $74,000,000 in certificates was put into actual use. The movement to retire these certificates began immediately after the crisis of the financial situation was passed and it has progressed rapidly since. By far the greater proportion of the certificates, President Gilbert says, have now been retired.

This is the first public statement that has been made of the extent to which the clearinghouse resorted to certificates to prevent the banks being drained of their cash and to prevent the bank embarrassments which might have resulted from the continued requirement of cash payments at the clearinghouse when the recent panic was at its height.

In 1893, when the clearinghouse issued loan certificates, the amount taken out was $41,690,000, or more than $32,000,000 under the amount of the issue of 1907.

Mr. Gilbert makes the point, however, that so large has been the increase in bank deposits that whereas in 1893 the loan certificates amounted to about 10 per cent of the deposits, the certificates in 1907 amounted to less than 5 per cent. of the total deposits.

The great gains in cash made by the banks since the end of December is shown by the fact that since the seven weeks to January 11, the clearinghouse banks were able to convert a deficit of more than $54,000,000 into a surplus of over $6,000,000 and at the same time retire the certificates.

The issuance of these certificates, Mr. Gilbert says, furnishes the best object lesson of an emergency currency, one that is perfectly secure and one which can be put into effect without any complicated bank machinery. On this point, Mr. Gilbert says:

"All that is needed to adapt such a system to our requirements is developments, and I feel confident that if the subject could be referred to the clearinghouse committees of the three central reserve cities an emergency currency plan could be evolved that would be in harmony with our national banking system and be less subject to criticism and opposition than any other system which has yet been proposed."

THAW'S MOTHER PAYS HIM VISIT.

DISREGARDS ADVICE OF PHYSICIANS AND LAWYERS.

Though Just Arisen from Sick Bed She Insists on Going to the Tombs Where She Talks to Prisoner an Hour Through Bars—Is Visited by Her Daughter-in-Law.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Over the protests of her physicians and her son's lawyers, Mrs. William Thaw, who yesterday testified in the trial of Harry Thaw, left a sick bed at the Hotel Lorraine today and drove to the Tombs to pay to "Murderers' Row" the first visit she has made in many months.

A trained nurse accompanied her. Despite her weakness, the mother spent nearly an hour talking to Harry Thaw through the bars of his cell.

Evelyn Thaw went from her Park avenue house last night to the Hotel Lorraine to see her mother-in-law. The former chorus girl spent more than an hour with Mrs. William Thaw.

Stopping at the Tombs just long enough to send in a note, Evelyn Thaw drove directly to Lawyer Martin W. Littleton's office to go over with him the testimony which she is to give on Monday. There she was greeted by her old chum, May McKenzie, and Mrs. William Thaw. All three women later visited Dan O'Reilly's office.

When Thaw's personal counsel, A. Russell Peabody, arrived at the Tombs, he said that, on behalf of his client's mother, he would apply to Commissioner Coggey for a special pass, admitting Mrs. William Thaw to the Tombs tomorrow and on all succeeding Sundays, until the trial closes.

Mr. Peabody announced that Harry Thaw's former teacher, Miss Belle Morehouse Lawrence, had arrived from California. She will take the stand Monday morning to exhibit the diary which she kept at the time Thaw, then a boy of 10, was one of her pupils, and to tell of his freakish conduct at that age.

Miss Lawrence will be followed by Mrs. William Thaw, who is anxious to complete her evidence by describing the infancy and childhood of Stanford White's slayer.

Tuesday Evelyn Nesbit Thaw probably will go back to the witness chair, unless it should be arranged to hold the main details of her testimony in reserve until three physicians have sworn to Thaw's strange mental and physical characteristics at various stages in his early manhood.

Psychologist Gathers Data in Connection With Perusal of the Daily Newspapers.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—Prof. Walter D. Scott, director of psychological laboratory in Northwestern University, is collecting data on the psychology of journalistic appeal. To accomplish this end he has sent out hundreds of circulars asking as many persons:

"What dailies do you read and the reasons for your choice?"

Other questions in the circular are about the different departments of the newspapers that appeal to each individual, the amount of time given to the reading of the papers daily, and the inducement to subscribe for one journal instead of others.

TO POLL THE STATE.

convention meet in Oakland, insisting that it was but fair to Alameda county, which several times had saved the day for the Republican party.

Walter Parker of Los Angeles opposed Oakland, declaring that "experience had proved that when conventions were held in or near large cities, delegates went sightseeing and the work of the convention was impeded by empty seats." He favored Sacramento.

When the vote was taken, Sacramento received 65; Oakland, 5, and Santa Cruz, 5. The selection of Sacramento was then made unanimous.

STONE'S RESOLUTION.

The resolution by Gen. Stone is as follows:

"The Republican party of this State should be united in its support of the candidate to be named in the next national convention, and to bring about such harmony this committee believes that the principles and policies of the present national administration, as manifested by the official acts of its Executive, and the legislation enacted by the Congress of the United States, should be indorsed and adopted as the basis of the platform upon which the party will make its appeal to the people of the United States for support in the campaign.

"At the last convention of the Republican party, held at the city of Santa Cruz, it was by the platform there adopted resolved that the Republican party was committed to the support of such constitutional amendments and legislative enactments as would provide for a direct primary law in the matter of the selection of candidates for State, county and municipal offices.

"The Republican party, in faithful allegiance to such declaration of its platform, through Senators and Assemblymen, chosen because of their affiliation with it, caused a resolution to be passed, submitting such constitutional amendment to the vote of the people of the State at the next general election.

UNOFFICIAL PRIMARIES.

"In pursuance of such policy, and in order that the Republican voters throughout the State may be allowed to express their choice for President of the United States, this committee directs that the Republican County Committees of the several counties of the State issue a call for unofficial primaries, for the purpose of permitting and encouraging Republican electors of their counties and Assembly districts to express by ballot their choice for candidate for President of the United States, at the coming election, and such primary meetings shall be held on Saturday, May 2, 1908.

"Polls for the purposes expressed in these resolutions shall be opened at 12 o'clock, noon, and remain open until 6 o'clock p.m. of said date. A list of the voters must be kept at each polling place by some person or persons designated by local members of the several county committees, and all qualified electors, must subscribe to the party test, this day adopted in the call issued by the Republican State Central Committee for the State Convention.

"The State Committee strongly urges that clubs be organized throughout the counties and Assembly districts in aid and support of this plan, so as to obtain as full an expression of the Republicans of the State as to their preference for President as possible, and the officers and members of such clubs are expected to render the county committees all assistance in carrying out these instructions.

"All persons in charge of polling places must tabulate the votes immediately after the polls close, and forward the same to the secretary of the County Committee.

"The county committees shall consolidate the vote of their county for each person voted for, and forward the result to the secretary of the Republican State Committee, San Francisco, before Monday, the 11th day of May, 1908.

"The final result by counties shall be transmitted and certified by the chairman and secretary of the State Committee to the chairman of the State convention, convened to elect delegates to the Republican National Convention, with the recommendation of this committee that the delegates elected by that convention shall be instructed to support the candidate for President who has received the highest number of ballots as above stated."

DREAMS IN DRESSES.

LUCILE, LIMITED, COMES TO TOWN.

LADY DUFF-GORDON TALKS OF AMERICAN TRIP.

Woman Who Astonished English Society by Opening Dressmaking Shop in Hanover Square, Expects to Acquire New Ideas for Creating "The Psychological Gown-Drama."

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Lady Duff-Gordon, who, with her sister, Eleanor Glyn, is visiting New York, said today regarding the object of her trip to America:

"I am here to visit my friends, to see the country, to do anything but think about my life work, the creation of the psychological gown-drama for women. But really, secretly, I know I am in America to feel. Out of this country, rich in crude, natural emotion, unfrozen by British reserve, a current of new sensations is running in my veins to be poured out into a new flood of creation—the American woman gown."

Lady Duff-Gordon astonished English society when she incorporated her talent for creating the "emotional" gown under the firm name of "Lucille, Limited," and opened a shop in Hanover Square. Out of that shop princesses of the blood have walked, clothed with an idea, and that idea is Lady Duff-Gordon's; for she says:

"It used to be the sole duty of music to be pretty; flowing in melody and pleasant in harmony, no discords, no departures from the accepted rules of harmony. For 'mad scene' or a wedding party, the composer wrote 'um-pa, um-pa, tinkle, tinkle, tinkle, tinkle,' and every one was pleased. But Wagner wrought soul dramas, psychological ideas, into music. Harmonies, color combinations, were woven into fabric, made into a whole that expressed an idea, shading into gleams of passionate suggestion no one had ever dreamed mere notes could express before.

"I am not studying them. They come to me through the nerves of sensation, and when I return to London I will reproduce the sensation in gowns for the American women. They will be my drama, each gown a 'motif.'"

CUPID'S ERROR.

REFUSES TO GRANT DIVORCE.

MRS. LLOYD OSBOURNE SEPARATED FROM HUSBAND.

Author Anxious to Wed Mrs. Frank Norris, Is Report, but Better Half Stands in Way, Despite Fact He Has not Supported Her Since She Left Him in Italy.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Lloyd Osbourne, the novelist, and step-son of Robert Louis Stevenson, will not be in a position to marry Mrs. Frank Norris or any one else, as his present wife, who is now living in San Francisco, has no intention of granting him a divorce, although he has failed to provide her with support.

There has been trouble in the house of Osbourne for a long time, and the fact that the writer is in constant attendance upon his mother has led to the presumption that the widow of the famous Scotchman has had much to do with the separation in the Osbourne family.

Mrs. Osbourne has the two children and came back from Italy several months ago to take possession of the house on Russian Hill, where she has remained. With her return to America news of the division in the family become known, and ever since that time it has been rumored that Osbourne hoped to secure a divorce and marry again, Mrs. Frank Norris's name being repeatedly mentioned.

Of late the impression has become confirmed that Mrs. Osbourne was about to grant her husband's wishes and give him a divorce, but, having two young boys to raise and seeing no reason why she should be cast off in this manner, she has steadfastly refused to grant the divorce and still refuses.

It is understood that Mrs. Stevenson wishes her son to secure the divorce and ignores the existence of his wife, not having visited or called upon her daughter-in-law here. Before her recent visit abroad Mrs. Osbourne lived in one part of the Stevenson house and her mother-in-law in another, but there was no communication between the two households.

KILLS ADOPTED SON.

Groundless Jealousy Leads Woman to Commit Murder and to Attempt Suicide.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Prompted by insane jealousy, Mrs. Mamie Norris this morning, at Ellensburg, shot and killed her adopted son, Thomas Murray, as he lay sleeping in bed at the family residence. She then attempted to end her own life by eating rat poison. The young man died after lingering two hours.

The direct cause of the crime was jealousy over the young man, who, she thought, was paying too much attention to young women.

Last evening, Murray, with a boy friend, ate supper in a downtown restaurant, and on returning home was upbraided by Mrs. Norris, who thought he had been with a girl friend. To pacify the woman he took her to a skating rink. He skated only with boy friends. Later, when Mrs. Norris thought he was at supper with a girl, she visited a hardware store and purchased a revolver, which was found this morning with the price tag on it.

Murray was 21 years old, and a student in the Ellensburg High School. He was an athlete, holding the interscholastic record in several running events.

They are here to investigate the necessity of a fifteen-foot channel for Stockton to the seaboard. They attended a public meeting, and were presented a mass of facts and figures in support of the appeal for government aid. This afternoon they left on the steamer T. C. Walker with a large party of guests for a trip down the river. They go to Sacramento tomorrow.

VETERAN EXONERATED.

WAS ACCUSED OF ARSON.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NAPA, Jan. 18.—It took a jury in the Superior Court only a few minutes today to find Michael Doherty, a 73-year-old veteran, not guilty of arson. Doherty was accused of burning a barn belonging to Edward F. Hogan, owner of the Napa Operahouse, on his ranch near Napa Soda Springs, November 3. He had been discharged by Hogan that day and he took two shots at his former employer with a rifle a few hours before the fire started.

All four men came here from Duluth, and enlisted in the Marine Corps. Morgan, Doubre and Carver deserted recently.

Get A Good Home At or Near Modesto Stanislaus County Central California
We're all glad that the flurry in the money market is over, although it had some good effect.
THRIFTY, ECONOMICAL AND PROVIDENTIAL MONEY SAVERS ARE BUYING LAND.
Have you a family? If so you owe it to them to "get a home."
When you grow old you will be glad you did.
Young men before they marry should purchase a home and be prepared for the happy day. A great question with many is where shall I go? The answer is to the Modesto irrigation district, where you get the most land and water for your money. Modesto is excellently located, has a fine climate, fertile soil, abundant irrigation water, good railroad facilities and above all is close to the great markets.
You can raise alfalfa, cows, chickens, hogs, peaches, apples, prunes, apricots, berries, nuts, figs, olives, oranges, lemons, and about everything else but pineapples, bananas and cocoanuts, and they haven't been tried yet at Modesto.
Land prices are moderate and terms most reasonable. Take advantage of the special railroad fares and investigate Modesto, but before starting, hear the free illustrated lectures at Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce at 2 P. FINANCIAL.

EASY MONEY IS MAIN FACTOR.

Banks Make Loans Freely at Normal Rates.

Foreign Trade Another Favorable Condition.

Public Is Now Nibbling for First-Class Bonds.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Easy money has been the most influential factor in Wall street this week.

The banks have been receiving such quantities of out-of-town cash and the release of hoarding money so long that a heavy increase has been shown in reserve to take the place of the $54,000,000 deficit six weeks ago.

The result has been that the outstanding loan certificates will soon disappear, and the banks are already lending money freely at normal rates. With money offered at 3½ per cent., and good stocks selling on a basis yielding between 5 and 7 per cent., those who have good stocks to sell are naturally pleased at the turn of events. The real truth, however, is that the bankers have the stocks, and so far the public has refused to buy.

Another favorable factor in the general situation is shown in the foreign trade statistics for December and the calendar year, just published. The excess of exports over imports for December aggregated $166,000,000, thus giving us a trade balance for that month. During December, $44,000,000 foreign gold was received, making $100,000,000 for two months, by far the largest on record.

After two months of heart-breaking inactivity, bankers are elated over the prospects of a good bond market. On all sides the same story is told—"the public is nibbling for first-class bonds." That there is plenty of work ahead of the bond houses as soon as the artificial easiness of money is removed, is evident.

SITUATION ABROAD SHOWS IMPROVEMENT.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Bank of England rate will not be lowered from the 5 per cent. fixed by the Thursday reduction, unless such action is impelled by forces outside of our own immediate market, such as a return movement of gold from America or a large increase of the French bank rate.

Monday's lowering of the Berlin bank rate, and the Imperial bank's strong statement prove that the German situation is better, for the moment, at any rate, but there are indications not favorably regarded here that German bankers are seeking further elasticity of the currency rather than endeavoring to check an overexpanded commercial activity.

That the American financial position is greatly improved, in the sense that the monetary stringency is over, Europe now realizes. Nevertheless, it is believed that commercial depression is inevitable and that failures are yet to be forced.

CURRENCY BILL.

BANKERS DRAFT NEW MEASURE.

COMMISSION OF ASSOCIATION COMPLETES ITS WORK.

Bill Embodies Practically All of the Provisions of the Old Fowler Bill of Last Year and Some of the Points of the Aldrich Bill—Provides for Elasticity of Currency.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Ten hours of painstaking deliberation on the part of the currency commission of the American Bankers' Association today resulted in a tentative draft of a new currency bill, which, it is expected, will furnish such elasticity in the medium of exchange as to make financial flurries practically impossible.

The bill, which was looked upon with favor by practically every member of the commission, which gathered in the directors' rooms of the Commercial National Bank during the day, embodies practically all of the provisions of the old Fowler bill of last year and some of the points of the new Aldrich bill. The tentative draft of the new currency bill contains the following provisions:

That any national bank may take out "national bank guaranteed notes" up to 40 per cent. of the amount of its bank notes secured by government bonds, but in no case to exceed 25 per cent. of its capital.

Upon the total amount of these notes the bank must pay a tax of 1½ per cent. semi-annually. In addition to this 40 per cent. of the amount of its bank notes the bank may further issue notes up to an additional 12½ per cent. of its capital, but upon these notes the bank must pay 2½ per cent. semi-annually, a rate which is practically prohibitive, made so in order to prevent too great circulation of the credit notes.

A cash reserve of 25 per cent. of the amount of notes taken out must be held in banks in reserve cities, and a reserve of 15 per cent. in cash must be held by institutions in other cities.

The taxes must be paid in gold coin, and will be a guarantee fund to redeem notes of failed banks.

"Redemption agencies" will be established in numerous cities for the sake of convenience. This will be done in order to make redemption as easy as possible.

MARK TWAIN ON FINANCES.

Declares It Costs More to Keep Permanent Receiver Than It Does to Keep Harem.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

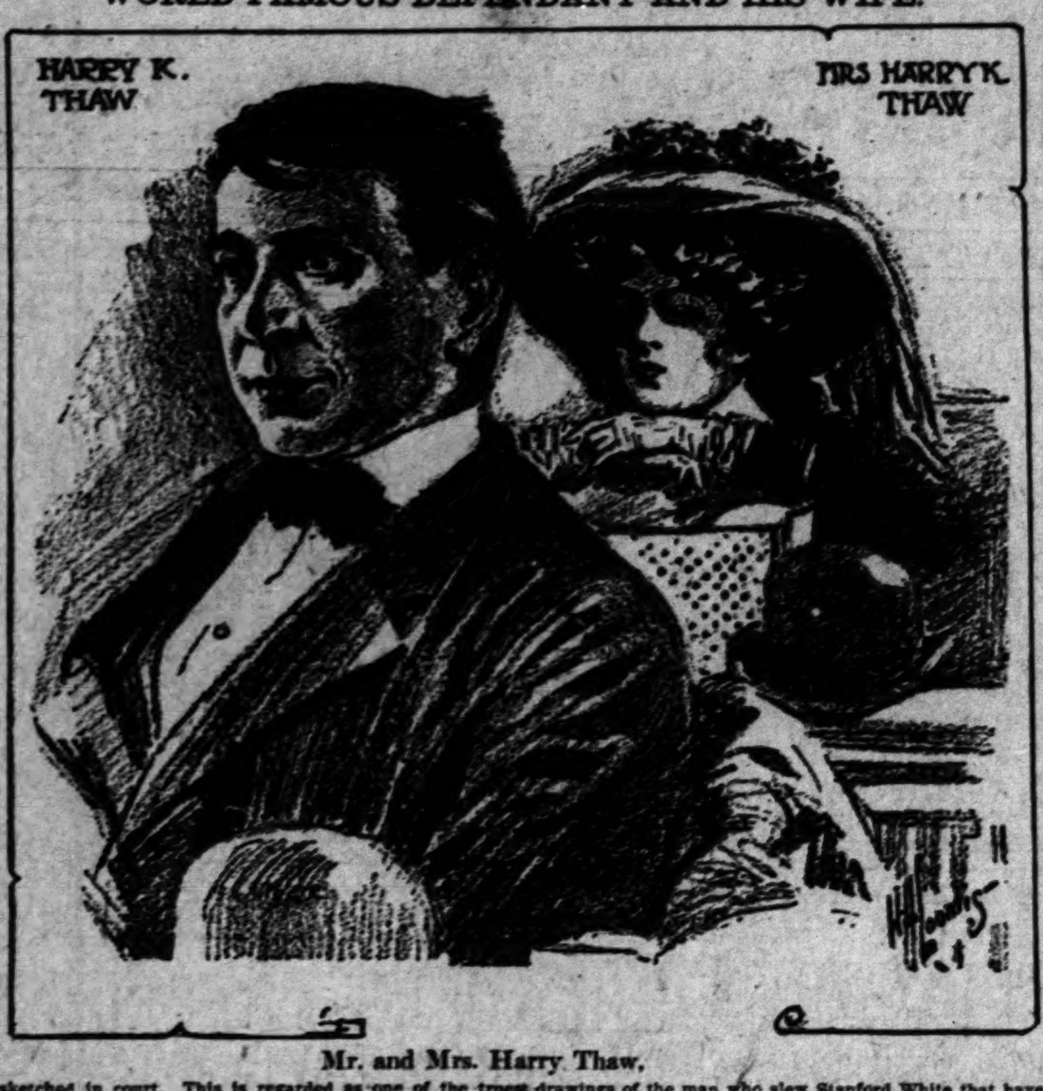
NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The plan for the rehabilitation of the Knickerbocker Trust Company having received the support of depositors representing more than 85 per cent. of the total deposits, Justice Clark of the Supreme Court of Richmond county today readily granted an extension of two weeks, which the Depositors' Committee requested that they might complete their work on obtaining consents.

Herbert L. Satterlee, counsel for the Depositors' Committee, announced that up till midnight last night assents had been received representing more than $34,000,000 out of $41,000,000 deposits. He added that a large number of assents had arrived in this morning's mail too late to be tabulated. The receivers, who have hitherto opposed the reorganization at every step, did not oppose the two weeks' extension asked for today.

One letter assenting to the Satterlee plan was from Mark Twain, in which he said, in part:

"It costs more to keep a permanent receiver than it does to keep a harem. Anybody who has had experience in these matters will indorse this statement."

WORLD-FAMOUS DEFENDANT AND HIS WIFE.



Mr. and Mrs. Harry Thaw, sketched in court. This is regarded as one of the truest drawings of the man who slew Stanford White that have been made. It shows the prisoner as he appears today, without idealization or faking. The peculiar expression of the eyes, the lines of the drawn face, are strikingly shown.

IMMENSE SUM.

ISSUED SCRIP BY THE BUSHEL.

NEW YORK BANKS DURING PANIC CONSERVED CASH.

President of Clearinghouse Association Says That Total of $97,000,000 in Certificates Were Issued, but That by Far the Greater Portion Have Been Retired.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—The loan certificates issued by the New York Clearinghouse during the recent financial stringency, reached a total of $97,000,000, according to a statement prepared by President Alexander Gilbert of the Clearinghouse Association.

Of this amount, however, only $74,000,000 in certificates was put into actual use. The movement to retire these certificates began immediately after the crisis of the financial situation was passed and it has progressed rapidly since. By far the greater proportion of the certificates, President Gilbert says, have now been retired.

This is the first public statement that has been made of the extent to which the clearinghouse resorted to certificates to prevent the banks being drained of their cash and to prevent the bank embarrassments which might have resulted from the continued requirement of cash payments at the clearinghouse when the recent panic was at its height.

In 1893, when the clearinghouse issued loan certificates, the amount taken out was $41,490,000, or more than $22,000,000 under the amount of the issue of 1907.

Mr. Gilbert makes the point, however, that so large has been the increase in bank deposits that whereas in 1893 the loan certificates amounted to about 10 per cent of the deposits, the certificates in 1907 amounted to less than 5 per cent. of the total deposits.

The great gains in cash made by the banks since the end of December is shown by the fact that since the seven weeks to January 11, the clearinghouse banks were able to convert a deficit of more than $54,000,000 into a surplus of over $6,000,000 and at the same time retire the certificates.

The issuance of these certificates, Mr. Gilbert says, furnishes the best object lesson of an emergency currency, one that is perfectly secure and one which can be put into effect without any complicated bank machinery. On this point, Mr. Gilbert says:

"All that is needed to adapt such a system to our requirements is developments, and I feel confident that if the subject could be referred to the clearinghouse committees of the three central reserve cities an emergency currency plan could be evolved that would be in harmony with our national banking system and be less subject to criticism and opposition than any other system which has yet been proposed."

MOTHER-LOVE.

THAW'S MOTHER PAYS HIM VISIT.

DISREGARDS ADVICE OF PHYSICIANS AND LAWYERS.

Though Just Arisen from Sick Bed She Insists on Going to the Tombs Where She Talks to Prisoner an Hour Through Bars—Is Visited by Her Daughter-in-Law.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Over the protests of her physicians and her son's lawyers, Mrs. William Thaw, who yesterday testified in the trial of Harry Thaw, left a sick bed at the Hotel Lorraine today and drove to the Tombs to pay to "Murderers' Row" the first visit she has made in many months.

A trained nurse accompanied her. Despite her weakness, the mother spent nearly an hour talking to Harry Thaw through the bars of his cell.

Evelyn Thaw went from her Park avenue house last night to the Hotel Lorraine to see her mother-in-law. The former chorus girl spent more than an hour with Mrs. William Thaw.

Stopping at the Tombs just long enough to send in a note, Evelyn Thaw drove directly to Lawyer Martin W. Littleton's office to go over with him the testimony which she is to give on Monday. There she was greeted by her old chum, May McKenzie, and Mrs. William Thaw. All three women later visited Dan O'Reilly's office.

When Thaw's personal counsel, A. Russell Peabody, arrived at the Tombs, he said that, on behalf of his client's mother, he would apply to Commissioner Coggey for a special pass, admitting Mrs. William Thaw to the Tombs tomorrow and on all succeeding Sundays, until the trial closes.

Mr. Peabody announced that Harry Thaw's former teacher, Miss Belle Morehouse Lawrence, had arrived from California. She will take the stand Monday morning to exhibit the diary which she kept at the time Thaw, then a boy of 10, was one of her pupils, and to tell of his freakish conduct at that age.

Miss Lawrence will be followed by Mrs. William Thaw, who is anxious to complete her evidence by describing the infancy and childhood of Stanford White's slayer.

Tuesday Evelyn Nesbit Thaw probably will go back to the witness chair, unless it should be arranged to hold the main details of her testimony in reserve until three physicians have sworn to Thaw's strange mental and physical characteristics at various stages in his early manhood.

QUESTIONS READING PUBLIC.

Psychologist Gathers Data in Connection With Perusal of the Daily Newspapers.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—Prof. Walter D. Scott, director of psychological laboratory in Northwestern University, is collecting data on the psychology of journalistic appeal. To accomplish this end he has sent out hundreds of circulars asking as many persons:

"What dailies do you read and the reasons for your choice?"

Other questions in the circular are about the different departments of the newspapers that appeal to each individual, the amount of time given to the reading of the papers daily, and the inducement to subscribe for one journal instead of others.

JUDGE ROASTS CUPID.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Divorce is Cupid's ally and not the foe of the little blind god. This was definitely settled today by Judge Barnes in giving his reasons for denying a decree. The real motive for most divorces, the court declared, was so the applicants might marry again, as little Cupid dictated.

TO POLL THE STATE.

convention meet in Oakland, insisting that it was but fair to Alameda county, which several times had saved the day for the Republican party.

Walter Parker of Los Angeles opposed Oakland, declaring that "experience had proved that when conventions were held in or near large cities, delegates went sightseeing and the work of the convention was impeded by empty seats." He favored Sacramento.

When the vote was taken, Sacramento received 65; Oakland, 5, and Santa Cruz, 5. The selection of Sacramento was then made unanimous.

STONE'S RESOLUTION.

The resolution by Gen. Stone is as follows:

"The Republican party of this State should be united in its support of the candidate to be named in the next national convention, and to bring about such harmony this committee believes that the principles and policies of the present national administration, as manifested by the official acts of its Executive, and the legislation enacted by the Congress of the United States, should be indorsed and adopted as the basis of the platform upon which the party will make its appeal to the people of the United States for support in the campaign.

"At the last convention of the Republican party, held at the city of Santa Cruz, it was by the platform there adopted resolved that the Republican party was committed to the support of such constitutional amendments and legislative enactments as would provide for a direct primary law in the matter of the selection of candidates for State, county and municipal offices.

"The Republican party, in faithful allegiance to such declaration of its platform, through Senators and Assemblymen, chosen because of their affiliation with it, caused a resolution to be passed, submitting such constitutional amendment to the vote of the people of the State at the next general election.

UNOFFICIAL PRIMARIES.

"In pursuance of such policy, and in order that the Republican voters throughout the State may be allowed to express their choice for President of the United States, this committee directs that the Republican County Committees of the several counties of the State issue a call for unofficial primaries, for the purpose of permitting and encouraging Republican electors of their counties and Assembly districts to express by ballot their choice for candidate for President of the United States, at the coming election, and such primary meetings shall be held on Saturday, May 2, 1908.

"Polls for the purposes expressed in these resolutions shall be opened at 12 o'clock, noon, and remain open until 6 o'clock p.m. of said date. A list of the voters must be kept at each polling place by some person or persons designated by local members of the several county committees, and all qualified electors, must subscribe to the party test, this day adopted in the call issued by the Republican State Central Committee for the State Convention.

"The State Committee strongly urges that clubs be organized throughout the counties and Assembly districts in aid and support of this plan, so as to obtain as full an expression of the Republicans of the State as to their preference for President as possible, and the officers and members of such clubs are expected to render the county committees all assistance in carrying out these instructions.

"All persons in charge of polling places must tabulate the votes immediately after the polls close, and forward the same to the secretary of the County Committee.

"The county committees shall consolidate the vote of their county for each person voted for, and forward the result to the secretary of the Republican State Committee, San Francisco, before Monday, the 11th day of May, 1908.

"The final result by counties shall be transmitted and certified by the chairman and secretary of the State Committee to the chairman of the State convention, convened to elect delegates to the Republican National Convention, with the recommendation of this committee that the delegates elected by that convention shall be instructed to support the candidate for President who has received the highest number of ballots as above stated."

DREAMS IN DRESSES.

LUCILE, LIMITED, COMES TO TOWN.

LADY DUFF-GORDON TALKS OF AMERICAN TRIP.

Woman Who Astonished English Society by Opening Dressmaking Shop in Hanover Square, Expects to Acquire New Ideas for Creating "The Psychological Gown-Drama."

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Lady Duff-Gordon, who, with her sister, Eleanor Glyn, is visiting New York, said today regarding the object of her trip to America:

"I am here to visit my friends, to see the country, to do anything but think about my life work, the creation of the psychological gown-drama for women. But really, secretly, I know I am in America to feel. Out of this country, rich in crude, natural emotion, unfrozen by British reserve, a current of new sensations is running in my veins to be poured out into a new flood of creation—the American woman gown."

Lady Duff-Gordon astonished English society when she incorporated her talent for creating the "emotional" gown under the firm name of "Lucile, Limited," and opened a shop in Hanover Square. Out of that shop princesses of the blood have walked, clothed with an idea, and that idea is Lady Duff-Gordon's; for she says:

"It used to be the sole duty of music to be pretty; flowing in melody and pleasant in harmony, no discords, no departures from the accepted rules of harmony. For 'mad scene' or a wedding party, the composer wrote 'um-pa, um-pa, tinkle, tinkle, tinkle, tinkle,' and every one was pleased. But Wagner wrought soul dramas, psychological ideas, into music. Harmonies, color combinations, were woven into fabric, made into a whole that expressed an idea, shading into gleams of passionate suggestion no one had ever dreamed mere notes could express before.

"I am not studying them. They come to me through the nerves of sensation, and when I return to London I will reproduce the sensation in gowns for the American women. They will be my drama, each gown a 'motif.'"

CUPID'S ERROR.

REFUSES TO GRANT DIVORCE.

MRS. LLOYD OSBOURNE SEPARATED FROM HUSBAND.

Author Anxious to Wed Mrs. Frank Norris, Is Report, but Better Half Stands in Way, Despite Fact He Has not Supported Her Since She Left Him in Italy.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Lloyd Osbourne, the novelist, and step-son of Robert Louis Stevenson, will not be in a position to marry Mrs. Frank Norris or any one else, as his present wife, who is now living in San Francisco, has no intention of granting him a divorce, although he has failed to provide her with support.

There has been trouble in the house of Osbourne for a long time, and the fact that the writer is in constant attendance upon his mother has led to the presumption that the widow of the famous Scotchman has had much to do with the separation in the Osbourne family.

Mrs. Osbourne has the two children and came back from Italy several months ago to take possession of the house on Russian Hill, where she has remained. With her return to America news of the division in the family become known, and ever since that time it has been rumored that Osbourne hoped to secure a divorce and marry again, Mrs. Frank Norris's name being repeatedly mentioned.

Of late the impression has become confirmed that Mrs. Osbourne was about to grant her husband's wishes and give him a divorce, but, having two young boys to raise and seeing no reason why she should be cast off in this manner, she has steadfastly refused to grant the divorce and still refuses.

It is understood that Mrs. Stevenson wishes her son to secure the divorce and ignores the existence of his wife, not having visited or called upon her daughter-in-law here. Before her recent visit abroad Mrs. Osbourne lived in one part of the Stevenson house and her mother-in-law in another, but there was no communication between the two households.

KILLS ADOPTED SON.

Groundless Jealousy Leads Woman to Commit Murder and to Attempt Suicide.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Prompted by insane jealousy, Mrs. Mamie Norris this morning, at Ellensburg, shot and killed her adopted son, Thomas Murray, as he lay sleeping in bed at the family residence. She then attempted to end her own life by eating rat poison. The young man died after lingering two hours.

The direct cause of the crime was jealousy over the young man, who, she thought, was paying too much attention to young women.

Last evening, Murray, with a boy friend, ate supper in a downtown restaurant, and on returning home was upbraided by Mrs. Norris, who thought he had been with a girl friend. To pacify the woman he took her to a skating rink. He skated only with boy friends. Later, when Mrs. Norris thought he was at supper with a girl, she visited a hardware store and purchased a revolver, which was found this morning with the price tag on it.

Murray was 21 years old, and a student in the Ellensburg High School. He was an athlete, holding the interscholastic record in several running events.

Young men before they marry should purchase a home and be prepared for the happy day. A great question with many is where shall I go? The answer is to the Modesto irrigation district, where you get the most land and water for your money. Modesto is excellently located, has a fine climate, fertile soil, abundant irrigation water, good railroad facilities and above all is close to the great markets.
You can raise alfalfa, cows, chickens, hogs, peaches, apples, prunes, apricots, berries, nuts, figs, olives, oranges, lemons, and about everything else but pineapples, bananas and cocoanuts, and they haven't been tried yet at Modesto.
Land prices are moderate and terms most reasonable. Take advantage of the special railroad fares and investigate Modesto, but before starting, hear the free illustrated lectures at Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce at 2 P. M. daily or write for full information to J. B. WEBB, Chamber of Commerce, Modesto, Cal.

BIG SCANDAL NOW BREWING.

Hunting Set, Including Many Americans, Involved.

Two Rectors Resign Because of Righteous Wrath.

Criticise Bishop for Protecting Fashionables.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LEAMINGTON (Eng.) Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A great and far-sounding scandal threatens among the hunting set, which includes many Americans who come out to ride the hounds over this district.

Two British clergymen, Osbert Mordaunt, rector of Hampton Lucy church, and Rector Tobin of Charlecote, have resigned their livings, because the bishop of Birmingham disapproved of their campaign against "the loose living of the hunting set," to use their own term.

The clergymen, undoubtedly sincere and conscientious men, refused to give communion to a well-known young married couple, both of whom had been divorced by their former "life partners."

The other members of the hunting set did not trouble the churches with their presence, but the clergymen publicly and constantly inveighed against "their flagrant lives," which, they said, were causing widespread scandal and hurting the morals of the whole neighborhood.

The preachers further declared that the women and men of the hunting set "provide divorces or material for divorces most plentifully each season, their midnight frolics and surprise parties murder sleep, while on the Sabbath they gamble all day and dance all night."

Having resigned, Rectors Mordaunt and Tobin say they will try to prove that the bishop erred in protecting the fashionables who aroused their righteous wrath. So the whole world is likely to learn how fast one must live to be truly fit to ride fast.

LIBERALISM.

STRONG BLOW IS BOOMERANG.

FIGHT AGAINST ELECTION REFORM IS REACTING.

Resolutions Adopted by Liberal and Radical Organizations in Various Cities of Germany Indicate That Strong Impetus Has Been Given Liberal Tendencies.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Vigorous resolutions of protest which Chancellor Von Buelow's sharp refusal to consider the Prussian election reform proposal continue to call forth from Liberal and Radical organizations lend color to the growing conviction that he has unwittingly given a strong impetus to Liberal tendencies throughout the empire.

The drastic resolutions passed by Radical associations of Saxony, Wurtemburg, Bavaria and minor States were followed today by the announcement that the Radical members of the Prussian Landtag have an organization committee to carry on the propaganda for franchise reform.

While Prince Buelow's expected refusal to respond to an interpellation on this question is supposedly based on the theory that it is an internal matter pertaining to Prussia alone, the extent of the protests show that it cannot be treated as a merly local issue.

SUCCEEDS AS SOCIETY LEADER.

Countess Rene de Coetlogon, Formerly Miss Blake of Boston, Gives Receptions in Paris.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Countess Rene de Coetlogon is giving a series of receptions during January.

The Countess, who was a Miss Blake of Boston, has succeeded Mrs. Walden Pell as the leader of American society here, and her home is a center for her compatriots. She is one of the few Americans married to Frenchmen who have not entered French society. The reason, perhaps, is that her salons are considered too American by Parisians, who rarely seek their fellow-republicans from across the sea—except to find wives for their impecunious heirs.

The Dowager Duchess of Bedford, whose life is devoted to deeds of charity, is visiting her friend, Mrs. Hopkins, who is the richest, as well as one of the most brilliant philanthropic Americans in Paris.

CASTRO MAKES TROUBLE.

Annuls Contract With Salt Monopoly, Which Appeals to British Legation.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

CARACAS (Venezuela) Jan. 18.—President Castro has annulled the contract made by the government with the Venezuelan salt monopoly, limited, for the lease of certain salt mines and a monopoly of the sale of salt in Venezuela for ten years.

Appeal has been made to the British Legation, declaring the decrees ruinous and illegal.

"TIMES" NOT SOLD.

HITCH IN NEGOTIATIONS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LONDON, Jan. 18.—Apparently a hitch has occurred in the reorganization of the Times, which, on January 6, it was announced, had passed from the control of the Walter family to a new company, with C. Arthur Pearson as managing director.

A paragraph appears in the Times this morning, declaring that no sale has been effected, and that the previous statement only referred to the negotiations that were in progress.

OFFICERS FIGHT DUEL.

Defy Orders Issued by King of Italy, and Court-martial May Be the Result.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Either forgetting or defying the orders issued last December by King Victor Emmanuel prohibiting dueling at the Italian League, Maj. Paolucci and Capt. Giroul today drew swords and indulged in a furious duel.

A court-martial for both men will likely be the result.

MODEL OF OLD LONDON BRIDGE BUILT FOR ANGLO-FRENCH EXHIBITION.

East Side of the Famous Old Structure, which stood in heart of British metropolis for nearly six hundred and fifty years. It was designed by a chaplain and building began in 1176 and took thirty-three years to complete. The model will form one of a series of seven, which includes many historic structures of Old London.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—An extremely interesting model has recently been constructed of Old London Bridge for the Anglo-French Exhibition. It will form one of a series of seven which includes the Tower of London, Cheapside, Old St. Paul's, the entrance to the Fleet River, Bridewell Palace, the Strand and Charing Cross, and lastly, Old Parliament Houses, Westminster Hall, and the Abbey. The model measures about nine feet long. It is constructed in the proportion of 1 in 100, the whole bridge measuring 926 feet long and forty feet wide.

The bridge itself was designed by a priestly architect, one Peter, a chaplain of Cole Church. It was begun in 1176 and took thirty-three years to complete. The architect himself did not live to see the completion of the work, as he died in 1205. His body was buried in the crypt of St. Thomas's Chapel, which stood on the center of the bridge.

The chapel was dedicated to the blessed martyr, St. Thomas a Becket. It was originally a very beautiful structure, but suffered severely during the dissolution of the monasteries in the reign of Henry VIII.

The old bridge stood for nearly 650 years. It seems a vast pity that such an interesting structure could not have been preserved by the widening of its arches, but owing chiefly to the complaints of the water men as to the danger and loss of life which actually occurred in navigating its arches the last remains of the old bridge, which had stood full many a flood, were finally removed during the early years of the last century.

The old bridge had always been characterized by the tremendous swirl of water between its narrow arches, and in the year 1716 as the result of a severe drought this effect completely vanished, the bed of the Thames being exposed, many persons being able to cross the river on foot both above and below the bridge. This curious state of affairs was due considerably to a gale of wind from the southwest and lasted only for about twenty-four hours. Many valuable curiosities were picked up in the bed of the river during this strange interlude.

One of the last fires which broke out on the Old London Bridge took place on September 8, 1725, on the Southwark end of the structure. It damaged the old bridge gate so much that that part was taken down in 1726 and rebuilt in stone. With the removal of the old gate the custom of exposing traitors' heads was discontinued.

SURPRISED BY QUEEN.

Duchess of Roxburghe Unexpectedly Receives "Command" to Visit Sandringham.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Duchess of Roxburghe, while the Duchess of Westminster's guest at Eaton Hall, received a sudden "command" from Queen Alexandra to visit Sandringham.

This is one of the little suprises the Queen gives her favored friends occasionally. But the unexpected command threw the Duchess (who was Miss May Goelet of New York) into a flutter, for she had no special dresses for a visit to royalty. Had she had notice she would have rushed over to Paris to gown and bejewel herself, so that no one else could make a display more dazzling at Sandringham. As it was, the Queen had to see her in costumes which, having been worn once, perhaps, the Duchess calls "old."

One reason that the Queen likes the Duchess of Roxburghe is because she maintains her ducal position with rigorous exclusion.

The King, too, likes her, if only because she is an infatuated player of bridge and cares nothing what the stakes are. Her only drawback to complete social success is her husband, the Duke, who is everything he ought to be, but who does not shine in the drawing-rooms.

CONSERVATISM.

FRENCHMEN FEAR THE SOCIALISTS.

PLAN TO MEET AGITATORS ON THEIR OWN GROUND.

With Object of Resisting Encroachments of Revolutionary Elements, Conservatives Form "Commercial Parliament" - Promote Joint Action Between Masters and Men.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PARIS, Jan. 18.—Two significant events marking the growing determination of the conservative classes to resist the encroachments of revolutionary socialism were observed here today.

The first is the initial meeting of the "Commercial Parliament." The chief aim of this parliament is to meet the Socialists on their own ground by promoting joint action between masters and men.

The second event is the appearance in Paris today of a weekly paper called Opinion, on the model of the London Spectator. The purpose of this publication is to marshal conservative Republican opinion of all shades against the demands of collectivism, such as premature aspirations for disarmament, etc. The prime movers are Paul Doumer, former president of the Chamber of Deputies; ex-Premier Ribot and Alexandre Millerand, former Minister of Commerce.

WITNESS IN TROUBLE.

Woman Who Testified in the Druce Case Is Tried on Charge of Perjury.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LONDON, Jan. 18.—The Druce case promises to bring in the spring an aftermath of sensational charges of perjury against several persons who were connected with the hearings.

A witness in the case who calls herself Miss Robinson was brought into police court today. The chief detective of Scotland Yard, asserted that instead of being a spinster, the daughter of a Virginia planter, she was in reality the daughter of a London policeman. On the stand this woman testified that she had been brought from America by Charles Dickens to act as secretary to the Duke of Portland and T. C. Druce.

The inspector declares that Miss Robinson spent her earlier years here and that she married a butcher with whom she went to New Zealand. The prosecutor said he expected to prove that Miss Robinson's entire story was a tissue of falsehoods. The prisoner was remanded.

HEART'S DESIRE.

PRINCESS'S LOVE NOT RETURNED.

PATRICIA OF CONNAUGHT IN TRYING POSITION.

She Is Said to Be Consumed With Passion for Young English Peer Who Prefers to Loiter About Stage Doors of Theaters to Courting Royal Maiden.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Princess Patricia of Connaught is the handsomest member of the English royal family. She is tall, stately, has an elegant figure, deep blue eyes, full of thoughtfulness, almost melancholy, and an expression that gives color to the stories that she is consumed with a hopeless passion for a young English peer who does not reciprocate but prefers the stage door of the theater to the private entrance to the court.

If she depended on her parents, Princess Patricia would have what is colloquially called a "rather thin time." Both are extraordinarily close. The Duke is said to be a prey to the mania that so possessed George III, his direct ancestor, that he is a pauper. The Duke and Duchess are always planning to be entertained and to never give any party in return.

When they wanted to spend last winter on the Mediterranean without cost, the Duke went there ostensibly as inspector-general of the army, to inspect the garrisons. Another inspection this year would have been rather too transparent a device, so he got War Secretary Haldane, whose devotion to royalty will land him in trouble before long and has evoked very strong criticism in the radical press, to create for him the new office of Lord High Commissioner to the Mediterranean, with a residence at Malta and the use of a navy dispatch boat for yachting.

When the King of Spain came to England in search of a bride and was introduced to Princess Patricia, she simply declined to talk to him. She insists, it is said, that she will marry no one out of England. But the present Queen of Norway said the same thing until she found it meant not being married at all.

SEIZE OLIVE BRANCH.

John Redmond, William O'Brien and Timothy Healy Close Breach in Nationalist Party.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

DUBLIN, Jan. 18.—The olive branch held out at the meeting of the Irish parliamentary party, which indorsed the national directory of the United Irish League and expressed the opinion that the agreement recently arrived at between John Redmond and William O'Brien removed every objection that Nationalists outside of the party had to rejoining the ranks, has been grasped by Mr. O'Brien and Timothy Healy, and the present prospect is that the next meeting of the party will find the two anti-Redmond leaders, with their followers, back in the fold.

Mr. O'Brien yesterday wrote Mr. Redmond, welcoming for himself and Mr. Healy the motion passed by the Irish Parliament yesterday, accepting the party's pledge and promising their coöperation in making the reunion of the Nationalist forces cordial and complete.

Mr. Redmond replied that he was exceedingly gratified at the communication, saying he was sure it was the wish of every one to bury the differences of the past.

PRINCESS IN PREDICAMENT.

American Woman Who Met Affinity Fails to Secure Annulment of First Marriage.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is the belief in Vatican circles that the new application made by Prince Joseph Rospigliosi to the congregation of the propaganda to have the marriage of his wife to Mr. Parkhurst of Bangor, Me., annulled, will not be successful.

Princess Rospigliosi was formerly a Miss Reid of Baltimore, and after her divorce from Mr. Parkhurst the Roman Prince fell in love with her. They came here to live, where the Prince possesses a palace and a big income. A daughter was born to the couple, and some complications arose over her baptism because the church authorities will not consider the child legitimate, as the Prince and Princess were not married with church rites.

In order to regularize his position before the church, Prince Joseph instituted a suit for the annulment of the first marriage of his present wife before the congregation of the propaganda, which was referred to the congregation of the council and decided adversely to the Prince's interests.

The Pope himself was appealed to directly, but he refused to interfere with the decision of the congregations.

DOCUMENTS ARE SEIZED.

Russian Police Make Searches of Residences of Members of Constitutional Democratic Party.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 18.—The police of Moscow recently made searches of the residences of committeemen of the Constitutional Democratic party in order to obtain documentary proofs of membership in an unlegalized and therefore secret and unlawful association, with a view, it is supposed, to prosecuting the party.

The documents seized include a full list of the local committees throughout the empire, and, acting on the information obtained in the search, similar visits will be made in other parts of the country.

POPE PIUS IMPROVES.

Physician Finds Pontiff in Better Health, but Insists Upon Further Rest.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ROME, Jan. 18.—Pope Pius was visited this morning by his private physician, Dr. Petucci, who found him in better health, but the physician insisted that the Pope continue to rest.

Because of this, audiences arranged for today were suspended, and the Pope only received the Papal Secretary, Cardinal Merry Del Val, and Monseignor Bisletti, Major Domo of the Vatican. The reception took place in Pope Pius's bedroom.

Prof. Marchianavax, consulting physician to the Pope, also visited the patient today. The professor declared that the Pope's illness was not serious.

FOREIGN BRIEFS.

Liberals Suffer Reverse.

NEWTON ABBOTT (England) Jan. 18.—The Liberals today suffered a reverse by the election of Capt. Morrison Bell, the Unionist candidate for Parliament in the Ashburtan Division of Devon. The defeated Liberal candidate is C. R. Buxton. The result was a surprise. Capt. Morrison Bell polled 5191 votes, while Mr. Buxton secured 4632.

Precious Stones Made.

BERLIN, Jan. 18.—Some interesting tests of manufactured precious stones in Germany took place at the Natural History Museum in this city today in the presence of government experts. Among forty stones exhibited rubies were the most successful, being of remarkable beauty. Sapphires were not successful. Herr Fischer, president of the German Society of Jewelers, said he thought the manufacture of rubies might become a business proposition.

Woman Suspect Caught.

PARIS, Jan. 18.—The police of this city have captured a woman named Rosalia Semapaiski, who is believed to have been a member of the Russian terrorist band that in July last year secured $200,000 at Tiflis.

LOEB IS DIRECTOR.

Secretary to President Roosevelt not Chosen Head of Washington Transportation Company.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Former Representative Allen McDermott, Jr., of New Jersey was today elected president of the Washington Railway and Electric Company, and William Loeb, Jr., secretary to President Roosevelt, who has been prominently mentioned in connection with the proposed reorganization of the company, was elected a member of the directorate.

VATICAN.

HANNA TO BE GIVEN OFFICE.

To Become Coadjutor Archbishop of San Francisco.

Congregation Decides not to Reconsider Case.

Suspicion of Modernistic Doctrines Dispelled.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] According to exclusive information obtained by The Times correspondent, the Congregation of the Holy Office will not again consider the case of Dr. Hanna, who recently was appointed coadjutor archbishop of San Francisco, with with right of succession, to take the seat left vacant by the late Archbishop Montgomery.

The appointment was made at the personal request of Archbishop Riordan, the titular of the archdiocese, who has known Dr. Hanna many years and vouched for his orthodoxy. Besides, a Papal brief of appointment has been issued from the dataria and sent to the appointee, and this cannot be revoked under canon law without long legal process.

Whatever suspicion of modernistic doctrines in Dr. Hanna's books was entertained here at the time of his appointment has been dissipated by the Pope, who commanded the members of the Congregation of Holy Office, which has now taken up the duties of the consistorial congregation regarding the appointment of new bishops, to examine closely Dr. Hanna's works. Nothing objectionable was found in them. Several American bishops are considered here as leaders in the modernist movement, and that is one reason given by Vatican prelates why no American cardinals have been created since the election of Cardinal Gibbons.

At the last conclave the archbishop of Baltimore had a fair chance to be elected Pope, but most of the cardinals who are very conservative were afraid the ideas of the American cardinal were not exactly those of the preceding Popes.

"OLD KENTUCKY HOME."

EXILE LIVES IN SANATORIUM.

FORMER KENTUCKY OFFICIAL IS LOCATED IN DENVER.

Charles Finley, Secretary of State When William Goebel Was Shot, and Who Fled to Indiana With Gov. Taylor When They Were Indicted, Endeavors to Regain Health.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENVER (Colo.) Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The man who has been an exile for eight years from his "Old Kentucky Home" because of partisan politics is now in Denver, and has been here, secluded in the Phipps sanatorium, for months past. He, with other men who were elected to the highest offices of the State, was indicted on the charge of conspiracy in bringing about the assassination of William Goebel.

Gov. William S. Taylor, one of those indicted, and Charles Finley, then Secretary of State, left the State. They went to Indiana, across the Ohio River, and took up their abode in Indianapolis. The Governor of Indiana refused to honor requisitions for Taylor and Finley, and succeeding Governors of Indiana followed this precedent. Mr. Finley's health began to fail. Slowly his condition became worse. He wanted to come away, but to leave the sheltering arm of Indiana would probably mean his arrest and return to Kentucky, where jail would await him, and before any trial could be had his life would have ebbed away. He came to Denver and entered the sanatorium at Mont Clair.

"I prefer as little notoriety as possible," said Finley today. "I want it understood that I did not run away from Kentucky. A man would have been worse than a fool to stay there and still worse to go back with conditions as they were. Gov. Willson wrote to Gov. Taylor, informing him that when conditions quieted down somewhat, he would write him, inviting him to come back to Kentucky to stand trial. Although my name was not mentioned in this letter, I presume the same invitation will be extended to me. I have come to Denver to rest up and try to have my health in some measure restored, and just as soon as I am invited, I will hurry to Kentucky and stand trial."

VETO FORCIBLE CONVERSION.

Yale Students Denied Privilege of Raiding Saloons for Subjects for Church Revival.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW HAVEN (Conn.) Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] At the last moment the faculty of Yale vetoed the proposition made by 2000 students to convert New Haven by force.

A parade, made up of 2000 students, headed by a brass band, had been made up to visit all saloons, cafés and public halls, and drag the persons present by force to the nearest church and convert them.

Bartenders threatened to use guns to protect their patrons from forcible conversion. The plan was laid to aid Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman to purify the morals of New Haven.

"Back to the campus," said the faculty.

New Haven is still outside of the pale of the church.

DIES AFTER FIST FIGHT.

Naval Apprentices Battle on Board Ship to Settle Difficulties and One Is Killed.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEWPORT (R. I.) Jan. 18.—Following a fist fight last Tuesday on board the United States training-ship Cumberland, at this port, H. A. Hartnett, aged 23, of Philadelphia, a naval apprentice, died today. D. M. Manning, aged 20, of Middletown, also an apprentice, is under arrest under a sentry's charge, pending an investigation into Hartnett's death.

Hartnett, who had been appointed an acting master-at-arms, had trouble with Manning. When the day's duties were over, the boys put on gloves and began a battle, which, by agreement, was to go ten rounds. With a crowd of 300 apprentices and seamen as witnesses, the fight was a hard one from the outset. In the eighth round Manning caught Hartnett on the jaw, sending the older boy to the deck. Hartnett took the count of ten, and when his seconds went to his side they found him unconscious.

The usual first-aid employed in such emergencies failed to bring him to his senses, and he was removed to the sick ward. There every effort was made to revive him, but without success. Today he died, without having recovered consciousness. Death was due to a blood-clot on the brain.

NEWSPAPER MAN DIES.

Will P. Hammons, Business Manager of Seattle Daily "Times," Victim of Pneumonia.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SEATTLE, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Will P. Hammons, for the past eleven years business manager of the Seattle Daily Times and for the past fifteen years a resident of Seattle, died this afternoon after an illness of eleven days. Pneumonia was the cause of death. He leaves a widow.

Hammons was connected with the Times from the time the control of the property passed into the hands of Col. Alden J. Blenthen. He was thirty-eight years of age and a native of Maine.

Prior to entering the newspaper business he was with the Seattle Gas and Lighting Company and later spent a year in Southeastern Alaska. He was a nephew of Mrs. Alden J. Blenthen, and his widow is a daughter of David Hunter, foreman of the Times.

For years Hammons was identified with the Plymouth and Pilgrim Congregational Churches. He was a musician and as a tenor singer was well known throughout the State.

REAL WHITE SLAVE.

Sixteen-Year-Old Girl Passed from One Chinese to Another During Past Seven Years.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 18.—Florence Livingston, 16 years old, who was captured in a raid on a house in the Chinese quarters of this city, says she was kidnaped from her parents in Cincinnati when 9 years old, and had since been held by the Chinese as a slave, frequently passing from one Chinaman to another in different parts of the country.

She says she finally forgot even the name of the street on which she lived. She could tell the police nothing about her parents. She now speaks Chinese fluently.

LABOR.

UNION BOYCOTT HITS CHURCHES.

Muncie, Ind., Under Heel of Laborite Thugs.

City Suffers More Than by Money Panic.

Petty Squabble Plays Havoc With Business.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MUNCIE (Ind.) Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Though the cost of sending and maintaining the troops here will exceed $30,000, and the loss to business interests during the period of actual fighting is estimated at more than $100,000, the labor organizations are not satisfied. One of the most ruinous boycotts ever invented is now in effect, and has continued to paralyze every line of business.

The street cars are running regularly on all the lines, and are manned by union men, but so effective is the boycott that there are no passengers on them, and in some instances a car has run throughout the entire day without collecting a single fare. While this is true of the city cars, the interurban cars of the same company manned by conductors and motormen, who belong to the same organization are being well patronized.

The union is no respecter of persons in its effort to force the company to recognize the amalgamated association. If ministers of the gospel patronize the cars the labor-union members of their churches will withdraw. If a merchant or any of his clerks ride, labor patronage is withdrawn from his store. If a union man's wife or any of his children ride in the cars he is fined by the union, and must pay it or be expelled.

Thus it is that the boycott extends to all classes of people, and as this is a labor-union city, where everything is organized, the havoc to business is unprecedented even when compared with times of financial panic. In regard to the strike and boycott no question either of hours or wages is involved. It is simply a struggle for supremacy by the street railway employees who are fighting the brotherhood of interurban trainmen.

MINERS INCORPORATE.

New Organization Formed at Goldfield to Supersede Western Federation in District.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

GOLDFIELD, Jan. 18.—A charter for the Nevada Miners' Union, incorporated, was filed with the County Recorder today.

It is the union that is intended to supplant the Western Federation in the district, and has the moral support of the operators' association. Article 2 of the charter defines the objects of the union as follows:

"To secure the best wages possible for its members, to regulate the scale of wages between its members as well as between its members and other persons and corporations, and to make all necessary contracts to execute and carry out the same; and, as directed by the bylaws, to visit and comfort the sick, bury the dead and care for the widows and orphans.

"This corporation is not organized for profit, and shall have no capital stock. A candidate for membership must be a citizen of the United States, or shall have declared his intention to become such."

BANKER-POET DIES SUDDENLY.

CLARENCE STEDMAN VICTIM OF HEART DISEASE.

Gained Distinction in Literature and Finance, and Was Author of Several Books and Made Big Fortune in Wall Street—Served at the Front as War Correspondent.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Edmond Clarence Stedman, banker and poet, died suddenly at his home in this city today.

Mr. Stedman, who was 75 years old, was born at Hartford, Ct., and while a student at Yale earned distinction in Latin and Greek composition. After some editorial experience in Norwich and Winsted, Ct., Mr. Stedman took up journalism in New York City, where he was connected with several daily papers and with Putnam's and Harper's magazines. It was while in newspaper work that he first gained distinction as a poet. For two years of the war he served as Washington correspondent of the New York World. Returning to New York in 1864, Mr. Stedman became a member of the stock exchange, holding his seat until 1900. He made a large fortune in Wall street. While active in business life all these years, he continued to produce literary work of a high order, publishing several volumes of poems. Of late years Mr. Stedman had given his attention to literary criticism.

Mr. Stedman was widely known as the banker-poet. He died from a sudden attack of heart disease. He was seated in his study when the attack came, and he fell to the floor unconscious. Despite efforts of the physicians, the poet died two hours later without regaining consciousness.

extraordinary shipment of 12,000,000 rounds of ammunition recently to the Philippines and Hawaii. It is estimated that of the gross amount ordered or asked for, the War Department will send $250,000 worth to the Philippines and a proportionate amount to Hawaii.

The military experts, commenting on the orders of the government, say that of course a portion of the money to be spent must be applied to the purchase of shells, but that, all things considered, the greater part of the desired appropriation will be for powder.

These experts add that while the figures might alarm a layman, it is to be observed that there are thirty-one seacoast defense stations from Penobscot to Puget Sound. At all of these places it is proposed to place at the earliest possible moment a proper share of the new fourteen-inch guns, which are claimed to be the most powerful weapons in the world.

BIG GUNS IN SERVICE.

There must, however, be retained in the service indefinitely ten-inch and twelve-inch guns and twelve-inch mortars, all of which are high-power and effective guns.

According to an official report there had been emplaced on June 30, 1907, the following guns:

Three hundred and seventy-six twelve-inch mortars, 105 twelve-inch guns, 122 ten-inch guns, 94 eight-inch guns and 450 five-inch rapid-fire guns. One hundred and thirty additional rapid-fire guns were, at that date, ready for armament.

In this connection dispatches from Tokio say that it is estimated by competent observers that Japan could now put in the field 800,000 men, this including the men under arms at all times and the reserve. This fighting force does not, of course, take into account the conditions of protracted war, in which Japan could get probably a fifth of her male population of 23,000,000.

It is also to be remembered that the Japanese military service is not voluntary.

ON THE WATCH.

RUSSIAN OFFICER FOLLOWS FLEET.

COMMANDER DIATCHKOFF SAID TO HAVE BEEN ON SHIP.

Baron Rosen Refused to Ask Permission for Czar's Agent to Accompany American Vessels on Long Cruise and He is Traveling from Port to Port as Best He Can.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 18.—The importance attached by the Russian Admiralty to the lessons to be learned from the voyage of the American battleship fleet under Rear-Admiral Evans is shown by the fact that a navy officer, Commander Alexas Diatchkoff, is following the fleet around the Horn, traveling from port to port by any means he can obtain. He took this course only after his repeated requests for permission to join the ships had been refused.

It is reported here that Diatchkoff succeeded in getting on board one of the American warships at Rio de Janeiro, and the entire incident of this officer's activities had been a source of some friction between the Russian Foreign Minister here and the Admiralty.

When Baron Rosen, the Russian Ambassador to the United States, was instructed to ask for a permit for Diatchkoff to join Admiral Evans, he declined, on the grounds that he knew his request would be unfavorably received at Washington. Thereupon the Russian Admiralty, after further correspondence with the Foreign Office, instructed Diatchkoff to apply personally to Secretary Metcalf. This the officer did, but in vain. He was thereupon ordered to follow the fleet as closely as he could, making use of private steamers.

The Novoe Vremya, which is conducting a campaign against Foreign Minister Iyswolsky, said today that Diatchkoff was granted permission to accompany one of the American battleships. This was obtained after Baron Rosen had refused to present his application, according to this paper, and not the slightest objection was made. The paper, however, is in error.

ROSEN BLAMES PAPER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—No attempt is made at the Russian Embassy to conceal the fact that Commander Diatchkoff is following the American battleship fleet for the purpose of observing its methods during its long voyage to obtain valuable lessons from a close study of all the conditions pertaining to it.

Baron Rosen said that he had never seen the commander, who had not visited Washington while in the United States. He was met in New York by Col. Nebosin, the Russian naval attaché, who took him at once to Norfolk, where he was introduced to Admiral Evans and various officers of the fleet. He then hurried back to New York, where he boarded a ship for Rio de Janeiro, to be present when the fleet reached there.

Baron Rosen says the commander expects to go from place to place where the fleet stops, so that he may learn what there may be of interest from a strategic standpoint that may be worth reporting. Baron Rosen said he had not made any application for Diatchkoff to accompany the fleet, nor had any one identified with the embassy, so far as he was aware, for it was not the practice for the governments to permit foreigners to accompany their fleets on long cruises.

The substance of the whole matter, he thought, was found in the statement of the St. Petersburg dispatch, which said the Novoe Vremya is conducting a campaign against the Foreign Minister, and is seizing the present opportunity offered to make capital out of the incident.

TORPEDO BOATS KEEP CLOSE TO BATTLESHIPS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—It seems probable now that the torpedo boat flotilla on its way to the Pacific will not pay a visit to Buenos Ayres as intended.

According to the original plan, the flotilla was to proceed from Rio de Janeiro to Montevideo. Now, however, as the flotilla is said to be three days behind its itinerary, it is probable that the entire cruise up the River Platte will be cut out and, without stopping at either Montevideo or Buenos Ayres, the little vessels will try to make the long run from Rio de Janeiro to Sandy Point, in the Straits of Magellan.

The torpedo boats will be thus given a thorough test of their ability to make a long distance run and will also be able to catch up with their schedule and accompany the battleships in the passage of the Straits of Magellan as desired by Admiral Evans.

STANLEY JOSLING'S PAINTINGS IN MINIATURE.

Mrs. Charles Wellington Rand.

Photograph of a recent miniature portrait by Josling.

This noted English painter of miniature portraits is now in the city, engaged in the execution of several important commissions. One of these now completed, is the miniature of Mrs. Charles Wellington Rand, ordered by her son, Charles. The portrait of this beautiful woman is a striking proof of the artistic skill, wide reputation and acknowledged precedence of this eminent artist. The subject is a rarely good one for a painter's brush, and Mr. Josling has made the most of it. The result exhibits taste and judgment throughout. The coloring is fine, the pose superb, the dress and hair luminous, the background correct, the whole portraiture faithful and beautiful. No detail is at fault. The artist has put into his delicate work intelligence, appreciation of his subject, and character.

It is related of this young painter, then unknown, that when he returned to London, after studying in Rome, Paris and Lyons, he painted a miniature which was seen by the late Queen Victoria. The Queen promptly summoned the artist and gave him a commission for the execution of the royal portrait. The sittings were had in the garden of Osborne House, Isle of Wight, where the Mother Queen died a year later.

The successful completion of this notable commission made Mr. Josling's reputation, and it became easy for him to secure commissions for the painting of the miniatures of the children of the Prince and Princess of Wales, Lord Rosebery, Lord and Lady Northcliffe, Lady Warwick, and others.

Mr. Josling has already met with an enthusiastic reception in Los Angeles, receiving commissions from not a few prominent society people. Since completing Mrs. Rand's portrait in miniature, he has begun work on one for Mrs. Laura Chase Smith, another for Mrs. Randolph H. Miner, and still another for Mrs. Hancock Banning. Mr. Josling has his domicile at the Hotel Lankershim.

SEA HOSPITAL.

TO PLACE RELIEF IN COMMISSION.

NAVY DEPARTMENT IS COMPLETING ARRANGEMENTS.

Nova Scotian is Detailed as Sailing Master of Hospital Ship and He Will Report to Surgeon Stokes. Crew of About Forty Men Will Be Enlisted at San Francisco.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The officials of the Navy Department are gradually completing their arrangement to put the naval hospital ship Relief in commission at the Mare Island navy yard on February 1.

Francis N. Lecain of Nova Scotia, who has been in the naval service for many years, has been detailed as sailing master of the Relief, and he will report to Surgeon Charles F. Stokes of the Naval Medical Department, who will have command of the ship. His duty on the Relief will be confined to the navigation of the vessel, under the orders of Surgeon Stokes.

The remaining officers, about eight in all, will be engaged in the East, but the crew of about forty will be enlisted at San Francisco.

The Navy Department today awarded to the Pennsylvania Railroad a contract for shipping forty enlisted men of the hospital corps to San Francisco for duty on the Relief.

The Navy Department has completed the preparation of the answer to the resolution of Representative Gill of Maryland, calling for the correspondence relative to the assignment of a staff officer to command the hospital ship Relief. There is a great mass of testimony and correspondence in addition to the letters from the President and Admiral Brownson's letter of resignation, already pubpublished.

But the feature of interest in the unpublished correspondence is a memorandum prepared by Admiral Brownson and placed on file in the department, formally recording the objection of the navigation bureau to the assignment of a staff officer to command a naval vessel.

This memorandum comprises an exhaustive statement of the various naval laws and regulations bearing on this subject, particularly the act of 1862, and Section 7 of the naval personnel act to demonstrate the soundness of Admiral Brownson's contention that no officer who had taken the oath of office, and thereby obligated himself to abide by the laws of the land, could conscientiously issue an order, even at the direction of his superior officer, assigning a surgeon to command the Relief.

EVIDENCE OF FRIENDSHIP.

(BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.)

RIO DE JANEIRO, Jan. 18.—Irving B. Dudley, the American Ambassador, has received a dispatch from the Argentine Minister of Foreign Affairs, saying that the government is preparing to receive the American torpedo-boat flotilla at Buenos Ayres with a fitting ceremony of welcome.

The government is gratified that the vessels are coming to an Argentine port, and it will be glad again to give evidence of friendship which unites the two republics.

WILEY'S INFLUENCE WANES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Enemies of Dr. Harvey S. Wiley, exponent of the doctrine of pure food and inventor of the government "poison squad," are greatly pleased at the action by the President today, which, they say, points to Wiley's waning influence with the administration.

The President has written to the presidents of Yale, Johns Hopkins, Virginia, California and Northwestern universities, asking them to submit the names of their most eminent scientists it was difficult to tell who they were.

"By this time I realized that the shaft was caving and knew that our only salvation was the six-inch water pipe, so while my companions were exhausted from climbing the shaft and were resting a few minutes, I saw to it that the six-inch gate valve was open.

"After securing our station from dirt the best we could, we all went back to the south drift so we could breathe a little better. After resting a short time we went back into the station and with the aid of a hand hammer, cold chisel and some stiff wrenches, we took the flange bolts out of the flanged elbow next to the pump and about seven feet from the line of pipe coming down the shaft. We then took the ell off, leaving the pipe open.

DISCUSS PREDICAMENT.

"I neglected to state above that just as I got my message to the surface to shut off steam, the small telephone wires broke, and all communication with the surface was shut off for a time. C. W. Turner and H. Constanti, without doubt, are buried at the bottom of the shaft. We had done all we could do for ourselves, so we went back into the south drift and sat down and discussed our situation and figured whether the cave had broken the six-inch pipe somewhere above in the shaft. We knew in case the six-inch line was broken, it was all off with us, but finally we could hear some one hammering on the pipe line, and that was very, very encouraging.

"About 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning, as I was standing at the open end of the pipe, some one from the surface called down the pipe, 'Oh, Bailey!' and you can take my word for it, it was the most welcome sound that ever greeted our ears.

"A few minutes after they called down they turned compressed air down the steam line. We called up and told them to shut off the air, as the steam line was broken in the shaft somewhere opposite our station and the dust being raised would have suffocated us. Then they shut off the air from the steam line and made connection with the six-inch water pine and sent us some compressed air, and it was certainly welcome, as I should judge the temperature in the station was 100 deg. before the cave-in.

FED BY PIPE LINE.

"After sending down enough air to last for a time, they found an old can somewhere on top, filled it with water, and lowered it down to us through the six-inch water pipe, but as the can was not sealed tight on the upper end, when it got to the elbow at the bottom, it leaked about all the water out before we could get it.

"Then the master mechanic, Mr. Durkin, got together some two-inch nipples, made of gas pipe about six inches long, with pipe caps screwed on the ends of the nipples, so that the next can sent down with water came around the elbow all right.

"But before I proceed further I must state that in the second or third trip of nipples a note was sent by the electrician, J. Brown, from the surface, telling us to connect our 'phone to the large transmission cables. We did as instructed, and were able to talk with the surface after that. After the little mishap to our supply train, they improved the train by screwing an eye bolt in the caps and added two more vessels to the train, so that afterward everything came down all right.

"For a short time we were puzzled, and did ont know how to get the small vessels around the elbow and out to the end of the pipe within reach, but we found an old three-quarter-inch round hanging bolt, and arranged a hook on the end of it, so now we had very little trouble fishing our train from the elbow and out to the end of the pipe."

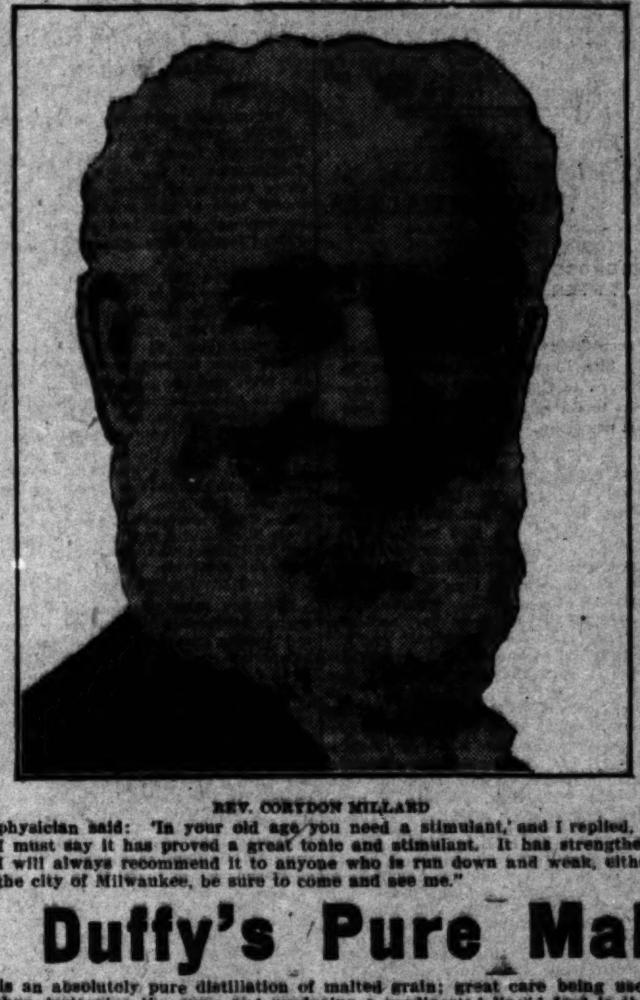
President Fillmore's Cousin a Distinguished Clergyman

Rev. Corydon Millard, who is a first cousin of the late President Fillmore, and a prominent clergyman, having served as chaplain of the Fourth U. S. Heavy Artillery, has just returned to Milwaukee from an extended trip abroad, during which he did valuable missionary work. He says that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is the best tonic for old age and declining years.



REV. CORYDON MILLARD

Chaplain Millard is very proud of letters received by him from such well-known statesmen as Ex-Governor Edward Scofield of Wisconsin, the late Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of State under President McKinley, and the Hon. W. S. Aldrich, late member of Congress from Minnesota.

In a letter of introduction given to Chaplain Millard before he started on his missionary tour to Japan, Ex-Governor Scofield says: "I am pleased to certify that Rev. Corydon Millard of Milwaukee, Wis., is a gentleman of high character and standing in the community in which he resides, and I commend him to the kind offices of American Ministers and Consuls and of all whom he may meet.

"In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Executive Privy Seal to be affixed. Done at the Capitol, in the City of Madison, this First day of August, A.D., 1898."

Chaplain Millard is a firm believer in Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey as the best tonic stimulant, and uses it regularly as prescribed. In a recent letter to the company he wrote: "I have used your Malt Whiskey and find it to be the best tonic for old age and declining years. I am 88 years of age, and my extreme old age naturally has caused me to suffer great weakness and debility. When I found myself growing weak I insisted upon two or three spoonfuls of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey each day. My physician said: 'In your old age you need a stimulant,' and I replied, 'Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is sufficient,' and I must say it has proved a great tonic and stimulant. It has strengthened my system and makes me feel younger. I will always recommend it to anyone who is run down and weak, either from disease or old age. When you visit the city of Milwaukee, be sure to come and see me."

is an absolutely pure distillation of malted grain; great care being used to have every kernel thoroughly malted, thus destroying the germ and producing a predigested liquid food in the form of a malt essence, which is the most effective tonic stimulant and invigorator known to science; softened by warmth and moisture its palatability and freedom from injurious substances render it so that it can be retained by the most sensitive stomach.

It is invaluable for overworked men, delicate women, and sickly children. It strengthens and sustains the system; is a promoter of health and longevity; makes the old young, and keeps the young strong.

CAUTION—When you ask your druggist, grocer or dealer for Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, be sure you get the genuine. It is the only absolutely pure medicinal malt whiskey, and is sold in sealed bottles only; never in bulk. Price $1.00. Look for the trade-mark, the "Old Chemist," on the label, and make sure the seal over the cork is unbroken. Illustrated medical booklet and doctor's advice free. Duffy Malt Whiskey Co., Rochester, N. Minister of Mikado's Navy, in View of Sensational Reports in Connection With Cruise of America's Battleships, Gives Locations of Nippon's War Vessels.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

TOKIO, Jan. 18.—Reports attributing sinister designs to the Japanese naval administration in connection with the Pacific squadron are absolutely unfounded.

Vice-Admiral Saito, Minister of the Navy, in an interview today with the correspondent of the Associated Press, said:

"We have no secrets from America concerning the distribution of our fleet. Daily reports are handed the naval attachês showing the whereabouts of every vessel which can easily be ascertained.

"In view of the sensational reports emanating from various quarters, we desire emphatically to say that no vessel of the Japanese fleet is any nearer to the Pacific coast of America than Yokosuka. Every one of the battleships is now on the home station, either at Yokohama, Kure or Sasebo, and the entire flotillas of torpedo boats and submarines are at the same stations.

"The only Japanese war vessels now outside of home waters are one cruiser at each of the following Chinese ports: Hankow, Fu Chow, Amoy and Kin Chow; two at Shanghai and three small ships at Korea.

"A training ship squadron, consisting of three old cruisers, will sail on January 25. One of these vessels is going in the direction of Colombo, Ceylon, via Manila, where she will call on a friendly visit.

"Any statement made differing from this is absolutely without foundation."

Vice-Admiral Saito was evidently surprised that any idea prevailed abroad that Japanese war vessels were cruising in the direction of America.

Commander John A. Daugherty, the American naval attaché, when he was shown Vice-Admiral Saito's statement, said:

"I can positively confirm the statement of the Minister of the Navy from my own knowledge of the Japanese naval situation. There is no vessel absent from the home waters except those on the regular Chinese stations and a few old vessels at Korea."

WALSH FACES PRISON WALLS.

Aged Banker Is Convicted on Many Counts.

Juror Who Voted for Acquittal Weeps in Court.

Prisoner Declares That Fight Has Just Begun.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—John R. Walsh, former president of the Chicago National Bank, which closed its doors in December, 1905, was found guilty today on fifty-four counts of the indictments against him, charging misapplication of the bank's funds.

The verdict was returned by a jury in the Federal District Court here.

Walsh was permitted to remain at liberty upon the bond furnished by him after the indictment had been returned against him one year ago to a day, pending the hearing of arguments on January 28 on a motion by his counsel for a new trial.

The penalty fixed by the statutes for the offense of which the aged financier was convicted is imprisonment for not less than five years nor more than ten, for each count upon which his guilt was found.

The reading was followed by a scene intensely dramatic. When the jury was polled at the request of Attorney John F. Miller of counsel for the defense, Elbert Palmer, a juror from Harvard, Ill., was overcome by emotion and wept as he signified his acquiescence in the finding. He sat with head bowed upon his hands during the preliminary proceedings and failed to rise to his feet as the others had done to reply to the interrogation by the clerk, "Was this, and is this now your verdict?"

WEEPS AS HE SPEAKS.

A bailiff touched his arm when his turn to answer came. He apparently had not heard the question, and it was repeated. Palmer rose and stood unsteadily, with eyes downcast, and muttered something unintelligible to the court and attorneys.

Under prompting by Judge Anderson, the juror then replied, with apparent effort and while the tears coursed down his cheeks, "Yes, under the instructions as I understand them."

When the poll was completed Palmer was questioned further by the court at the request of Attorney Miller, and in answer to the question previously put to him, he replied:

"I have to say 'yes.'"

It developed later that Palmer was largely responsible for the long deliberation of the jury. So insistent was he that he forced his fellow-jurors to take separate ballots on every one of the 150 counts in the indictment.

"He is such an old man—over 70 years," is said to have been the constant plea of Palmer. "He was technically guilty, but none of his depositors lost, and what is the use of sending an old man to prison?" he is quoted as having urged upon the other jurors time after time. He is said to have wept at times in the jury room as he begged the others to consider the age of the defendant and have compassion.

Walsh, the subject of his compassion, who sat at a table surounded by his attorneys, appeared less moved by the result of the long trial than almost anybody else concerned. He was immediately surrounded by a score of personal friends, who pressed forward to offer words of sympathy and encouragement. To these he made brief replies, smiling faintly as he shook the proffered hands.

TO CONTINUE FIGHT.

Appealed to for an expression of opinion as to the finding, he said: "The fight has just begun. I have nothing further to say."

Almost immediately he left the court room. The verdict was the result of nearly thirty-six hours' deliberation on the part of the jurors. After having retired at 3 p. m. Thursday, there was no indication that a decision was near until 2 o'clock this morning, when a request for pen and paper was followed by the announcement that a verdict had been reached. This, however, was all that was positively known until the announcement was made in court.

The reading was followed by a motion by Attorney Miller for a new trial. Judge Anderson granted permission for filing of the motion, and said that the attorney would be permitted to make the formal application later, and that he would listen to arguments on the same January 28.

Soon after the verdict had been announced, Dist. Atty. Simms telegraphed the result of the trial to the United States Comptroller of the Currency, and received the following reply, from T. P. Kane, acting comptroller:

"Verdict a just one. Should serve as salutary warning that banking laws cannot be violated with impunity, no matter what may be the size of the bank or standing of a banker in the community."

The district attorney estimated that the trial had cost the government $100,000. The district attorney's office was engaged nearly a year in preparing the case.

APPROVES VERDICT.

RIDGELY SCORES WALSH.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] William B. Ridgley, United States Comptroller, who reached Chicago today to hear the verdict in the Walsh case, declared the government was well pleased with the result.

"At last one of this kind of bankers has been found guilty," said Mr. Ridgely.

"This result will have a very beneficial effect on the banking practice of the entire country.

"Of course we are sorry Walsh had to be the victim of the conditions but we cannot be moved by such considerations as that. He was guilty and the jury so found.

"The trial was uniformly fair, and I do not believe that there can be found any grounds for a new trial that will be taken seriously by the court."

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—Mrs. Thomas Metcalf, who created a sensation by firing a revolver at S. R. Hamill, one of John R. Walsh's attorneys, in the corridor of the Federal building here on Tuesday, was released on bail of $1000, signed by her brother-in-law, Edward H. Miller, of Terre Haute, and Harry Burgess, of Chicago.

Mrs. Metcalf's release from the County Jail, where she has been imprisoned since Wednesday, followed.

Joe Reilly Arrested at Sacramento and Police Seek Tony Everett, Who Has the Money.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

MARYSVILLE, Jan. 18.—Joe Reilly, the third man implicated in the mail-wagon robbery here, in which Driver Harwood was a party himself, was arrested at midnight in Sacramento, and is now in jail.

The police now are after Tony Everett, who is supposed to have gone to San Francisco. Everett, after the robbery, took the money from Reilly for safe-keeping, and Reilly was compelled to follow him until he was arrested.

Harwood's confession has created a great sensation here. He is only 20 years old, and is the son of the contractor for the mail route. His father is under bonds to the government on the contract, and may be held for the loss. Young Harwood always has borne an excellent reputation.

NERVE BREAKS, WOMAN FAINTS.

UNDERGOES A TERRIBLE STRAIN AFTER KILLING LOVER.

Faces Judge Calmly, but Collapses as She Leaves the Courtroom to Return to Cell in Jail and Deputy Has to Carry Her in His Arms Into the Building.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENVER, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Broken at last under the nervous strain of the five terrible days following her killing Monday of W. O. Shirey, Beatrice Gordon fell in a dead faint as she was leaving a West Side courtroom today. The woman, who is soon to be on trial for her life, mustered the last reserves of her strength when she faced Judge Whitford. It was the last effort of her overtaxed nerves.

She confronted the judge with the same calmness that characterized her yesterday, when she stood up before the court and demanded more time in which to plead. There was no sign of weakness, except, perhaps, a little added pallor and a more pathetic droop to the corners of her mouth.

Then came the collapse. Scarcely had the woman left the courtroom to go back to her cell when she fell unconscious. A Deputy Sheriff carried her back into the building, and the officers worked over her for several minutes before she was restored to consciousness. Even after that she could scarcely walk the short distance to the jail, and almost fainted again as she was being taken up the elevator to the matron's quarters.

Beatrice Gordon sat in the West Side courtroom for almost an hour before her case was called. This time, she did not have to plead her case alone, as she had an attorney, J. C. Delaney, who asked a continuance.

The brief hearing concluded, Miss Gordon started back to the County Jail, under the guard of an officer. She walked through the ante-room and down the steps at the outside of the building. Then suddenly she threw up one hand to her breast, staggered a step or two, and fell in a faint.

The woman, who, on Monday night, fired a bullet into the body of her former lover, is comfortably quartered and well cared for at the County Jail. Her relatives have brought her supplies of fruit, nuts, candy and other delicacies, and have also provided her with money with which to purchase articles of food not on the jail bill of fare.

COL. SCHREIBER MUST DISCARD THE SILVER OAK LEAF.

Elected to Command the Seventh Infantry, N.G.C., and Will Succeed Col. Finley in April—No Other Candidate Nominated—Maj. Truman Cole Re-elected Without Opposition.

By a vote slightly in excess of the requisite two-thirds, Lieut.-Col. W. G. Schreiber last evening was elected colonel of the Seventh Regiment, N.G.C., succeeding Col. S. H. Finley, whose term of office expires April 6 next. Although Col. Schreiber was the only person nominated for the colonelcy of the regiment, the opposition to him was steadfast, for the first ballot showed twenty-seven votes for him and ten blank ballots. When this ballot was declared unsatisfactory, owing to the accidental voting of two blank ballots by one officer, and a second ballot was taken, it showed twenty-eight votes for him and nine against him.

Maj. Truman Cole was the only candidate placed in nomination for the office of major, and was elected to succeed himself on the first ballot, with only one blank ballot cast. Col. Schreiber was placed in nomination by Lieut.-Col S. M. Saltmarsh, while Maj. Cole was nominated by Capt. F. B. Braden and seconded by Capt. W. D. Midgeley. Maj. L. D. Collins acted as judge of the election of both officers.

All but four of the officers of the regiment entitled to vote at the election were present and voted. Although the election was called at 8:30 o'clock, the meeting was not called to order until after 9 o'clock, and in the interval there was a pretty thorough canvass of the situation carried on. It developed that Col. Schreiber had a sufficient number of supporters to insure his election, and as a consequence it appeared wiser to the opposition to place none of their candidates in nomination.

After the election, the officers adjourned to the drill room, where supper was served. Brig.-Gen. Robert Wankowski acted as toastmaster, and speeches were made by Col. Schreiber, Col. Finley, Maj. J. E. Sullivan, and various officers of the regiment.

Col. Schreiber is now for the third time elected to the colonelcy of the Seventh Regiment, his two previous elections being in 1891 and 1892. He entered the National Guard of California in 1884 as a private and has been connected with it ever since. During 1899 and 1901 he served in the Philippines as captain of Company A, Thirty-fifth Infantry, United States Volunteers. On his return he was appointed assistant adjutant-general on Gen. Wankowski's staff, an office which he has held continuously ever since.

He has established a reputation for efficiency and thoroughness and it is conceded even by those who opposed him that he is a thoroughly capable and competent officer, who will hold the Seventh Regiment to a high standard among the regiments of the State.

SCATHING.

GOTHAM LIKE ANCIENT ROME.

New York Magistrate Scores City Society.

Declares Modesty Vanished; Morals Low.

Churches Tend to Keep Off Middle Class.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Leroy B. Crane, one of the magistrates of the City Court, advocates schools of morality, to raise the moral tone of this community, which, he declares, is as bad as that of decadent Rome. In a statement today he said:

"I believe the public exhibition of society women in extremely low-cut gowns at the opera and other public places, drinking, smoking and the general abandon of others, especially young girls, at restaurants throughout the city, and the conditions and temptations surrounding girls of tender age at middle-class dances in certain public halls, and their associates generally, will prove the morality of New York will reach a status approaching that of Rome in her declining days. Women who lose their modesty lose one of the sweetest characteristics of their lives, and a mother cannot expect her children to be modest unless she sets the example.

LIABLE TO ARREST.

"Do you know, I would not permit my daughters to attend the opera or any public entertainment where slight raiment is the rule and look upon the bold exhibition of women who rank high in the society world. I believe it is not only a demoralizing influence, especially upon the young, but that the exhibition in itself is an indication of a low moral tone. I cannot understand how a chaste and modest woman can go out in public dressed as is the custom in the present day. However, that is what you see at the opera, at many restaurants and on the stage. Supposing the women of the Bowery were to exhibit themselves in such costumes as are worn in many places of amusement, in hotels, restaurants, etc. They would be liable to arrest and censured at least.

"Now, while it is true, as has been said, that morality is largely a question of geography, it is also true the different moral codes must be separated by more than a mile and a half. Scenes enacted nightly in New York, I believe, exhibit as low a moral tone as has been shown in any civilized society, ancient or modern.

CHURCH WORK VAIN.

"The French, during the Revolution, had a 'Goddess of Reason,' who was a woman of the streets. Theroigne was no more of a public character than some of the queens of the stage of whom we have made heroines. Why, within the last year a young woman, whose lack of character was the cause of one of the most sensational murder trials, has actually set the fashion for young girls by the clothing she has worn. Instead of being shocked by even the mention of her name, girls in their teens have imitated the dressing of her hair, the angle of her hat and the cut of her collar.

"Will the churches ultimately raise the moral tone of the city? I fear not. The churches have been trying for many hundreds of years to do that. While I have no doubt that without the churches, we would be much worse off, they are not strong enough now to grapple with this problem—the moral tone of the city or the country. Churches of the present day tend to keep off the middle classes, the middle-class man and the man beneath him.

"Churches are, in many instances, aristocratic; continually, in and out of season, asking for money, money. They never had enough, and never will have."

STANDARD OIL PAYS EXPENSES.

EIGHTY-FIVE MILLIONS EARNED IN ONE YEAR.

Directors Will Meet Next Month to Declare Dividend and It Is Generally Believed That Fifteen-Million-Dollar Melon Will Then Be Cut for Stockholders.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The earnings of the Standard Oil Company for 1907 are estimated at $85,000,000 or $45,664,680 more than is required to pay its dividends.

The following table, which shows the net profits, dividends and surplus after dividends, of the Standard Oil Company, from 1902 to 1907, inclusive, the profits for 1907 being estimated, gives a good idea of the Standard Oil Company's tremendous earning power and its large surplus:

Year—	Profits.	Dividends.	After dividends.
1907	*$ 85,000,000	$ 39,335,320	*$ 45,664,680
1906	82,122,251	39,335,320	42,786,931
1905	57,459,356	39,335,320	18,124,036
1904	61,670,110	35,188,266	26,381,844
1903	81,336,994	42,877,478	38,459,516
1902	64,613,363	43,871,966	20,761,397
Totals	$432,202,074	$239,923,670	$193,178,404

*Approximated.

The directors of the Standard Oil Company will hold a meeting next month for the purpose of acting on dividends. It is generally believed that the rate will be $15 a share which would mean a disbursement to shareholders of about $15,000,000. The policy of the Standard Oil Company right along has been to declare the largest dividends in the first and last quarters of the year. It will be observed from the above table that the Standard Oil Company is in a position to pay much larger dividends. The dividend policy of the directors, however, may have been influenced by the litigation involving the company.

Persons of High English Society Would Induce Countess of Warwick not to Publish Memoirs.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Countess of Warwick is in the comfortable position of being able to count upon the same amount of profit whether she publishes her memoirs or smothers them.

Many persons of excellent rank in high society are frightened at the prospect of being subjected to her criticism, and so, the story goes, a syndicate has been formed which offers to pay a sum equal to the estimated revenue she would get from the book if she pledged herself not to write it for ten years.

As her avowed object is to get money enough to enable her to establish a Socialist daily paper there obviously is a possible basis for arrangement, but the more the Countess recalls her reminiscences the more interested she is in the work, and it is not unlikely that she may come to love it for its own sake.

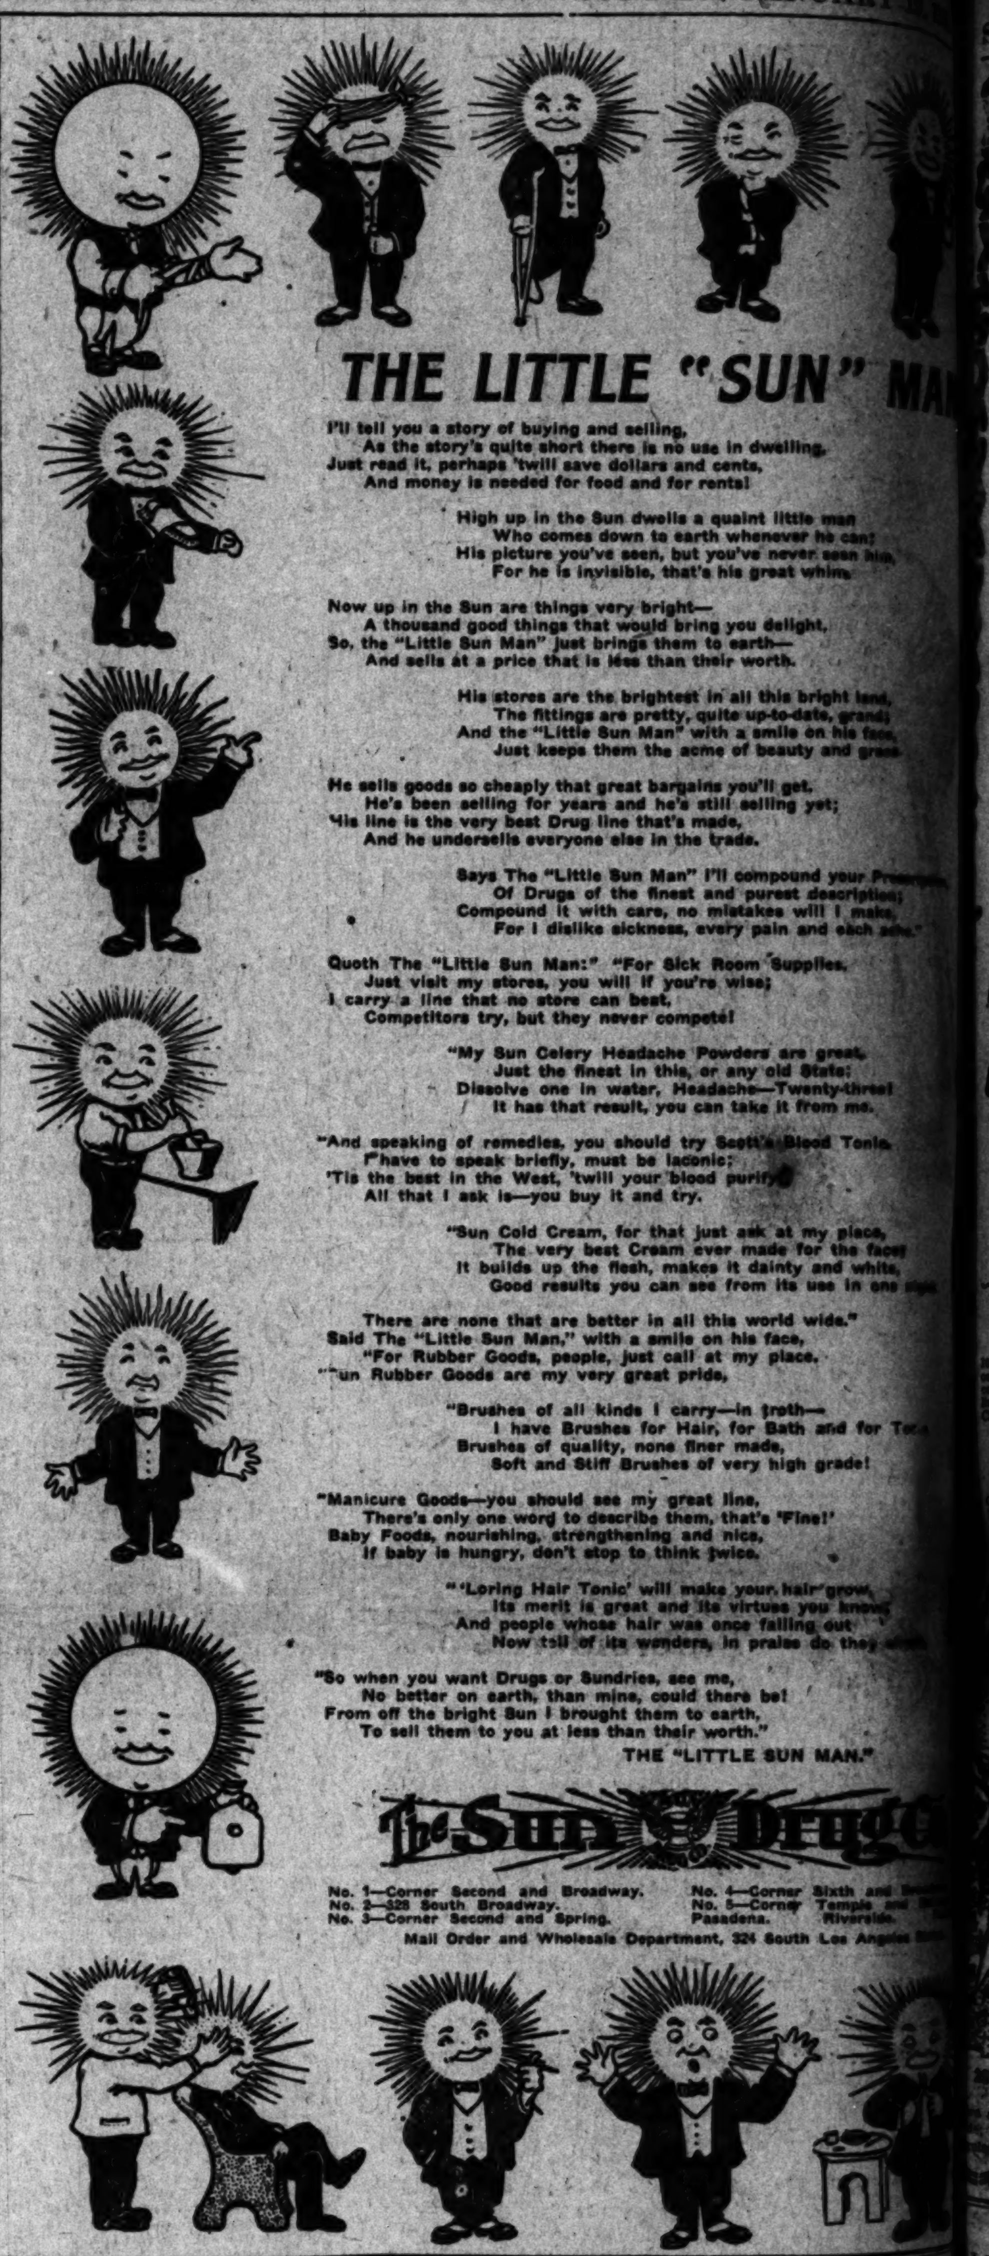
New Three-Million-Dollar Yacht of King Edward Threatens to Be Complete Failure.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] When King Edward's present steam yacht, the Victoria and Albert, was launched she nearly capsized and had to be largely reconstructed to insure stability.

The new 3000-ton royal yacht, now being built for him on the Clyde at the cost of $3,000,000 to the public, threatens to be another failure because of the interference of a committee of admirals appointed by the Admiralty to supervise the construction. These admirals have been applying their ideas of cruiser-designing to a royal yacht, with the result that she promises to be one of the rarest marine monstrosities afloat—if she does float, which is still a matter of speculation.

She has a clipper bow, with a round cruiser stern, so she presents a very peculiar appearance



THE LITTLE "SUN" MAN

I'll tell you a story of buying and selling,
As the story's quite short there is no use in dwelling,
Just read it, perhaps 'twill save dollars and cents,
And money is needed for food and for rents!

High up in the Sun dwells a quaint little man
Who comes down to earth whenever he can;
His picture you've seen, but you've never seen him,
For he is invisible, that's his great whim.

Now up in the Sun are things very bright—
A thousand good things that would bring you delight,
So, the "Little Sun Man" just brings them to earth—
And sells at a price that is less than their worth.

His stores are the brightest in all this bright land,
The fittings are pretty, quite up-to-date, grand;
And the "Little Sun Man" with a smile on his face,
Just keeps them the acme of beauty and grace.

He sells goods so cheaply that great bargains you'll get,
He's been selling for years and he's still selling yet;
His line is the very best Drug line that's made,
And he undersells everyone else in the trade.

Says The "Little Sun Man" I'll compound your Prescription
Of Drugs of the finest and purest description;
Compound it with care, no mistakes will I make,
For I dislike sickness, every pain and each ache."

Quoth The "Little Sun Man:" "For Sick Room Supplies,
Just visit my stores, you will if you're wise;
I carry a line that no store can beat,
Competitors try, but they never compete!

"My Sun Celery Headache Powders are great,
Just the finest in this, or any old State;
Dissolve one in water, Headache—Twenty-three!
It has that result, you can take it from me.

"And speaking of remedies, you should try Scott's Blood Tonic,
I have to speak briefly, must be laconic;
'Tis the best in the West, 'twill your blood purify,
All that I ask is—you buy it and try.

"Sun Cold Cream, for that just ask at my place,
The very best Cream ever made for the face!
It builds up the flesh, makes it dainty and white,
Good results you can see from its use in one night.

There are none that are better in all this world wide."
Said The "Little Sun Man," with a smile on his face,
"For Rubber Goods, people, just call at my place,
"Sun Rubber Goods are my very great pride,

"Brushes of all kinds I carry—in troth—
I have Brushes for Hair, for Bath and for Teeth,
Brushes of quality, none finer made,
Soft and Stiff Brushes of very high grade!

"Manicure Goods—you should see my great line,
There's only one word to describe them, that's 'Fine!'
Baby Foods, nourishing, strengthening and nice,

FAMOUS BEAUTY COMING.

The Hon. Violet Vivian, Rumor Says, Will Be Maid of Honor to Miss Gladys Vanderbilt.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Hon. Violet Vivian, the unmarried one of the famous twin beauties, maids of honor to Queen Alexander, is shortly going to America to act, it is whispered, as maid of honor to Miss Gladys Vanderbilt.

Miss Violet's sister, Dorothy, married two years ago Gen. Douglas Haig, younger brother of Ogilvy Haig, who married Miss Coleman Drayton, daughter of William Astor. Violet has many friends in America and she looks forward to having a very good time.

The Vivian family has recently been somewhat prominently before the public owing to the divorce suit of Lord Vivian, the brother of the twins, whose wife deserted him after three years of wedded life to live with Alfred Curphey, formerly a resident of New York.

This Lady Vivian, pretty and a large heiress, has a strain of the De Bathe blood through her mother, Mrs. McCalmont, a sister of Sir Hugo Gerald Patrick de Bathe, the present baronet, whose marriage with Mrs. Langtry lasted about two weeks.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Gov. Gillett will not enter into any contract whereby Abe Ruef will be granted a pardon if sentenced on conviction of any of the charges now pending against him.

"Under no circumstances," said the Governor, "will I consider an application for Ruef's pardon or for the pardon of anyone else except in the usual way.

"But no such application has been made to me and what you tell me is the first intimation I have had of it. If any application of the kind is made, I shall consider it when it comes up in the proper way, not before. I shall act in the matter only as it is the right of the Governor to act—to consider applications for pardon when the proper papers are placed before me."

His cause might have been bettered by a slight pruning of the rather extensive book, but nevertheless the work of his people was sufficiently interesting to hold the unflagging attention of the audience through the extended performance.

Mr. Witherspoon proved himself a master of oratorio singing last night. The role of Elijah, which is indeed the greater part of the oratorio, is a tragic task for a bass, because it lies much in the baritone range. Though Mr. Witherspoon's voice frequently exhibited symptoms of weariness, the leading numbers falling to his talents were interpreted in a style almost magnificent, and thoroughly imbued with powerful but discreetly tempered dramatic values. "It Is Enough," and "Lord God of Abraham," have certainly never been surpassed for emotional quality and artistic interpretation in this city. In one of the denunciatory passages, however, the soloist was hard put, and his voice, in its evident efforts, was tense and strained.

Mme. Bishop again proved her thorough schooling in oratorio, and a knowledge of it which amounts to mastership. Her phrasing of the various soprano airs was consummately done, and might serve as a lesson to many a student.

The sympathetic voices of Mr. Miller and Mrs. Robbins were heard advantageously in the lesser positions assigned here to tenor and contralto.

The orchestra, under Mr. Krauss's general direction, did good work in the main, though at times suffering badly from that same straggling spirit which has infested so many of our platform orchestras here.

The audience was of good size.

The ranch has been used as a fruit and grain ranch, about half the acreage being set to apricots and peaches, while the remainder was cultivated for hay. The buyer is planning to subdivide into five and ten-acre tracts, and set to grapes.

PRETENDED MASON ARRESTED.

Man of Aliases Accused of Forgery by Sheriff of Santa Cruz—Unusual Case.

E. B. Hebbard, alias H. A. Haley, alias Louis L. Mead, was arrested yesterday, on instructions from Sheriff H. V. Trafton of Santa Cruz county, who holds a warrant charging him with forgery.

He admitted his identity and said he is a member of Masonic Lodge No. 267 of Moline, Kan. He received financial assistance from the lodge in Santa Cruz, and afterward forged the name of its secretary, it is alleged, for a small amount. Inquiries were made in Moline, and it was learned that he is an impostor. A warrant was sworn out for his arrest, but he fled to Los Angeles before it could be served.

FULL VOTE ON WATER PLANT SALE DESIRED.

Definite Steps Taken for Opening of Municipal Ownership Campaign. Lake Vineyard Company's Stockholders Meet—Judges Appointed for Dog Show.

Office of The Times, No. 38 S. Raymond Ave.

PASADENA, Jan. 18.—Definite steps were taken last night to open the campaign for city ownership of waterworks. Stockholders of the Lake Vineyard Land and Water Company met and considered the situation as a whole. It was decided to appoint a committee, the business of which would be to bring out the vote of the stockholders. Edward Hahn suggested that before this committee was named, it would be wise to have a committee to consider the personnel of the canvassing committee. Mayor Earley was made chairman of this body and Mr. Hahn and Charles A. Gardiner were associated with him.

When the sale of the water plant was considered by the Lake Vineyard company, two years ago, the stockholders voted 17 to 1 in favor of it, but the vote represented was less than a two-thirds one. The company's "whips" will guard against a similar situation when the matter comes up again.

The Northside directors met with the special committee of the Council to canvass the betterments. The water association has reached a friendly understanding with the Councilmen, and it is understood that the plan to sell will be ratified by the stockholders at the earliest opportunity.

ELEVATED AND SUBWAY?

It was announced yesterday that Horace M. Dobbins, who owns the cycleway franchise from Center street in this city to the confines of South Pasadena, proposes the building of an elevated and subway road to Los Angeles. There have been assertions that these would come into the heart of this city and continue out to the mountains. The only certainty now is that they will never in slightest way disfigure the beauty of Central Park. Some people say the lines will enter Los Angeles by the Sunset boulevard and through the half-completed tunnel at Glendale, but the promoter of the scheme makes no statement as to this. It is said in the published plans that no stops will be made between Pasadena and Los Angeles and that the distance will be covered in fifteen minutes.

TO ADDRESS Y.M.C.A.

George B. Hodge, who for fifteen years has been in charge of the supplementary educational department of the Young Men's Christian Association of the United States, will lecture Monday night in the auditorium of the First Baptist Church, under the auspices of the local branch of the Y.M.C.A. There will be stereopticon views to show the great progress of the work in the cities of the United States. F. L. Culver, the first general secretary of the local branch of the Y.M.C.A., will speak to men at the association building, this afternoon at four o'clock, on "The Coming Man." Special music will be rendered by the Y.M.C.A. glee club.

NO-SALOON LEAGUE PLAN IN SANTA MONICA.

Secret Operations Covering a Period of Several Months, Culminate in Meeting in Which Organization Is Formed in the Interest of Ordinance Closing the Rum Shops.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SANTA MONICA, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] To make of Santa Monica a strictly prohibition town is the avowed purpose of the No-Saloon League, which body was organized at a secret meeting held at Hull's Hall tonight.

There were representatives present from every ward in the city. A report was presented from a general committee which has been working for several months and which is said to have kept its operations so thoroughly concealed that none outside the movement knew about it.

The committee reported having sounded almost every voter in the city and that the poll showed a majority in favor of a prohibition ordinance.

In line with action taken at tonight's meeting a house to house canvass will be made for signatures to a petition asking the City Council to call a special election on the question of the adoption of a prohibition ordinance. A draft of the ordinance was submitted at the meeting tonight as drawn by ex-City Attorney Fred H. Taft and City Attorney F. W. Odell.

The ordinance prohibits the sale or giving away of any intoxicating liquor, even in a club. It permits the dispensing of liquor on prescription by druggists under rather strict conditions. Under the present ordinance druggists are not allowed to dispense it, even on prescription. Under the proposed ordinance the penalty for the first offense for violation is a fine of from $25 to $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months. For the second offense it is a fine of from $50 to $500 and imprisonment not exceeding six months.

It is expected that 500 or more signatures to the petition asking for the special election will be obtained within a few days. Under the present freeholders' charter a petition of 30 per cent. of the voters asking for a special election on an ordinance as proposed makes it mandatory on the City Council to call the election and submit the ordinance as presented and that without the change of so much as a comma.

A central committee was chosen composed of the following: First Ward, W. L. Armagost; Second Ward, Rev. E. W. Pasko; Third Ward, W. I. Hull; Fourth Ward, C. L. Briggs; Fifth Ward, Fred H. Taft; Sixth Ward, Rev. F. D. H. Stevens; Seventh Ward, Thomas Sanderson.

W. I. Hull was chosen chairman of the committee and the body is to be increased by two members selected at large.

REDONDO.

REDONDO, Jan. 18.—One of the most interesting and enjoyable affairs held at the Hotel Redondo was the annual dinner of the Del Rosa Young Ladies' Collegiate School of Los Angeles, last evening. Miss Alice K. Parsons and Miss Jennie Dennen, the principals, together with forty-four young lady pupils, assembled at the hotel at 7 o'clock and dinner was served soon afterward. Among those who were present, besides the teachers, were the following: Misses Irene Elliott of Tucson, Arizona; Doris Hutchins of Honolulu, H. I.; Dorothy M. Sadler of England; Charlotte S. Wadsworth of North Dakota; Dorothy J. Polleys of Melrose, Wisconsin; Helen M. Dupuy of Ironton, Ohio; Isabel Clinton of Chicago; Beulah Ornly of Virgina; Leo B. Parks of Arizona; Pauline Darling of Riverside; Josephine J. Campbell of Albuquerque, N. M.; Ethel Pierce of Fresno, and thirty-two other pupils of the school.

FOR WAVE MOTOR.

The steamer Queen brought a portion of the machinery of the Starr Wave Motor last night. The remainder will be ready for delivery in a few days, perhaps by next steamer. When the machinery is on the ground it is the purpose of the management of the company which controls the patents covered by the Starr motor to begin operations at once. The pier, situated a few hundred feet south of Pier No. 3, is completed and ready for the float which will be launched as soon as the machinery is in place. It is probable that everything will be ready for the final test of the motor by February 1.

BANANA KING'S VISIT.

Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Stevens of Denver, and Mr. L. G. Kellogg of Honolulu, are registered for an extended stay at the Hotel Redondo. Mr. Stevens is a leading mining and stockman of Colorado, and Mr. Kellogg is known as the Hawaiian Banana King, the banana trade of the Islands being under his control.

Ball, Frank Burke, J. J. Tweedy, Charles E. Smith and J. C. Stout. The officers elected are: President, Mr. Ball; secretary, J. H. Ardis; treasurer, Mr. Burke.

Mrs. A. G. Haygood left Friday morning for Montgomery, Ala., where she will enjoy a three months' visit with relatives.

Mmes. N. Jones and F. B. Holman of Los Angeles, spent the past week as guests of Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo Hall.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Haygood and mother are here from Atlanta, Ga., for an extended visit with relatives.

TENT CITY FIGHT.

OCEAN PARK, Jan. 18.—There having been technical errors in the first ten complaints issued against the Abbot Kinney Company for alleged violation of the anti-tent ordinance, ten new documents were sworn to today. The defendants are cited to appear January 29. The City Attorney has no doubt of being able to secure a conviction and establish the validity of the law, while the attorney for the Venice corporation is equally certain that the ordinance will not stand the test.

Charles A. Proctor and family of Union City, Ind., have taken a cottage on Grand avenue for the season.

YIELD AUTHORITY OR SHOW CAUSE.

BUT COMMISSIONERS CHOOSE NOT TO GIVE UP.

Long Beach Contest of Old City Marshal for Job of Chief of Police Is Taken Into Superior Court With Result That Imperative Writ of Mandate Is Issued.

LONG BEACH, Jan. 18.—Special Officer Cason last night and this morning served Mayor Windham, the seven members of the City Council, the Police Commissioners and Chief of Police Williams with papers in the suit of ex-Marshal George W. Young, who lays claim to the office of Chief of Police. In connection with the suit, Judge Monroe issued an writ of mandate ordering the defendants to restore Young to his alleged rights or appear in court on or before January 31, and show cause why they have not done so. The latter course will be adopted, and Chief Williams will go ahead with the organization of his force under direction of the Police Commission.

His cause at issue being defined and in the courts, ex-Marshal Young, on the advice of his attorney, virtually relinquished possession today, paying a visit to headquarters at the noon hour and unlocking the door of his private office and the desks and lockers wherein were stored the records and papers of the department, his effort to force his successor to take forcible possession having failed in effect.

This morning the Police Commission made the following temporary appointments for sixty days, subject to approval of the Civil Service Commission: Captain of police, Clayton McCord; desk sergeants, Fred Kutz, Fred Phillips; patrolmen, J. C. McMillin; W. H. Halover and Robert A. O'Rourke; mounted patrolman, Thomas Borden. The remaining appointments are held up pending investigation of records.

SEASHORE NEWS NOTES.

The annual State convention of the Y.M.C.A. will convene in this city March 12-15, inclusive. About 200 delegates are expected. The local Y.M.C.A. last night appointed the following chairmen of committees, who will have the work of planning for the convention and the entertainment of the delegates and visitors: Convention Committee, N. H. Nielson; Finance, W. H. Wallace; Entertainment, W. M. Cook; Printing, J. S. Chaffee; Decoration, George Hird; Reception, H. W. Metcalf; Music, F. E. Young; Pulpit Supply, Rev. A. F. Mitchell; Ushers, George Wilson; Halls and Churches, S. F. Easterbrooks. Sessions of the convention will be held in the auditorium.

The Board of Public Works and the finance committee of the City Council, which bodies were authorized to secure an expert examination of the pier, will probably not take advantage of this authority, but will recommend to the Council that the space under the other wharf be filled with rock and further protected by a breakwater of rock along the south end. This, it is figured, will break the force of sea swells, create an eddy and gradually fill up under the entire pier. This plan was recommended when the pier was first built, but rejected, and the city has since paid out in repairs twice the original estimate.

Mrs. Nellie Brush, for two years assistant pastor of the First Methodist Church, has resigned, and will leave Sunday for Council Bluffs, Iowa, where her husband is dangerously ill. The official board as a testimonial of efficient service, paid Mrs. Brush her salary in full to March 1.

On Monday work will begin on a three-story apartment-house, on Seaside Boulevard, one block west of Hotel Virginia. A Los Angeles firm secured the contract today. The building will be of stucco and contain twelve suites of three rooms each. It will cost $8000 and covers 30x100 feet of ground.

AGAINST LAWBREAKERS.

Governor of Soldiers' Home Says the Authorities There Stand for Punishment.

SOLDIERS' HOME, Jan. 18.—Referring to the arrest and punishment at Sawtelle yesterday of a veteran member of the home, for illicit sale of liquors, for which he received sentence of 100 days, Gov. La Grange said that the Home authorities are fully in accord with the county as well as Santa Monica and Sawtelle authorities in efforts to suppress blind-pigs and the punishment of violators of ordinances relating thereto—be the culprits veterans or otherwise.

If the offender be a member of the home, he will, on the completion of his legal term of punishment, be liable to dishonorable discharge from the home; and—quoting from "Laws and Regulations" of the National Home for D.V.S.—"Not to be readmitted, even temporarily, at post, without a vote by the board of managers previously obtained."

In view of some recent comments anent the arrest of old soldiers at Sawtelle, it is to be understood that the Governor, whose feeling for, and treatment of, aged offenders against home discipline, in some instances almost transcends magnaminity, is in harmony with justice in its dealing with lawbreakers—especially relating to that element of offense known as the "blind pig."

DIES IN NEW MEXICO.

Notice has just been received at headquarters that John Wesley Swartz, a member of this branch, on furlough, died January 14 at Gallup, N. M., aged 71. He leaves a son, Frank C. Swartz. Swartz enlisted as private in Co. B, One Hundred and Third Illinois Infantry, and for bravery in the field was promoted to be first lieutenant. He, with his family, went to Gallup in 1880, and was regarded in that town as one of the most prominent among its pioneers. He was the first postmaster, also the first justice of the peace at that place, and his death, which was due to heart disease, is regretted by a large circle of friends.

CUTS HIS THROAT.

John Smith, late Co. H, One Hundred and Sixteenth Illinois Infantry, attempted suicide at his bedside in ward No. 4, home Co. C, this morning, by cutting his throat with a penknife. Probably owing to his ignorance of anatomy, however, he made a dismal failure of the job. Covered with blood—from a small vein—he was hurried to the hospital, but the ghastly wound proved to be little more than a skin-deep incision at a point of the throat directly under the chin. Surgeons promptly stitched him up. They declare he is not in danger.

PICKET SHOTS.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" was played to a crowded house in Memorial Hall last evening, every seat being filled and numbers of civilians turned away for lack of standing room. That the veteran audience enjoyed the presentation, it need only be explained that all held down their chairs from the rise of the curtain at 7 o'clock until its final fall at 10 o'clock.

Eighty-five veterans at the home were made happy yesterday, on receipt from the treasurer of arrearages of pension money due them under the McCumber act. The total amount paid was $2820.

SAYS COUNTY GETS CITY'S MONEY.

SAN PEDRO CITY ATTORNEY MAKES AN ASSERTION.

Declares That Several Thousand Dollars Per Year Are Collected by the County for Licenses for Towing and the Like Which Should Go to the Coffers of the Municipality.

SAN PEDRO, Jan. 18.—If the contention of City Attorney Henry Stieglitz is legally correct the county of Los Angeles is receiving several thousand dollars yearly from various railroads and other corporations for the privilege of doing business on San Pedro harbor that rightfully belong in the coffers of the city of San Pedro.

Attorney Stieglitz made the following statement to a Times correspondent this afternoon relative to the matter.

"I am fully convinced that the money now being paid to the county of Los Angeles by various corporations for the privilege of charging towage and wharfage tolls within the corporate limits of San Pedro should divert to the city of San Pedro. The licenses amount to $5000 or $6000 each year, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company alone paying about $2400 annually to the county. To the end that this money shall go to the city of San Pedro instead of to the county of Los Angeles I have prepared a resolution which I will submit to the Board of City Trustees on next Tuesday afternoon, citing all corporations doing business on the harbor within the corporate limits of San Pedro to appear and show cause why the moneys assessed for their privileges should not be paid into the city treasury of San Pedro, instead of to the county."

"San Pedro needs the money," concluded the City Attorney, "and if it belongs to this city I intend to see that she gets it."

HARBOR CITY DRIFT.

It is stated here today that members of the Seventh Division, Naval Militia of California, are making an attempt to secure the U.S.S. New Orleans, 3430 tons, now at Mare Island, for a naval training vessel to be permanently located at this port and that the effort will probably meet with success.

Orders were received this afternoon by the British ship Howard D. Troop, Capt. Durkee, which arrived Wednesday from Ipswich, to discharge her cargo here instead of at Port Los Angeles, her original destination. The cargo of the Troop consists of 1800 barrels of cement and miscellaneous merchandise consigned to Girvin & Eyre. It is stated that in future much foreign tonnage formerly going to Port Los Angeles will be transferred to San Pedro. The Troop will be towed inside to the Southern Pacific wharf tomorrow.

The German steamer Eva, Capt. Schonwandt, is expected to arrive early next week from Muroran, Japan, bringing a cargo of Japanese oak ties and timbers consigned to the Santa Fé Railroad Company. The Eva is now out twenty-five days.

The comic opera production of "In Tobasco Land," given at the Fraternal Aid Theater last evening, by a capable company of local amateurs, for the benefit of the Pomona lodge of Elks, was a gratifying success, the attendance being large and the audience appreciative. The principals acquitted themselves creditably, the solo work of Miss Leona Warren being particularly pleasing, and the chorus was well balanced, showing the careful training received under Prof. Stanley F. Widener. The stage management was cared for by Frank W. Balfour, who besought liberal patronage for the opera at its presentation tonight. The special Mexican scenery used was painted by Carl Clogston of this city.

WILL DISCOURAGE EMIGRATION.

Italian Government Hopes by This Plan and Through Diplomacy to Settle American Affair.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is announced from official sources that the government's action in connection with the abuse of immigrants in southern States, especially in Mississippi, will be limited for the present to strict diplomatic surveillance, with a view to determining cases of peonage, punishing of culprits and discouragement of emigration to the South. It is hoped that the decrease in emigration will cause an alteration in the existing laws.

An emigration bureau, previous to reaching this decision, attempted to enlist coöperation of the American Federal government in obtaining special contracts favorable to the Italian immigrants, but it failed. Hence the only remaining remedy seemed to be to discourage emigration until the southern authorities are convinced that Italian immigrants deserve better treatment than beggars.

HOLTVILLE MAN IS ATTACKED IN THE NIGHT.

Attributes the Assault to His Attempt to File on Lands Which He Alleges Are Held Illegally by Another—Victim, Greatly Frightened, Begs to Be Hidden.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

EL CENTRO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] An attack by masked men on H. Phelps of Holtville is attributed by Phelps to trouble over his attempt to file on lands which he alleges are held illegally by F. N. Chaplin, and which Chaplin located as school lands.

The place is seeded to alfalfa and Chaplin claims to be in no fear as to his legal standing. It is denied that the trouble over Phelps's attempted land jumping was the real cause of the attack made upon him but Phelps says that he recognized in one of the party an employé of Chaplin, and is certain that the attempt is being made to run him out of the country.

Phelps was taken at night, gagged, bound and carried to the Alamo River where he says threats were made to duck him but that his assailants were frightened off. Constable Harris was notified of the attack and found Phelps apparently dead lying at the roadside. When the gag was removed Phelps, who was greatly frightened, begged to be taken away and to be hidden in safety. He has sworn out several John Doe warrants but it is believed nothing will come of his threats to prosecute.

CHURCH'S INVESTMENT.

The Christian Church will buy the house occupied by the pastor, Rev. J. R. Jolly, and lots adjoining, and will erect a chapel on the property. MAY HANDLE ITS OWN CROP.

Santa Ana Celery Association May Act Apart from Union—High School Defeats Throop.

SANTA ANA, Jan. 18.—By the first of next month the celery growers of this county will know whether the crop will be handled next year by the California Vegetable Union. The growers' association has submitted conditions for a contract to the union, and it remains to be seen whether the latter will accept them. If a contract is not effected, the association will market its own crop. The orders for large bunches of celery are good but for the small bunches, not as active as the growers would like.

SANTA ANA WINS DEBATE.

The Santa Ana High School last night defeated the Throop Polytechnic of Pasadena in a debate upon the subject: "Resolved, that compulsory industrial arbitration should be established." Throop had the affirmative and was represented by Herbert O'Neil and Percy Green. Santa Ana's champions were Conant Livingston and Elwer Worthy. The judges, Prof. Shepherdson of the Los Angeles Normal, Prof. Monroe of Whittier, and Prof. Frew of Compton, gave Santa Ana fifty-five points and Throop forty-eight.

City Treasurer H. D. Connell has served notice on the Council that no warrants will be paid when the fund on which they are drawn is overdrawn. This means that the banks will not carry overdrafts on the different funds, as has been the practice for the last ten years. To meet this condition the city is casting about for places where it may chop off big lumps of expenditure. It will probably refuse to take a $3200 steam road roller, already delivered, and will omit $2000 worth of work on the South Side Park. It is possible that the park will revert to the donors, H. B. and M. R. Heninger.

Covina Woman Sells Orange Grove at Neat Advance After Holding It Two Days.

CORONA, Jan. 18.—The nine-acre orange grove of J. J. Aschenbrenner has been sold to S. Blum of Los Angeles for $10,000, the seller reserving the crop. The Hazzard & Welch Realty Company acted for the parties. The place is planted to 12-year-old orange trees.

G. C. Kirby on Thursday sold his five-acre orange grove of 7-year-old trees on the San Bernardino road to Mrs. Lucy Ross of Pomona for $1100 per acre. Yesterday she sold it to W. B. Lewis of Charter Oak at an advance of $1500.

INITIAL CONCERT IS SUCCESS.

The initial concert of the Covina High School orchestra, under the direction of its leader, Prof. F. A. Fitzgerald, was given at the Woman's Club House last night before a large audience. The orchestra, twenty pieces, was organized only three months ago, and the character of the music was a revelation to the citizens. The violin playing of Robert Philleo, a youth of 16, was superb.

FLOCKING TO RIVERSIDE.

Railroad Officials Expect Over Twenty-six Thousand Tourists During Winter.

RIVERSIDE, Jan. 18. — Estimates made by the three railroad offices here show that over 6000 people from various parts of the world have visited this city since December 15. It is the opinion of all the railroad men that there will be a heavy increase in travel as the winter advances, it being estimated that 26,250 tourists will come here before the season closes—an average of 248 a day. Throughout the East, Riverside is one of the best advertised cities in California.

NOVEL SERVICES.

An innovation in Sunday services will be introduced in the First Methodist Church tomorrow night, by the pastor, Rev. Robert S. Fisher, who will lecture on "Getting Married." The orchestra will play the Lohengrin wedding march, and the choir will render special music, a sextette singing "Home, Sweet Home." A poem appropriate to the occasion will be read by Miss Harriet LeGuire. This will be the first of a series of lectures on the general subject "The Happy Home."

A novel service will also be held tomorrow night at All Souls' Universalist Church, of which Rev. Herbert E. Benton is pastor. He says he has often been told that a minister has an unfair advantage over his hearers because they have no opportunity to reply to his statements. Mr. Benton will give a ten-minute talk on his subject, and the meeting will then be turned over to the congregation for discussion. The subject will be: "Should Church Property Be Taxed?" Francis Cuttle will preside.

CLIFF DRIVE OPEN TO AUTOS.

Santa Barbara Chamber of Commerce Has Change of Heart—Prominent Woman Seems Insane.

SANTA BARBARA, Jan. 18.—The Chamber of Commerce, last night, decided to permit the use by autoists of the magnificent scenic cliff drive that skirts the ocean after passing through the Hope ranch. The drive, which is about eight miles long, has been closed to automobiles because of its narrowness and the fact that there are few "turnouts" on the "shelf." In some places the road is several hundred feet above the level of the sea and affords superb views. Part of it is controlled by the county, part by the Chamber of Commerce and the remainder by the Pacific Improvement Company.

Later, she was taken to the Cottage Hospital. She proved to be a sister of Mrs. Thaddeus Welch of No. 411 East Sola street, and has four little children. Formerly she was a resident of New York State and had been an inmate, it is said, of the Bloomingdale asylum. She came to the Coast for health's sake and has been living with Mrs. Welch. Thaddeus Welch is the artist whose pictures have attracted much attention throughout the West.

THE MARKETS.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

The past week saw some marked changes in prices of produce, especially of the staples, butter and eggs. The operators on 'change forced prices to decline during the early part of the week, only to find themselves unable to keep the declines in force. Receipts in several lines, especially potatoes, were enormous and caused weakness. The supply of green goods and fruits was well sustained.

Losses on storage stock was a feature of the egg market. These eggs have been here in storage for almost a year, and the unexpected increase in local receipts, as well as the influx of northern eggs, made it impossible to dispose of them at anything like expected figures. Dealers held their stock too long in the expectation of a rise which never came. In the week just past there was some talk of sending the storage eggs back to the shippers in the East if it were possible to secure an emergency freight rate. Even though this were done, the eggs would be a loss, for dealers in the East might refuse to accept them for disposal, and if they can be sold here at 12 cents a dozen and the loss divided, it will not be nearly as large as would be entailed by reshipment. Receipts were 247 cases of ranch, case count, and one case was sold.

The butter market, which was forced down, after a hard fight, to 67½ cents per two-pound roll, has been very firm at that figure. Some dealers are refusing to sell at that price and name 70 cents as their bottom figure. Sufficient butter has been arriving, however, to keep up the supply, and receipts have been increasing. Although not as large as several months ago, they are considered good for this period of the year. The San Joaquin Valley and the coast towns have been shipping in more than expected, and this has strengthened the bears. Receipts yesterday were 12,600 pounds of local stock. Storage butter is cleaning up well, and it is expected to have the entire supply utilized within the next month.

The receipts of cheese were 1088 pounds. There is just sufficient of this commodity assured to keep prices at their present level. The arrivals have averaged 1000 pounds a day. There have been good offerings of several grades which as a rule receive little attention save through the retail trade, which demands extra fancy stock. Imported Swiss has been a trifle scarce, and Limburger is very firm. There have been some fair sales of full cream and storage cream is going slowly.

Dealers are being swamped by the unprecedented arrival of potatoes. Every farmer for miles about seems to consider this the best time to ship the spuds still on hand from the last harvest, and as a result receipts have been above the 5000 mark several times during the week. Yesterday 7087 sacks were reported in. This caused weakness in several varieties, particularly the Highlands and Early Rose. The latter have been coming in from the North in large quantities. Seed potatoes are in good demand, and planting has already commenced in several districts.

Yellow Danver onions advanced right along, and at the higher figures are selling well. Control of the greatest portion of the onion supply is in the hands of one company in this city, and it is partly due to its heavy holdings that prices have been advancing. Australian Browns are also higher, and the few Minnesota Red Globes in the market have very little effect on quotations. Receipts yesterday were only sixteen sacks.

Beans are weak at present. They have been arriving in heavy quantities, and yesterday receipts were 412 sacks. All grades and varieties are moving, but the demand is not as heavy as usual. Pinks and Limas have a good call, while small whites are always the leaders.

Sweet potatoes remain very firm and the demand, as a rule, is larger than the supply. The receipts for Saturday were the highest in several weeks and totaled 152 sacks. Most of these were of the yellow variety. A few red and some white sweet potatoes are to be had at fancy figures. Northerns are all selling well.

Cauliflower continues weak, while cabbage has strengthened on a good demand. The inquiry for bunch goods is nearly always the same, and fluctuations in prices seldom are heard of. Radishes and onions are in special demand at present. Rootabeks, kolarabi and oyster plants are plentiful. Beans are cheaper and peas remain low.

Citrus fruits all are weak in prices. Oranges are as low as $1 a box, while strictly fancy stock is held at only $1 more. There is a fair demand for lemons, which as a rule are very large. The unsized stock is selling from 75 cents to $1.25 per lug box. Tangerines are selling well.

There have been no fluctuations in poultry, and all lines are moving slowly. Hens and fryers have the principal call, while during the open season there is always an inquiry for game fowl. Rabbits are plentiful, and arrive in large quantities from Imperial Valley.

MARKET TAKES UPWARD TURN.

BANK STATEMENT PRODUCES AN EXCELLENT EFFECT.

In Addition, United States Steel Reports Improving Condition of Trade and Mercantile Houses Tell of Increasing Commercial Activity. Smelting Stocks Heavy.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—The stock market continued active on a strong bank statement today, although the return was not published until after the close of the market, according to the rule made permanent last fall. This was the principal sustaining force to prices. The most serious obstacle to the advancement was the heavy tone of American Smelting, which was heavily sold while prices elsewhere wereadvancing. Reading was the feature of strength. Speculative support of this stock was encouraged by the announcement of the agreement of the Department of Justice to refrain from enforcing pantleies agains the coal carriers under the law which goes into effect May 1. This alw forbids railroads to own commodities which make their traffic, and compliance with it by May 1 threatened serious embarrassment to the coal roads which own coal mines. The United States steel stocks also were strong with notable sympathetic effect on sentiment owing to the inference drawn of improving conditions in the trade.

Improved collections reported by the mercantile houses reviews and hopeful auguries drawn by the development of commercial activity were favoring influences on the market. Realizing was in progress side by side with New York buying, notably in Northern Pacific. The gain of upward of $26,000,000 in cash holding reported by the banks is a reveltaion of the extent to which hoarded funds are rushing back into banking deposits. The loaning power of the New York banks is thus expanded upward of $100,000,000.

The week's light loan expansion under the circumstances, seems moderate. The strong rise in foreign exchange, which continued today, with its intimation of possible gold exports, is not likely to arouse misgivings in the face of this showing. This cash gain compares favorably with the amount of this decrease in the week ending November 2 last in the stress of the panic, when cash holdings of the clearinghouse banks decreased $30,601,800. The gain in surplus reserves of $16,551,425 just falls short of the record which was made in the week ending May 28, 1904, with a gain of $16,688,050.

Bonds were steady. Total sales, par value, $2,362,000. U. S. 2's, regular, declined ½; coupons, ⅜, and the 3's ½ per cent. on call during the week.

New York Bank Statement.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—A tremendous flow of cash from banks throughout the country to the New York City banks was indicated today by the bank statement, which showed an increase of $26,185,800 in the amount of cash held by the New York clearinghouse institutions. This increase in cash is not a record one, but it is believed to approach within a few millions of the largest increase ever recorded in a single week in this city. Financiers declared that it showed clearly that the interior banks were entirely reassured by the showing last week when, for the first time since October, a surplus of reserves was established instead of the deficit which had long existed. In consequence, the interior banks were sending their surplus cash to New York. The statement of the clearinghouse banks for the week shows that the banks hold $22,625,475 more than the requirements of the 25-per-cent. reserve rule. This is an increase of $16,551,425 in the proportionate cash reserve, as compared with last week. The statement follows: Loans, $1,126,677,700; increase, $9,528,100. Deposits, $1,090,188,500; increase, $38,537,500. Circulation, $70,910,400; decrease, $1,384,900. Legal tenders, $66,155,400; increase, $3,891,100. Specie, $229,027,200; increase, $22,294,700. Reserve, $295,182,600; increase, $26,185,800. Reserve required, $272,547,125; increase, $9,634,375. Surplus, $22,625,475; increase, $16,551,415. Ex-United States deposits, $40,642,250; increase, $16,265,025.

New York Cotton Market.

[BY PRIVATE WIRE TO FRED DORR.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—The cotton market was easier and lower today, in spite of the fact that the visible supply statement was bullish, with a decrease of 15,000 bales, compared with an increase this time last year of 83,000 bales. Liverpool showed a hesitating tendency, at a decline in prices. Advices from abroad are none too encouraging, and it is believed that the famine in India and the low price of silver is curtailing trade with the Far Eastern markets.

Advices from New England stated that spinners were not going to be stampeded into buying, and that they would purchase only against contracts ahead for goods, and new orders were none too plentiful.

The Fort Worth, Tex., wire says that the advance has brought out considerable cotton and it is difficult to sell to Europe. Every buyer seems to be in the same position. Low grades cannot be given away at present. We believe that the wild stories of Sully's enormous financial backing are largely mythical, and if the facts were known, the market would have a collapse that would be immediate and complete. We believe the actual situation is against bulling cotton, and manipulation alone is responsible for the recent rise.

Hubbard says: "Think we are not likely to decline fully to meet Liverpool and expect pool support."

LOS ANGELES STOCK EXCHANGE.

BUSINESS DULL, STOCKS FIRM.

OFF DAY ON LOCAL 'CHANGE, BUT NO SLUMP.

Strong Closing Positions of Friday Maintained—Sales of Union "Off Board"—Weakness Exhibited by Associated—Other Oil Stocks Firm. Edison Preferred up.

Local stock market conditions of the Los Angeles Stock Exchange, while showing no decline from the firm position on Friday's close, were stagnant yesterday. No sales were made on the call on the general securities, the usual Saturday dullness having invaded the Stock Exchange, and it seemed that the brokers had no orders.

Union Oil held to the strong position of the close on Friday. It was quoted at 2.00@2.05, the asked price having been stiffened by the addition of three points, but no trade was reported. Considerable business is being transacted "off board" in this stock at prices ruling slightly better than the quotation market.

The close on Associated Oil was anything but pleasant for the bullish element in that stock, it being quoted at 30.00@31.50, showing one-fourth off on both prices as compared with the previous day. The support seems to have been withdrawn from the stock temporarily. Mexican Petroleum closed 1 point up at 1.23½ bid, with none offered. Continental Oil was wanted at 18, a rise of one point, the stock closing with the asked prices at 25. Central was quoted at 75@85 and Columbia at 80½@83. The remainder of the list was steady.

A slight decline was registered in Home preferred, the stock closing at 51.50@52.50. The bid for the Edison preferred issued was up two points at 74.00, while the offering was at 80.00, a rise of five points from the previous close. Others in the industrial list were unchanged. The bond list showed little activity, although offerings were numerous and bidding for the issues was better than on Friday. The bank stocks remained stationary.

Searchlight Western was the market leader in the mining stocks yesterday, a total of 20,000 shares changing hands at 1⅝@1⅞ on buyer sixty contracts. Johnnie opened on sales at 10¾, but strengthened slightly, and closed at 11¼@11⅝, after sales at 11½. Seller thirty stock was handled at 11⅝ and buyer thirty at 12@11½. Consolidated mines sold at 1¼. The remainder of the list was quiet.

LOS ANGELES-NEVADA EXCHANGE QUOTATIONS.

The closing quotations of the Nevada mining stocks, made yesterday on the Los Angeles-Nevada Mining Stock Exchange, ground floor of the H. W. Hellman building, Fourth and Spring streets, together with the regular call sales of the afternoon informal call, were as follows:

GENERAL EASTERN.

LONG HOLDERS FREE SELLERS.

SLUMP OCCURS IN THE PRICE OF WHEAT.

Market Is Weak During Entire Day, but Severe Break Does not Materialize Until Late in Session. Cold Weather Has Depressing Effect on Corn.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—Wheat price on the local exchange declined more than 2 cents today, because of free selling by long holders. At the close May option was off 2 1-4@2 1-8; corn was 1 cent lower, oats were down 5-8@3-4, and provisions were 2 1-2@6-8 to 10 cents lower. The wheat market was weak the entire day, but the severe break in prices did not materialize until late in the session. The market opened easy, owing to moderate offerings by pit traders, who were influenced by the continued liberal movements in the northwest. The market closed weak, with prices almost at the bottom. May opened 1-8 to 3-8 lower, at 104 3-8@104 5-8, sold off to 102, and closed at 102 1-8@102 1-4. Clearances of wheat and flour were equal to 695,000 bushels. Primary receipts were 720,000 bushels, compared with 347,000 bushels the corresponding day last year. Minneapolis, Duluth and Chicago reported receipts of 480 cars, against 390 cars last week, and 228 cars a year ago.

Cold weather and the break in wheat had a depressing effect on the corn market, which closed weak; May opened 1-8 to 1-4 lower to 60 3-4@60 7-8, sold off to 60; where it closed.

Trade in oats was dull and featureless; May opened at 1-8@1-4 lower, at 54 1-2; sold at 54 5-8 and then declined to 54, the closing price.

Provisions were rather inactive, and sentiment was inclined to be bearish. At the close May pork was off 10 at 13.27 1-2; lard was 2 1-2@5 lower at 7.00; ribs were 7 1-2@10 lower at 7.05.

Cash quotations were as follows: Flour was quiet and barely steady; winter patents, 4.50@4.90; straights, 4.25@4.70; spring patents, 5.30@5.75; straights, 4.50@5.10; bakers, 3.30@3.40; No. 2 spring wheat, 1.10@1.11; No. 3, 98@1.10; No. 2 red, 97@1.00¼; No. 2 corn, 59; No. 2 yellow, 62@62½; No. 2 oats, 50; No. 3 white, 49½@52; No. 2 rye, 82; fair to choice malting barley, 85@96; No. 1 northwestern flaxseed, 1.19½; prime timothy seed, 4.40; clover, contract grades, 17.00; short ribs, sides (loose,) 6.62½@6.87½; mess pork, per bbl., 12.75@12.87½; lard, per 100 lbs., 7.72½; short clear sides (boxed,) 6.75@8.00; whisky, basis of high wines, 1.35.

LOS ANGELES-NEVADA EXCHANGE.

TRANSFERS NEAR MILLION MARK.

VOLUME AND VALUE RECORDS SMASHED LAST WEEK.

Yesterday's Market Showed Further Material Advance—Daisy Shorts Hike for the Brush—Merger at Six Dollars—Johnnie's Pulse Is Still Lower.

Contrary to all traditions which govern the local market immediately folowing a sharp bulge, trading at the single session of the Los Angeles-Nevada Stock Exchange yesterday was maintained at high pressure with a sharp advance all along the line so far as Goldfields were concerned.

Early advices showed that San Francisco was on the bull side and local traders were only too glad to climb into the band wagon and help the good work along. The advance seems to be founded on a firm basis and it is the general opinion that all the possible adverse happenings in the camp have been thoroughly discounted and that the advanced prices and optimistic feeling have both come home to roost for some time to come.

Cheaper leasing issues are raising their heads from the slough of forgetfulness in which they have been submerged for so long and several appear to be in good demand. Other new leasing issues have raised a considerable amount of capital in the city during the past few days and the fever of activity seems to have attacked small and large operators alike.

Daisy was again the center of concerted speculation yesterday, and the net result of a sharp brush between the longs and the shorts was an ignominious retreat to the tall timber on the part of the latter. The short interest here has always been extensive and many a scalper has raised bread and butter by the daily trading. Just what they are going to do on a sustained bull market remains to be seen, but it is said that there are only 60,000 shares outside of an ironclad pool and some one is likely to feel a stout club if past tactics are continued. Prices opened ten clear points up from Friday's last sale, but the bears hated to give way and forced the price back to 1.17. The opposition would not be denied, however, and the session closed with a strong demand at 1.20 after one sale had been recorded at two points higher.

Consolidated is held very closely and the sharp advance of the past few days has not had the effect of shaking out many loose holdings. Only sixty shares were traded in, but the quotation showed a net gain of forty-five points from previous sales. Board lot offerings were chalked up, at the close, at 6.00.

Combination Fraction was in some demand at a point above previous sales and closed the day strong with total transfers of 1200 shares. Jumbo Extension also took a stack of chips in the game of advance and showed on the sales sheet with transfers of 1700 shares at from 50@61, a maximum gain of seven points from the last sale recorded on Friday. Florence, too, responded to the prevailing bull movement and went to $4.70 on sales of 500 shares—a net advance of 27½ points from previous sales.

Johnnie appears to be a very sick boy and has fallen into the coal chute with every prospect of landing in the cellar. The support which was manifest earlier in the week, when inside interests threw a large amount on the market, appears to have been withdrawn suddenly and completely, and, although previous selling interests made a feeble effort to sustain the market, the day closed with total sales of 21,000 shares and a net loss of ¾c from the previous day. First sale took place at 12, but the quotation went through fractional recessions in quick order and seemed to find temporary bottom at last at 10¾. The last sales showed a slight improvement at 11¼.

Atlanta showed some popularity at 25, Blue Bull was up at 1½, Red Hills sold at 42, Nevada Hills at 2.3 and Montgomery Mountain was up six points at 18. Of cheap issues Milltown Fraction is still in the lead with transfers of 33,000 shares at former prices, California Hills, Eureka, Blue Bell, Gen. Washington and a few others were in some demand, while Florence Leasing & Mining showed additional strength at 7½.

Last week's list of sales and volume smashed all records heretofore established by the institution. The list shows total transfers of 930,539 shares of a total value of $124,804.25, as against 510,925 shares and $65,981.12 for the previous week, which established a record up till that time. What is even more important is the fact that the market, except in a few isolated cases, closed at the high levels of the week. Consolidated shows a net advance of $1.17½ with sales of 3570 shares and a value of $18,450. Daisy added $28,329.50 to values with transfers of 23,400 shares and a net gain of 34 points; Florence showed with 2500 shares at $15,577.50 and an advance of 75 points; Combination was responsible for $8898 for 12,300 shares with a net gain of eight points, while Jumbo Extension was traded in to the extent of 4300 shares, of a value of $2455, and a net gain for the week of eight points.

It is apparent that some one is getting out from under Johnnie, the sales sheet showing transfers of 279,500 of a value of $48,825. This issue shows the only serious recession of the week with a net loss of 3¾ points. No authentic news has been received from the mill and the public seems to have withdrawn all interest in the stock.

Milltown Fraction took second place for volume of business transacted with total sales of 204,000 at $8075. There is a general air of activity and optimism prevailing and several seats have been transferred during the week. Interests behind the establishment of another stock exchange in San Francisco have been investigating the local clearinghouse system, which is considered as perfect as any in the country.

COMPLETE BANK MERGER.

The Miners' & Merchants' bank absorbed the business of the Pacific Savings Bank through a deal concluded late last night. Through this transaction the Pacific Savings bank is liquidated, and retires from the banking field, the commercial institution taking over its assets, loans, notes and deposits, and settling with the stockholders pro rata. About $132,000 was turned over in the deal. This will now give the Miners' & Merchants' bank a total of $325,000 in deposits. All the savings bank's officials retire from financial matters in Los Angeles, only the cashier of the merged bank going over to the enlarged institution. He is V. L. Soule, who will take a place as an employee with the Miners' & Merchants, and probably later will be advanced to the position of assistant cashier.

FACTS AND PROOFS

DISPEL THE DOUBTS OF THE MOST SKEPTICAL—THE GREAT FER-DON PRESENTS A CONVINCING ARRAY OF PROOFS TO SHOW THAT THE TREATMENTS OF THE EUROPEAN MEDICAL EXPERTS REALLY CURE.

The Great Fer-Don, who for the past two months has been busy introducing into Los Angeles the famous line of Fer-Don Remedies and who brought with him the European Medical Experts and Bloodless Surgeons, is a man who believes in forwarding proofs of all his claims. When first he came to this city, he told the people just what they might expect in the way of beneficial results from the use of his remedies and the treatments of the European Medical Experts. He told them that in less than two weeks' time he would present facts, names and addresses of those who were cured by the European treatments.

And he kept his word. From his platform at the corner of Seventh and Spring streets he has given names of dozens of benefited and cured persons. He has had dozens come upon the platform and in less than three minutes' time they have been relieved of deafness and other ailments of years' standing in less than three minutes' time. He has asked no one to believe his unsupported word, but to ask for and get proofs, which would be gladly furnished. On file in the offices of the European Medical Experts are names of thousands who testify to the benefits received.

GALL STONES REMOVED.

Capt. Vivian Edwards, known as the man with the goats, the man who sells peanuts from the goat wagon, tells a remarkable story of his recovery from gall stones. Mr. Edwards was in so great pain that for two nights he was unable to sleep or to lie still. A friend who had heard of the Medical Experts came to their offices at 745 South Main street, and told of Mr. Edwards's trouble and gave the symptoms. The doctors diagnosed the case as gall stones and sent by the friend three doses of medicine. "At the first dose," said Mr. Edwards, afterward in a public statement, "I felt as though I was receiving a shock of electricity. But it certainly felt good and I was relieved of much of the pain. At the third dose there were expelled from my system a double handful of gall stones, and to my great surprise not only are the gall stones gone, but I am more free from pain than I have been for forty years."

Richard McClaren, who lives at 698 Hope street, is another who tells of his remarkable relief from gall stones. This gentleman had long been a sufferer and had tried many doctors without relief. Three doses of a peculiar preparation he was relieved from pain and relieved from gall stones.

Mrs. Bremner of San Gabriel heard of the treatments of the European Medical Experts and called at their office for a consultation. Three doses of medicine, and she, too, was relieved of many gall stones. In none of these cases was a knife used, or was any operation made, for these Bloodless Surgeons treat such cases, not with the knife, but with their latest European Treatments which do away with all operations.

MORE PROOF.

In the case of tumors removed without the knife the names of many here in Los Angeles might be given. Among those prominent is Mrs. Jack Rowell of 303 Central avenue. Mrs. Rowell came upon the platform at the free show grounds at the corner of Seventh and Spring streets, and in a very few minutes' time, with the aid of a peculiar prescription, the tumor was removed. There was no knife used, no blood and no pain.

Mr. L. C. Clark of 630 Clover street was another who was relieved from tumor in plain view of thousands by the methods of the European Medical Experts. He, dreading the surgeon's knife, grasped at the offer of these Experts as a drowning man rasps at a straw. Upon the platform of the Great Fer-Don his bloodless operation was witnessed by thousands, and it was so completely successful that there was no blood and no pain.

STILL MORE PROOF.

Mr. C. M. Thurman, who lives at 842 South Broadway, tells of his remarkable recovery from a complication of stomach and liver trouble by the treatment of the European Medical Experts.

Miss Nellie Owens, 521 Maple avenue, is another who ascribes her relief from stomach and liver complaint to the treatments of these physicians.

Mr. William Heck, proprietor of the California Market, North Fair Oaks avenue, Pasadena, was relieved of a monster tapeworm by one dose of medicine given him by the European Medical Experts.

Kid Bernstein, the well-known prize fighter, who is now looking for a match in Los Angeles, is loud in his praise of the treatment of these doctors. One dose of their medicine removed from his system a tapeworm scores of feet in length.

OFFER EXPIRES FEBRUARY 1st.

DINNER-DANCE AT THE BIVOUAC.

Last Friday evening "The Bivouac," the Westlake home of Gen. Harrison Gray Otis, was the scene of an animated and happy affair, the entertainment having been given by the host in honor of a group of young people.

The dining-room and the entire house were ablaze with light and color. The table decorations, under the deft and skillful touch of an obliging neighbor, Mrs. Jefferson D. Gibbs, were most effective, including a lovely basket of Cecil Bruner roses and maidenhair ferns, with roses and ferns scattered over the cloth. The candelabra were decorated with pink candles and rose-tinted shades. Exquisite little bonbon baskets, rose trimmed, were placed by each plate. The place cards bearing the initial of the host, were done in gold. Throughout the other rooms were floral decorations in poinsettias, carnations and greenery.

Following the dinner came the dance. The gay-hearted guests invaded "The Bivouac's" new and capacious den, where they enjoyed hours of delightful music, dancing and conversation, besides listening to a reading by the host from "California Where Sets the Sun." The music embraced both instrumental and vocal—Mrs. Charles Wellington Rand giving two numbers in her delightful manner and charming voice.

The young girls were chaperoned by the two gracious matrons named, and the list of invited guests included the following, all of whom were present except two: Misses Frances Chandler, Mae Chandler, Marian Otis McPherron, Arnie McPherron, Lilian Rand, Ruth Morris, Edith Gibbs, Otis Booth, Charles W. Rand, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Warr (visitors from the north,) and the two chaperones already mentioned. The party broke up at a late hour, happy, hilarious and jocund.

SHOW THEIR COLORS.

Hundreds of Persons March in Business Men's Religious Parade and Attend Midnight Meeting.

The business men's gospel campaign rounded up the week with a great street demonstration last night between 10 and 11 o'clock, and spent the last hour of the day in a most enthusiastic meeting at Monarch Rink.

Between 500 and 600 men and women joined the procession, which was formed at the rink at the close of the regular evening meeting. Led by a band, the line of march was north on Hill street to Fifth, east on Fifth to Main, north on Main to the Plaza, circling the Plaza, and south by Main and Spring streets to Fourth, thence to the rink on Hill street.

Fully 150 women were in the procession, and probably the height of enthusiasm was reached in the case of a woman who pushed in front of her over the entire route, her baby strapped in a carriage. Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers, being desirous of having a part in the parade, were taken in an automobile.

The meeting at the rink was led by T. C. Horton. Col. Miles made a short address, and there was much good singing, accompanied by many "hallelujahs" and other fervent exclamations.

Today Col. Miles of Chicago, who has been placed in charge of the Salvation Army on the Coast, will speak in Central Park at 1:45, and at 2:30, and 7:30 in the rink. Mrs. Miles will conduct the women's meeting in the rink this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

GOOD NEWS FOR VENTURANS.

President Says Sulphur Law Will Be Revoked Pending an Investigation. Lemon Growing Popular.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

VENTURA, Jan. 18.—Congressman Smith wired from Washington today that he had seen the President in regard to the sulphuring of dried fruits, and that the latter signified his intention of appointing a commission, outside the pure-food bureau, to examine into the matter and that, meantime, the order for the use of only .035 per cent. of sulphur would be revoked. This will be good news to the fruit men of this county, who saw ruin staring them in the face.

The owners of the Calkins tract of 100 acres, near Fillmore, will set it to lemons. It lies north of the pumping plant, and between the country road and the Southern Pacific tracks. Many hundreds of acres in this county have been devoted to lemons, and many more hundreds will be so used next season.

NO PROSECUTIONS.

N. B. Smith, a prominent apricot grower of this section, has written to Prof. Jaffa of the State Board of Health, asking if there would be any penalty attaching to fruit growers who marketed last year's apricot crop. In reply the professor writes: "With reference to you, or any one else having dried apricots on hand or disposing of the same, I will say that there will be no prosecution by the State authorities. You are right in thinking that no action will be taken with reference to the product dried during the season of 1907. Just what will be done with the product of the season of 1908 has not been decided as yet."

Rufus Henry Binns, a pioneer of this city, and a native of England, died suddenly at his home on Ventura avenue last night. He was sitting in a chair and talking to a neighbor, when the summons came. On the same date, two years ago, his elder brother died suddenly, and under similar circumstances. Mr. Binns leaves a widow and one son, Clarence. The funeral will be held at the Methodist Church on Sunday afternoon.

DIVORCE AND ALIMONY.

Lennie Coultas of Oxnard was yesterday granted an interlocutory decree of divorce from Charles C. Coultas on the ground of habitual drunkenness. She was awarded the custody of the two minor children, and $30 a month alimony.

TO CONTEST WILL.

Public Administrator Frank Bryson will contest the olographic will of Susie Larson Hughes, who died December 6 at the home of Mrs. Ollie Musgrave, Roxbury street, leaving about $3000 worth of diamonds and wearing apparel which by a will, purporting to be in her own handwriting, and witnessed by a Dr. W. J. Murphy, unknown to the authorities, is left to Mrs. Ollie Musgrave, Mrs. S. B. Hughes, and Katherine Murphy, while her mother, Mrs. Mamie Larson of Oakland, is cut off with $1. Relatives suspect that the will was obtained by undue influence.

DINNER-DANCE AT THE BIVOUAC.

Last Friday evening "The Bivouac," the Westlake home of Gen. Harrison Gray Otis, was the scene of an animated and happy affair, the entertainment having been given by the host in honor of a group of young people.

The dining-room and the entire house were ablaze with light and color. The table decorations, under the deft and skillful touch of an obliging neighbor, Mrs. Jefferson D. Gibbs, were most effective, including a lovely basket of Cecil Bruner roses and maidenhair ferns, with roses and ferns scattered over the cloth. The candelabra were decorated with pink candles and rose-tinted shades. Exquisite little bonbon baskets, rose trimmed, were placed by each plate. The place cards bearing the initial of the host, were done in gold. Throughout the other rooms were floral decorations in poinsettias, carnations and greenery.

Following the dinner came the dance. The gay-hearted guests invaded "The Bivouac's" new and capacious den, where they enjoyed hours of delightful music, dancing and conversation, besides listening to a reading by the host from "California Where Sets the Sun." The music embraced both instrumental and vocal—Mrs. Charles Wellington Rand giving two numbers in her delightful manner and charming voice.

The young girls were chaperoned by the two gracious matrons named, and the list of invited guests included the following, all of whom were present except two: Misses Frances Chandler, Mae Chandler, Marian Otis McPherron, Arnie McPherron, Lilian Rand, Ruth Morris, Edith Gibbs, Otis Booth, Charles W. Rand, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Warr (visitors from the north,) and the two chaperones already mentioned. The party broke up at a late hour, happy, hilarious and jocund.

SHOW THEIR COLORS.

Hundreds of Persons March in Business Men's Religious Parade and Attend Midnight Meeting.

The business men's gospel campaign rounded up the week with a great street demonstration last night between 10 and 11 o'clock, and spent the last hour of the day in a most enthusiastic meeting at Monarch Rink.

Between 500 and 600 men and women joined the procession, which was formed at the rink at the close of the regular evening meeting. Led by a band, the line of march was north on Hill street to Fifth, east on Fifth to Main, north on Main to the Plaza, circling the Plaza, and south by Main and Spring streets to Fourth, thence to the rink on Hill street.

Fully 150 women were in the procession, and probably the height of enthusiasm was reached in the case of a woman who pushed in front of her over the entire route, her baby strapped in a carriage. Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the blind singers, being desirous of having a part in the parade, were taken in an automobile.

The meeting at the rink was led by T. C. Horton. Col. Miles made a short address, and there was much good singing, accompanied by many "hallelujahs" and other fervent exclamations.

Today Col. Miles of Chicago, who has been placed in charge of the Salvation Army on the Coast, will speak in Central Park at 1:45, and at 2:30, and 7:30 in the rink. Mrs. Miles will conduct the women's meeting in the rink this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

GOOD NEWS FOR VENTURANS.

President Says Sulphur Law Will Be Revoked Pending an Investigation. Lemon Growing Popular.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

VENTURA, Jan. 18.—Congressman Smith wired from Washington today that he had seen the President in regard to the sulphuring of dried fruits, and that the latter signified his intention of appointing a commission, outside the pure-food bureau, to examine into the matter and that, meantime, the order for the use of only .035 per cent. of sulphur would be revoked. This will be good news to the fruit men of this county, who saw ruin staring them in the face.

The owners of the Calkins tract of 100 acres, near Fillmore, will set it to lemons. It lies north of the pumping plant, and between the country road and the Southern Pacific tracks. Many hundreds of acres in this county have been devoted to lemons, and many more hundreds will be so used next season.

NO PROSECUTIONS.

N. B. Smith, a prominent apricot grower of this section, has written to Prof. Jaffa of the State Board of Health, asking if there would be any penalty attaching to fruit growers who marketed last year's apricot crop. In reply the professor writes: "With reference to you, or any one else having dried apricots on hand or disposing of the same, I will say that there will be no prosecution by the State authorities. You are right in thinking that no action will be taken with reference to the product dried during the season of 1907. Just what will be done with the product of the season of 1908 has not been decided as yet."

Rufus Henry Binns, a pioneer of this city, and a native of England, died suddenly at his home on Ventura avenue last night. He was sitting in a chair and talking to a neighbor, when the summons came. On the same date, two years ago, his elder brother died suddenly, and under similar cricumstances. Mr. Binns leaves a widow and one son, Clarence. The funeral will be held at the Methodist Church on Sunday afternoon.

DIVORCE AND ALIMONY.

Lennie Coultas of Oxnard was yesterday granted an interlocutory decree of divorce from Charles C. Coultas on the ground of habitual drunkenness. She was awarded the custody of the two minor children, and $30 a month alimony.

TO CONTEST WILL.

Public Administrator Frank Bryson will contest the olographic will of Susie Larson Hughes, who died December 6 at the home of Mrs. Ollie Musgrave, Roxbury street, leaving about $3000 worth of diamonds and wearing apparel which by a will, purporting to be in her own handwriting, and witnessed by a Dr. W. J. Murphy, unknown to the authorities, is left to Mrs. Ollie Musgrave, Mrs. S. B. Hughes, and Katherine Murphy, while her mother, Mrs. Mamie Larson of Oakland, is cut off with $1. Relatives suspect that the will was obtained by undue influence.

HER DAUGHTER DISINHERITED.

Mystery in Hate of Mother for Her Child.

Latter Now Suing to Break One-Sided Will.

In Contest Notice Charges Are Made.

War has broken out in the courts because Ann Smith cut her only daughter off with a bequest of $1 out of an estate of $25,000 or more.

Mrs. Annie Butler Niklas of Los Angeles is the daughter, and she has filed a contest of the will of her mother in the Probate Court, in which she makes a number of startling allegations and charges Joseph Scott, attorney, with influencing her mother in favor of the Catholic church in the bequests made, also that he drew up the will, and had it signed by a witness not in the presence of the decedent. The case will come up Wednesday before Judge Riyes.

Mrs. Smith, who was the widow of Patrick Smith, left two children, Mrs. Niklas and Thomas Butler, who are favorably known in Catholic circles in Los Angeles. They are the children of her first marriage. In her will, which is dated March 21, 1906, Mrs. Smith leaves $5000 to the son and only $1 to the daughter. The will is signed by a cross, and attested as witnesses by J. N. Wenger, Jr., and Ida McClure.

Apparently to forestall any contest, the first clause in the will asserts that the testatrix is not acting under "duress, menace, fraud or undue influence of any person whatsoever." Then it disposes of the estate, of which $500 goes for a headstone.

BEQUESTS MADE.

To her brother, Dennis Tivenan of Louisville, Ky., is left $500. Then follow the bequests to the son and daughter. To the Sister of Charity is left a bequest of $200.

Then follows a clause in which her executor is instructed to distribute among the clergy of Los Angeles, for masses for the repose of the souls of herself and her deceased husband, Patrick Smith, $500; also $300 more to be distributed in the same way for the repose of the souls of the father, mother, brothers and sisters of Patrick Smith. Her own relatives are neglected in this regard.

All the balance of the estate, or nearly $20,000, she leaves to the executor of the will, to be distributed, share and share alike, among the children of her brother in Louisville. Her attorney, Joseph Scott, is made executor.

Mrs. Smith died in Los Angeles on November 27 last, and before the will was filed, Thomas Butler, the son, filed a petition in the Probate Court for letters of administration. Then followed a petition for probate of the will by the executor, represented by Attorneys Anderson and Anderson.

READY TO FIGHT.

Now comes the daughter, through her attorney, F. S. Yager, with a notice of the contest of the will on a number of grounds which mean a most bitter fight in court over the estate. It is stated that the brother, Mr. Butler, has asserted that he would not "stand for such injustice to his sister." They are joining in the fight to break the will, and the sister prays the court to make her brother administrator.

It is not that the children oppose so much the bequests to the clergy of Los Angeles for masses for the repose of the various souls, but for what they claim is the injustice done them in the general distribution of the bulk of the estate to cousins, while one of them is practically disinherited, and the only son receives a comparatively small amount.

In her notice of contest Mrs. Niklas asserts that the will sought to be probated is not the last will of her mother, and adds: "Nor was her name subscribed thereto in her presence or by her direction by some other person and subscription was not made in the presence of the attesting witnesses."

Continuing the daughter states that at the time of the signing of the alleged will her mother was not of sound or disposing mind and was influenced and an unfair advantage was taken of her weakness of mind by a person or persons in a confidential relation to her. That she was feeble in body and suffering from a complication of diseases and the effect was to weaken and impair all her faculties and that in such condition she was:

MAKES CHARGES.

"Easily wrought upon by and influenced and induced by Joseph Scott, her attorney and would-be-executor, whose zeal for the Catholic church caused him to influence decedent, and appeared to be greater than his love of justice and caused him to take a greater interest in the temporal welfare of the Catholic church than in doing justice to the children of the deceased, and who influenced decedent to devise large sums of money to the Catholic clergy of Los Angeles for masses for the repose of the soul of the deceased and her deceased husband, Patrick Smith, and for the repose of the soul of the father, mother, brothers and sisters of Patrick Smith, deceased."

Continuing, Mrs. Niklas asserts that the will was drawn by Joseph Scott and taken to the store of J. N. Wenger, Jr., one of the alleged witnesses; "who at the request of said Attorney Scott, signed his name thereto as a witness."

The daughter also makes the charge in support of the contention that her mother was incapable of making a legal will that she had, "unfortunately become a victim of alcoholism," and that for three years prior to the time of making the "purported will" was addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors which "impaired her mental capacity."

In conclusion, Mrs. Niklas denies that she or her brother tried to conceal the will at the time of her mother's death and she asks the court to deny the probate of the will and that her brother be made administrator of the estate.

MYSTERY OF HATE.

Back of this fight for her share of her mother's property there is the mystery of a curious hatred by Mrs. Smith for her only daughter, the reason for which friends of the latter say that even she herself cannot guess at. That it was not over her marriage, but for some deeper and unknown cause which prejudiced the mind of the

A LITTLE TOO GREEN.

Property Man Thinks Elysian Park Was Established to Supply Him With Scenery.

Because he attempted to transplant much of the elysian scenery to the Belasco Theater yesterday morning, R. E. Marke was arrested, charged with defacing the trees in public parks. He was arraigned in the Police Court and held for trial tomorrow.

The second scene in this week's production calls for rural decoration. Yesterday morning was decided upon as a good time to secure enough greenery to last through the ten performances.

Marke said he knew a place where the country was dotted with natural stage scenery, and he got on a wagon and started for it. It happened to be on a little knoll in Elysian Park, where a recent Arbor Day celebration had left a grove of beautiful little oaks awaiting the sunshine of nature to develop them into monarchs of the forest. Marke uprooted the trees and piled them in his wagon, preparatory to bringing them to Main street to make their début.

He did not get far with the wagonload. A park officer jumped him, and R. E. Marke had R. E. Morse before he got through. He was driven to the Police Station, and the scenery for the second act went along as an exhibit.

Marke was taken before Justice Chambers. The justice went to the window in his courtroom and wondered what recent ordinance he could have ruled on regarding Elysian Park that should have caused the trees to rise up like Birnham wood and haunt him at the Police Station.

Marke deposited $10 bail, and was allowed to take part of the scenery.

CHURCH PATH TOO NARROW.

New Light Hits Old Beau of Ruby Casselman.

Step Not Due to Her Plight, Says Ezra Knopf.

Just Couldn't Tolerate the Denominational Idea.

On the heels of the second arrest of Ruby Casselman, the mysterious girl whose many forgeries apparently have paved her way to the penitentiary, comes the announcement that Ezra C. Knopf, her former admirer, a prominent Sunday-school worker, has severed his connection with the First Methodist Church and with the We Boys class, in which he at one time was quite prominent.

Knopf denies that his old-time association with Miss Casselman had anything to do with his retirement from the church and Sunday-school. He has quit, he says, because these institutions have become too narrow to conform with his religious beliefs; or, rather, that his beliefs have become too broad.

As to the girl-forger, Knopf says he has seen her but a few times since first she got in trouble through the forgery of checks, more than a year ago.

Up to that time, he admits, he was exceedingly attentive to her. It is said, though, that when she became entangled in the forgery scrapes, he apparently forgot she ever existed. He seemingly takes no interest in her present troubles.

"I realized that we could not marry," said Knopf yesterday, "and decided that we would better part. I have seen Miss Casselman but a few times in the last year, then only to speak to her in passing on the street."

WORKS NEAR CHURCH.

Knopf is a lapidary, and has a shop at No. 315 West Sixth street, just a step from the First Methodist Church, with which he was connected for about five years.

He seems to be deeply steeped in his religious beliefs, and considers that in withdrawing from his Sunday-school and church affiliations he has done the one thing to keep his conscience clear.

At the time Miss Casselman first came into notoriety as a clever forger, she was quite well known as a Sunday-school worker. Knopf's associates knew of the regard in which he had held her up to that time, and there was great surprise at the actions of the young woman when she had been so long under the influences of so earnest a worker for good.

That Knopf was not blamed for suddenly casting the girl aside after she fell into evil ways was made evident by the fact that he was elected treasurer of the Epworth League, subsequent to the events that led to her incarceration, and later to her release on parole by the court.

For many months thereafter, Knopf remained as a member of the church and of "We Boys" class. As a member of the Epworth League, he was prominent as a street speaker. Often he led street meetings, and gained a reputation as an exhorter.

GIRL IN BACKGROUND.

All this time Miss Casselman was in the background. She had been on trial for forgery, and had been found guilty, but a considerate judge had decided that the greatest justice would be done her if she were permitted to go free on parole. She seemingly had dropped from Knopf's life. He was leading street prayer meetings. She was with friends, apparently behaving herself.

Then came the girl's fall from grace. She was caught at a bank in an attempt to pass more forged checks. She was arrested, and now is in the County

MOUNTAIN BEDS.

"BABY" TREES ON JOURNEY.

Moving Government Nursery to Lytle Creek.

Henniger Flats Site to Be Deserted Ere Long.

How Rangers and Sun Open Pine Cones.

Forest rangers are engaged in the task of moving the reserve nursery at Henniger Flats, near Pasadena, to Lytle Creek in the San Bernardino Mountains. No new trees will be planted at the old site and, as soon as those now growing are large enough to transplant, it will be deserted entirely.

The experiment of raising trees for the reforestation of the mountains has proved entirely satisfactory and it has been determined to continue the work on a larger scale. For that reason the move to Lytle Creek is being made.

The new site is easily accessible by wagon road and the government owns its water supply. At Henniger Flats it was necessary to buy water, no small item in the expense of running the nursery. Furthermore, all supplies had to be carried in on pack animals, there being no road of sufficient width to accommodate even a small wagon. A fine road leads to Lytle Creek, and, in consequence, the cost of delivering supplies will be much less.

Though the nursery at Henniger Flats is under the direct supervision of Forest Supervisor R. H. Charlton, the man actually in charge is Forest Expert S. Y. Parnay. Under his care are all the planting beds, and young trees and he is responsible for latter until they are turned over to the rangers for planting.

Government experts are experimenting with different varieties of trees suitable to high altitude in the hope of assisting nature in her work of keeping the mountains green.

Some species of pine have cones which are exceedingly hard to open and these require more drastic treatment. The cones of the "Knob Cone" pine under normal conditions, will not open for 100 years after they have matured. These grow out from the trunk of the tree itself, instead of pendant from the branches, and frequently are almost covered by the growing bark before their time of opening comes.

In order to open these it is necessary to place them in an oven in which for days an even heat is kept. Unless the cones are carefully watched they are liable to be ruined in the opening as the heat will render the seeds unfertile if they are exposed to it after the sheathes begin to spread. The seeds are sown in shallow drills.

All of the conifers require more or less shade during the first year and therefore the beds are provided with shelters which keep the direct rays of the sun from beating down on the young sprouts. In this way the seeds are allowed to germinate under the same conditions as if they were scattered broadcast from the parent tree.

When the young sprouts are one year old they are transplanted, being set far enough apart to have full opportunity to grow—usually about four inches.

ROOTS GROW RAPIDLY.

After the trees have been in the transplant bed for two years they are ready to be taken up and set out. They are then about one foot tall. During the first few years the roots grow very rapidly and, where trees are not transplanted at the end of the first year, the roots frequently become so long that it is impossible to transplant them. In one three-year old, dug up a short time ago, the roots were found to have attained a spread of six feet.

An important step lately taken is the decision to plant the eucalyptus in certain sections and at Lytle Creek there will be established beds for the growing of these trees from the seed. Heretofore the planting has been limited almost entirely to the conifers but it is thought that, in certain localities, the eucalyptus will do fully as well and, owing to the fact that they grow much more rapidly, they can be raised with less trouble.

In addition, there will be grown in the Lytle Creek nursery the Jeffrey and Coulter pines, incense cedar and cedaris deodaris. These are the trees that have been found the most generally desirable.

The system adopted by the forest service to propagate the conifers is a thorough one. To the rangers themselves falls the greater part of the work, for they have not only to collect the seeds, but also to plant the young trees when they are delivered by the nurserymen.

The pine tree is the one that is most used and it is in its propagation that the greatest energy is expended. The rangers collect the cones and take them to their cabins where they are either opened or stored until a sufficient number has been secured to turn over to the nursery station.

The cones grow high up in the trees and the rangers generally shoot them off with their rifles. All expert shots, the men knock them down without injuring them in the least and thus save themselves the trouble of climbing the thorn-protected trunks.

The cones are then set out on the ground in rows so that the sun can get at them. The heat causes the bone-like shells to open, thereby discharging the seeds. These seeds are preserved until the spring, when they are planted in beds.

In planting the trees finally, two rangers work together, one of them digging the holes and the other putting in the trees. They are able to plant 500 trees in a day, providing that the ground is cleared.

One of the greatest pests with which the local forest officials have to contend is the rabbit. These little animals will gnaw the bark of a young tree and soon cause its death. The trees are therefore sprayed with strychnine, which assures a quick death to the bunny who takes a nibble.

THOUSAND TREES TO ACRE.

In planting, the forestry officials plant about 1000 trees to the acre, where the ground has been cleared. The trees cost about 7 cents each when ready for planting and for setting them out $10 an acre is counted. This latter figure includes the cost of clearing the ground, which is the greatest expense.

At Henniger Flats nursery there are usually about 500,000 young trees growing. At Lytle Creek there will be room

EXPLORATION.

GAME AND TREASURE THIS PARTY HUNTS.

Gen. Chaffee, Gen. Sherman and Friends Have Novel Adventures Down the Colorado and Gulf on an Unusual Expedition.

GEN. ADNA R. CHAFFEE, Gen. M. H. Sherman and a party of friends returned to the city yesterday from a fortnight's hunting and exploring trip down the Colorado River from Yuma to the Cannibal Islands in the Gulf of California, up the Hardy River to the head of navigation, and across the delta of the Colorado to the slopes of the Cocopah Mountains.

They came home browned from exposure to the southern wind and sun, bringing with them rare trophies of the chase from what they unite in calling the finest hunting grounds in all North America.

Adventures were not lacking; they were stranded on a desert island in the Gulf of California, they were housed at night to ward off an attack from renegade Indians only to find the attacking party was a colony of beavers at work; in the Hardy River they found an abandoned schooner the idle sport of wind and wave; they passed through a thrilling experience with what might have been the original of Jules Verne's floating island; with their Indian guides they chased wild boar through the jungles along the Hardy, and hunted bear in the Cocopahs; they visited a valley of geysers almost equal to those of the Yellowstone; one member of the party asserts that he found traces of the lost schooner Arno which sank in the Colorado in 1859, carrying with her 150 barrels of rare Kentucky whisky which has been aging in the wood ever since, and is now worth a King's ransom.

From Yuma to the mouth of the Colorado River the party traveled in the steamer Searchlight, chartered by Gen. Sherman. W. H. Holabird, one of the voyagers, gives the following list of guests in his log:

The guests comprised several gentlemen well-known throughout the nation, chief of whom was Lieut.-Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, U.S.A. (retired;) Maj. John H. Norton, who won his title in the exciting times that prevailed during the early history of the Territory of Arizona; Capt. Jack A. Mellon, who is perhaps the best posted man regarding the personnel of the army officers and explorers of Arizona during the last decade now living; O. F. Brant, who is also a general, having received that title from the corporation well-known in financial circles of Los Angeles, and Tom Silsbee, known everywhere as a frontiersman and a pathfinder of more than ordinary ability and geniality.

ROMANTIC VOYAGE.

During the day they steamed slowly down the tortuous channel of the Colorado. At night the Indian guides built great bonfires on the wooded slopes of the river and there they gathered about the campfire and lived over again in romantic narrative some of the stirring periods of the early settlement and development of the far West. Gen. Chaffee, Gen. Sherman and Maj. Norton were comrades in Arizona during the epoch-making decade in the history of that territory a quarter of a century ago.

Grouped about their campfire the second night down the river they marched in their imagination with Gen. Chaffee and the American troops through the heart of China to the great walled city of Peking at the time when the Boxer uprising was at its zenith. Then they toiled over the death-dealing sands of Lower California with Capt. Mellon and two companions, wandering for seventeen days without food and water, nourished only by the bitter fruit of the desert cactus. That was in 1864 when a renegade outlaw killed Capt. Mellon's first assistant and sailed away with the Victory Reunion, leaving the little party to die, he thought, on the hills about the Gulf of California.

Among the marshes and tule jungles that flank the Colorado River they found rare hunting. After traveling for a week by boat, the explorers took horses and Indian guides and spent another seven days roaming over the slopes of the Cocopah Mountains, where the echo of the huntsman's rifle is almost unknown. In this fastness of desert and mountain are locked what is probably the greatest hunting ground in the West.

ADVENTURES IN THE WILDS.

Rare adventures of field and flood befell members of the party and their Indian guides as they roamed through the wilds of what is probably one of the least-known parts of all America.

About the Gulf of California itself a rare interest attaches. The Colorado is a river of mystery. Its shifting tides carry it at times far out of its courses, until at times during the spring floods it is said to never sleep twice in the same bed.

In the Gulf rare and wonderful natural changes are almost continually taking place. A chart made today would be valueless six months from now. Great Islands alternately rise and disappear. Capt. Mellon failed even to find some rocky promontories around which he trudged forty-five years ago.

During a day and a night the Searchlight lay moored at the side of an island that did not exist when Capt. Mellon sailed through the gulf in 1862; and the island which he sought for anchorage had disappeared.

The party anchored near Tiburon Island, notorious as the home of a tribe of cannibal Indians, reputed to be the fiercest on the West coast.

NO FEAR OF CANNIBALS.

Members of the party bring back the report that to land on Tiburon Island is not dangerous on account of cannibals—if these ever existed they disappeared years ago—but because it is now inhabited by about 200 renegade Indians and desperadoes, who have found here one of the few places of safety from the Mexican and United States authorities.

Reports of explorers devoured by cannibals on Tiburon are now discredited; that explorers have lost their lives there is true, but it was generally at the hands of white renegades, who knew that to permit the explorers to return to civilization would mean to reveal their own hiding place.

The Gulf of California is not likely to become a pleasure resort; the water is a trifle too rough for bathing and aquatic sports; the gamut of the tides is discouraging even to the lovers of the sea. During the full moon the tide in the northern part of the gulf rises to the height of forty-six feet.

On the first night in the Gulf the Searchlight anchored to the lee side of Montague Island in deep water. About midnight two of the party chanced to go on deck. The waters had all disappeared; the boat was lying high and dry on some mud flats.

At the first break of dawn they roused the other voyagers to tell them of the strange accident that had befallen them; plainly, they had been trapped by one of the mysterious shiftings of sand in the Gulf.

Their narrative was received by the others with shouts of good-natured merriment. Veteran Capt. Mellon called their attention to the fact that the boat was rocking with the tides as they talked.

DISAPPEARING ISLAND.

Deeply mystified, the party went on deck to find that the waters were higher about them than the night before, and that a part of Montague Island itself had disappeared in the sea.

"Just the action of the tides," Capt. Smith explained; but the land lovers of the party rested easier when they had weighed anchor and sailed safely out of the treacherous gulf, the scene of so many shipwrecks, and away through the sluggish channel of the Hardy River.

While the boat was moved to the banks of this river one night three of the party wakened together from their sleep and rushed on deck to repel what sounded like the approach of a band of marauders or unfriendly Indians. They found that the boat was anchored in the middle of a colony of beavers, and that these crafty animals were making as much disturbance as possible to cause them to move on to quieter mooring places.

Nothing was heard from the Indian guides that night but the head cook found them gathered about the campfire of their own the next morning devouring some strange venison. He investigated and found the Indians had caught one of the beaver the night before and were feasting on its tail.

The party devoted one day to treasure hunting—and the treasure they sought is even more rare than that of the great barren mountains that stretched away to the west and north.

LOCATING AGED TREASURE.

In 1859 the schooner Arno was wrecked on an island a few miles below the mouth of the Hardy. This vessel carried 150 barrels of Kentucky whisky. Shifting tides have carried the channel of the river, but somewhere near the junction of the Hardy and the Colorado this prize liquor lies in a cellar which Nature herself has fashioned. For fifty years it has aged in the wood and if it were uncovered now it would be worth more than $100,000.

For years the narrative of this sunken treasure has floated about the ports of the west coast. Frank Norris caught a whiff of it while in San Francisco and wove it into the story of "Blix;" but it is in the sands of the Colorado and not of the Amazon that Norris's treasure ship lies buried.

After enjoying Capt. Mellon's narratives of his adventures in the Gulf of California and along the lower Colorado fifty years ago, some of the members of the party say it might not be impossible for them to discover the original of the Capt. Jack who contributes so much to the interest of Norris's novel.

In the tule swamps along the Hardy the Indians chased wild boar while the explorers filled the larder with wild geese and ducks until they were fairly surfeited with the hunting.

There was a warm rivalry between the sportsmen as most of them are fine shots but when the contents of the game bags were all noted it was veteran Gen. Chaffee who carried away the prize for marksmanship.

The Indians of the party acted as retrievers, plunging into the water as soon as a fowl was dropped, swimming away to it and bringing it back to the boat. The Indian guide who followed Gen. Chaffee soon learned to jump into the river as soon as he saw the way the gun was pointed and it was only in rare instances that he started in vain.

As they sailed north on the Hardy they sighted a dismantled schooner floating aimlessly about, guided only by wind and tide. This derelict proved to be the vessel in which Arizona Charley sought to rescue some miners who went to Tiburon Island two years ago and forgot to return. The abandoned boat bears mute evidence of the failure of the Arizona Charley's mission.

When they had cruised for fifty miles up the Hardy River Capt. Smith announced that they were at the head of navigation on that water course. But Gen. Sherman had made provision for this. At the point where Capt. Smith said they could proceed no farther they were met by another party with fresh Indian guides and horses to carry them on the proposed hunting and exploring trip along the slopes of the Cocopah Mountains.

WITH A GREAT SPIRIT.

Roaming about through the great valley between the Hardy River and the Cocopah Mountains, they found some volcano lakes in a wonderful little valley that in time may become even more famous than that of the Yellowstone. These lakes are known to the Indians all over the southwest. The section is famed as the home of a great good spirit who possesses power to cast out rheumatism and gout.

There are geysers and steaming caldrons, almost the prototype of those in Yellowstone Park. At one place they found a small body of water that has been described by other travelers as a "lake of ink." Members of the company made some rough tests and found that it was only a pool of mud and hot water.

The acres of great steaming mud baths give promise of some time becoming the Mecca of the sufferers from chronic rheumatism all over the globe.

It was partly to guard this valley of the geysers and the burning lakes that the Colorado River Indians opposed so fiercely the intrusion of the white traders. Some of their medicine men had warned them that the good spirit would leave the valley if the lake of ink should be polluted by the touch of a white man's foot, and that they would all then die of rheumatism.

The almost unbroken seclusion that has attached to this territory during the last fifty years was illustrated well when Capt. Mellon pointed one afternoon to some dismantled buildings on Point Isabel. He said that during the troubles with the Indians of Arizona in the early sixties, the United States government found it convenient to send supplies to Fort Yuma from the mouth of the Colorado River.

A sheltered cove on Point Isabel, just east of Montague Island, was selected and maintained as a shipyard from 1864 to 1876—and the Mexican government never knew that it existed.

The glory of the lower Colorado faded when the Southern Pacific Company built its line to Yuma in 1877; since then the navigation of the lower river has become a lost art. But the reclamation and development of the delta of the Colorado and the Hardy Rivers promises to bring back the encient maritime commerce and to increase it a thousand fold.

AFTER SHEEP AND DEER.

On the slopes of the Cocopah Mountains the explorers hunted mountain sheep and deer. In a number of places they found traces of bear. The chief of the Indian guides expressed confidence that if they would wait for his men to beat the thickets they would be rewarded with some rare bear shooting.

But the hunters passed on. Some time they expect to return and spend a fortnight hunting bear in the Cocopah Mountains. When Theodore Roosevelt is no longer President, when he can accept invitations to go hunting outside his own country, he may be one of the party of sportsmen that will go with Indian guides to hunt bear in the Cocopah Mountains and wild boar in the jungles of the delta lands.

On their way to Calexico the party stopped for the night at one of the settlements of the California-Mexico Land and Cattle Company. Almost the whole of the Mexican delta of the Colorado belongs to this company, which is composed of Los Angeles men. It is one of the largest and best cattle ranges in North America.

Resident agents of the company told the travelers that there are 18,000 head of cattle on this ranch at the present time. So vast is the territory that in a day's ride through the fertile delta one may not pass a single herd.

mother against the daughter so strongly that it led her to make this rancor felt after death.

The papers on file in the Probate Court do not hint at the possible tragedy of this mother-love other than in the bequest of $1 left to the daughter without one word of explanation. But it is possible that it will all come out in the bitter fight for the estate which will be waged before Judge Rives in the Probate Court.

SCOTT STATEMENT.

Attorney Joseph Scott was surprised to hear last night of the filing of the contest to the will of Mrs. Smith. He said he had not seen it, that he was not particularly anxious to act as executor of the estate, which he stated amounts to over $28,000, and would be glad if the heirs could agree upon some reputable trust company to act in his stead.

Regarding the allegation that he had taken the will to the store of one of the witnesses to the will, Mr. Scott stated that this was true, but that Mrs. Smith went with him, as did the other witness. Over the charge that in his zeal for the Catholic Church he lost sight of justice to the children of the decedent, Mr. Scott laughed and stated that the amount left to the church was very small as compared to the estate.

Regarding Mrs. Smith, Attorney Scott asserted that she was a woman of determined character, was an "old-timer" in Los Angeles and well known, but that he did not know himself that she was addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors. He refused to throw any light upon the mystery of the hatred borne by Mrs. Smith for her daughter, saying he would rather not speak of it.

RAILROAD NOTES.

China is to build a railroad from Tientsin and Chinkiang, a distance of 600 miles, and for most of the way parallel with the Grand Canal. An agreement for the construction of this road was signed in 1899, but internal disturbance has delayed matters. The railroad will open up a most populous part of the Chinese empire, and mining and other industries will be given an impetus which will beneficially affect the foreigner.

It is reported that the Union Pacific and Burlington roads will take porters off the chair cars and do away with flagmen on some of the passenger trains. This step is but another indication of the lengths to which the rail roads are willing to go in cutting down expenses.

Forty-two railroad officers have replied to a series of questions propounded by the Railroad Gazette regarding the outlook for the present year. Of the total, 16 are clearly and definitely optimistic; 14 indicate their belief that a more or less protracted period of mild depression is ahead, and 1 per cent. anticipate severe depression.

A careful investigation by the Boston News Bureau, the leading financial authority of the East, shows that upward of 119,000 railroad cars are idle throughout the United States. This compares with 40,448 on November 27 and 20,000 to 30,000 under normal conditions. In the group comprising the States of Oregon, Idaho, California, Nevada and Arizona, are 3582; in Montana, Wyoming, Nebraska and South Dakota group, 3285. The largest group comprises Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota, with 40,454 cars.

Contracts have been made for finishing the Moffat road between Denver and Salt Lake. Two thousand men will at once be put to work. When completed this will be the shortest line between Salt Lake and the Pacific Coast.

The Chicago and Northwestern has followed the example of the Milwaukee in filing counter claim against the State of Wisconsin, which is suing for taxes alleged due on gross earnings. The Northwestern claims $1,589,980.69 for overpaid taxes on interstate business. The Milwaukee's claim is $100,000 less, while the total asked by the State is only $97,000.

It is noted that the Chicago Great Western is entirely controlled abroad. Ninety per cent. of the securities are held in Europe, and of the $26,127,089 of debenture bonds $25,000,000 are owned by Londoners, so that no distress whatever will be caused to Americans by the friendly receivership.

TO THE IMPERIAL VALLEY.

The Chamber of Commerce is contemplating an excursion to the Imperial Valley early in February, and has sent out postal cards to the business interests, asking their coöperation. Responses have been very encouraging.

It is considered that an excursion of this kind at this time would be very beneficial to both the valley and the business men of Los Angeles. The chamber will run a special train, taking some two or three days for the trip.

Business firms who are interested in sending representatives should send their names to the Chamber of Commerce at the earliest possible moment.

HOLDING ITS OWN.

WONDER SLOW, BUT WONDROUS.

NORTHERN NEVADA GOLD CAMP DEVELOPING WELL.

Fifteen Minths Have Worked Riracles—Nevada Wonder and Jack Pot Installing Machinery—Other Promising Prospects—Camp Needs Railroad Connection.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WONDER, Jan. 15.—Wonder has accomplished much in the fifteen months' span of its brief but strenuous career as one of the high-grade camps of the great Sagebrush State of mining, men and minerals. It is chiefly remarkable for two reasons: First, it comprises one of the largest mineralized areas in the State, and, secondly, it is a camp of uniform values.

Fifteen months ago Wonder had no place on the map, although located only sixteen miles from the old "pony express" line, so extensively traveled during the palmy days of Virginia City, and over which was hauled the fabulous fortunes that went west to build up the glories of old San Francisco.

The Nevada Wonder is the best-known mine in the district, but is not locally considered to have a future brighter than that of the Jack Pot. Both mines have more than 3000 feet of work completed, and in the Jack Pot it may safely be said that every foot is in ore. Both are now installing fifty-horse-power hoisting plants; that of the Nevada Wonder being a steam plant, and that of the Jack Pot gasoline.

The Hidden Treasure is another property worthy of note, having two ledges at the 120-foot level, one 74 feet wide, the other 45 inches, and both of which carry shipping values—which means $60 or better in Wonder.

The Vulture is another good proposition, but it cannot yet be called a mine, for the reason that the ore bodies are not inplace, as is the case in the others mentioned. The Ruby Wonder, under control of the Jack Pot, is now in the shipping class, and the expense of development has been paid from the earnings of the Jack Pot.

The Spider and Wasp was for some time exploited as a high-grade proposition, but has not developed as such, being in the same class as the Lost Chord, namely, an immense milling property of great promise. The last-named property is now making arrangements for the installation of a twenty-stamp mill, and San Francisco parties will build a customs mill on ground lying between Wonder and Hercules, three miles distant. The Nevada Wonder holds the right to the use of the Greenwalts' chlorination process, and, when the ground at the 1000-foot level has been fully prospected, will install a suitable reduction plant.

All the properties above mentioned look like mines and many others are almost worthy the name. Among these may be cited the June Wonder, with better than $300 values at the 200-foot level. This property sidelines the Monnette Wonder and Daisy Wonder, both of which are unquestionably on the Nevada Wonder ledge. The Quartzite Wonder is sinking a new shaft on ground that has given values of $36. The Golden Dawn, Silver Star, Wonder View, Sunshine Wonder and Battleship all give good promise and upon each a large amount of development work has been done. Several Goldfield promoters are making preparations to exploit other properties than than those mentioned—some of them promising, some upon which nothing but assessment work has been done. So it may be well, in dealing with any promotion even in such a field, to investigate closely.

Wonder is a well-built camp; has an excellent club building frequented by men of affairs, near-millionaires and the omni-present promoter. The camp has an ample water supply piped from Bench Creek seven miles distant, the water being sold to consumers at the rate of $2 per barrel.

Wonder is sixty-one miles distant from Fallon, the nearest shipping point. One can gain some idea of the value of the ore already shipped when it is known that the freight rate from Wonder to Fallon ranges from $12.50 to $16.00 per ton. On merchandise from Fallon to Wonder the rate is 1½ cents per pound and the freighters manage to clean up good profit at the price.

The Nevada Hills Company is considering the building of a broad-gauge railroad from Fallon to Fairview and thence to Wonder, if the Southern Pacific does not take up the project. For this purpose it is said $400,000 has been set aside and as the building of the line is practically a scooping proposition it is thought that the appropriation will fully cover the cost.

Such, in brief, is what has been done during the past fifteen months in Northern Nevada, in a district that has enough mineral in sight to assure its future and make other camps, more popular now, look to their golden laurels.

DOCTOR'S PRESCRIPTION FOR BILIOUSNESS.

A celebrated German physician, consulted as an authority on liver and kidney troubles by people of means from all parts of the world, gives the following formula as the most reliable to be used in all cases of sluggish liver, the signs of which are sallow complexions, headaches, skin eruptions, nervousness, biliousness, weak heart, sleeplessness, and general run-down feeling. He says these symptoms are caused by the liver not acting naturally, which in turn causes all the work of this important organ to be thrown on the lungs, heart and kidneys, greatly overworking these parts, and thereby putting the system in a condition whereby it cannot resist the slightest illness without danger of serious results. If the liver acts properly, the digestive and bowel movements are healthy, as the proper flow of bile is necessary for nature to perform her work. To put the liver and kidneys in a condition to keep all the internal organs properly working, he gives the following formula: One ounce Heptonic, one and a half ounces Simple Elixir, one and a half ounces Elixir Calisaya Bark. Mix well and take one teaspoonful in water 3 to 4 times a day; children in proportion. These vegetable ingredients are obtainable from any good prescription druggist and easily mixed. He also lays great stress on the fact that a properly acting liver is the secret of freedom from dyspepsia, kidney and heart trouble.

Either there were a lot of liars in the other Thaw trial or else there are a lot in this.

Short skirts and turned-up pantaloons are the style this year; for women and men, of course.

Since prohibition went into effect, "Marching through Georgia" must be pretty dry business.

A French physician says that jealousy is a disease. And he might have added that it is contagious.

It appears to be the intention of the Democrats to nominate Mr. Bryan and then let him do his own running.

Enough is as good as a feast, and yet no amount of Bryan fodder seems to make the Democratic donkey fat.

J. Ham Lewis now denies that he said all women are liars. But it is just as bad to have said that any of them are liars.

No man has yet been found who had such a poor memory that he could forget the things he didn't want to remember.

There are estimated to be 8,000,000 telephones in the world and yet religion is said to be as strongly entrenched as ever.

The man behind the gun is all right in the song, but this year it is the man behind the vote who is going to cut the ice.

It seems that Judge Parker will never be able to forgive about three-fourths of the American people for having voted against him.

The question "What shall we do with our ex-Presidents?" need no longer weary the public. The magazines will keep them busy.

In a way Gov. Hughes is right about not asking the nomination. This is a leap year. Let the nomination ask him if it wants him.

Bryan thinks Cannon will be the next Republican candidate for President. Well, we don't see where William can find any comfort in that.

The Washington Post believes that Judge Parker has been "bottling his choler." He is now handing it around as the vintage of '04, it seems.

Somehow or other, whenever a Jap is seen with a camera under his arm, everybody unconsciously comes to the conclusion that he is a spy.

Every man has a choice, of course, but it can't be denied that a plump girl doesn't hurt so much when she leans her elbow on your shoulder.

Just at about the time Helen Maloney dropped out of sight Maybelle Snell McNamara hove into view. The procession is never allowed to show a gap.

Russia does not appear to be rushing her new navy very fast. She probably thinks it best to wait until the other navies have battered one another up.

There were forty dog fights in a small Oregon village one day last week. How many man fights resulted as a consequence has not yet been figured out.

It is pretty well understood in Washington that "Uncle Joe" Cannon has now come to a final conclusion as to which currency bill he will allow to pass.

According to the Woman's Journal the style is now for women to have pockets in their stockings. That's better than using the whole stocking as a pocket.

We often wonder whether, if women were elected to serve as members of Congress, "Uncle Joe" Cannon could work the gag rule as easily as he works it now.

In one section of Boston there are only fifty bathtubs for 70,000 people. And we'll wager that doctors have less to do in that section of the city than in any other.

"What the American business man must learn is to slow down," says the New York Herald. Would you think that he is going much faster than a walk, just now?

Mr. Roosevelt has now come out as a champion of the short man. It is a very popular move to make in times like these, when even a great many tall men are short.

It is to be remembered, however, that if Gov. John A. Johnson is nominated for the Presidency by the Democrats he will be heralded as a Swede for political purposes only.

A correspondent writes to ask what is meant by a "souse." A souse is that state of inebriety which bears the same relation to a plain drunk that a glass bead bears to a diamond.

"What's the use of being a millionaire where you cannot buy a drink?" asks the New York Commercial. Where is the place, please, that a millionaire cannot buy a drink?

There is no use in blaming Nevada for doing what Illinois did when Grover Cleveland was President, nor in blaming Roosevelt for doing what Grover did when Illinois asked him to.

It costs $1000 to fire a single shot from one of the largest guns in the French army. We suppose guns of this caliber are fired only in salutes to men like Mr. Rockefeller when they visit France.

An effort is again to be made to change the date for inaugurating the President of the United States. Why not change the place, instead? The fourth of March in California, for instance, is quite sure to be as pleasant a day as the heart could wish.

TAFT ON A VITAL QUESTION.

The Times observes that Secretary Taft's Cooper Union speech has been misrepresented as to its viewpoint on the subject of the rights and wrongs of organized labor.

It has come to our knowledge that there is extant here in Los Angeles a personal letter from Mr. Taft which specifically sets forth his views in the true light.

The following editorial from the Washington Post, under date of January 12, and republished in The Times January 18, is known to express Secretary Taft's views:

"The friend of the laboring man is he who will tell him the plain, blunt truth. Judged by that test, and it is the only test, there is not a better friend of what is called American labor in all the Union than William Howard Taft. There are men who will protest their solicitude for labor, who will condole with it, fall on its neck and weep salt tears over it, and all the time lie for it, for the reason that it is a moral and political impossibility for these gentry to keep their spinal columns, if they have any, erect in the presence of any citizenship that can vote. No need to mention them. They have all been marked.

"Mr. Taft tells labor that capital, too, has rights, and that the salvation of labor is the guarantee of property. Unless capital gets adequate return for its enterprise, where is labor going to find a job? Men do not establish factories solely to employ labor and pay it a wage, but factories are erected and put in operation to earn dividends for capital. To earn such dividends labor is necessary, and that labor must not only be well paid, but it must be content with its wage and its environments.

"Mr. Taft also tells labor that it is wrong to boycott, and he then warns capital that it is wrong to blacklist. He approves and applauds the combinations of labor, and asserts its right to strike when it feels that it is oppressed; but he declares that unorganized labor has as much right to work as organized, and we do not believe this generation of the American electorate will choose any man to the great place of President who teaches anything else.

"This paper is not the organ of Mr. Taft, or of anybody else, but it indorses his Cooper Union speech, and such sentiments as he there uttered would add strength to any candidate of either party for President of the United States.

"This is yet a government of justice as well as of law, of common sense as well as of patriotism."

On what other ground could any good American stand? On what other ground could any man dare come before this people, ask to be elected President, and hope to succeed?

The attitude of lawless trades unions is fraught with evil and often full of menace to the best interests of the people and the country. There is no objection to the organization of labor, but there is objection to the frequent and dangerous lawlessness of organized labor. Those who assail this lawlessness most vigorously only plead for the great principle of liberty under law, for complete freedom in the industries, and for the equal rights of unorganized labor to protection under the law. What could be more monstrous and indefensible than the doctrine that organized labor has any superior rights merely through the fact of organization? Such a thing cannot be under our system. The American people cannot show toleration to the doctrine set up by those extremists among labor organizations who seek to monopolize the labor of the country and dictate terms and conditions under which independent workmen shall work; refusing which, they are to be persecuted, boycotted, driven to the wall, stoned, and too often assailed, maimed, wounded and even killed.

The essential duty is to maintain and defend freedom in the industries. No man shall be forced to join or not to join any labor organization. That shall be according to his own choice, preference and decision as a full-statured man and citizen, panoplied in the complete armor which is supplied by the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. Nothing short of this is American freedom. Industrial freedom is every whit as sacred as religious freedom, political freedom, or personal freedom, and whenever the American people permit the destruction of industrial freedom they will have deliberately consented to the making of a great breach in the citadel of American liberty which will make possible its invasion and final destruction.

The Times believes profoundly in these principles, and for that reason has for years contended for them with a measure of independence and boldness which has brought widespread indorsement and tremendous practical results to it; though individual benefits are not to be compared to the preponderating benefits which will come to the country at large through the complete triumph of the principles here set out in brief form.

The signal, the stupid, mistake made by so many politicians, journalists and narrow statesmen lies in the fact that they strangely fail to recognize the supreme and indisputable fact that the great body of American citizens, including, perhaps, 85 per cent. of the actual workers, are not members of organized labor nor advocates of its pretensions and claims. In other words, the strength of the country, material, moral and political, lies on the opposite side of the question; and if a direct struggle ever comes between the opposing interests, whether in the courts, in the political arena, in Congress, or on the field of martial conflict, the pretenders, the insolent and exacting minority, will be crushed to powder.

In view of this truth—and it is a truth that cannot be overthrown—it is simply inexplicable why weak-kneed politicians stand in such terror as they do of so-called "organized labor," which would not have the power to dominate either the electorate, the legislature, or the industries of the country, provided objecting employers, citizens, officials and executives would only do a reasonable amount of plain, straight-backed standing up for the right thing.

The indispensable requirement, therefore, is that labor organizations, quite as much as all other organizations, combinations or individuals, shall be compelled to obey the law. There is nothing sacred about the pretensions of "organized labor" that other citizens should stand in awe of it. Unrestrained unionism is today a menace to the country.

If any special rights were to be granted to any class or body of labor—which is an impossible thing under our republican system—they would of course be granted to the great majority, not to a small and clamorous minority.

We have every reason to believe that it is on just such ground as this that Secretary Taft stands—the only tenable position from which success can be won, or the country governed.

AN UNTIMELY DEFACEMENT.

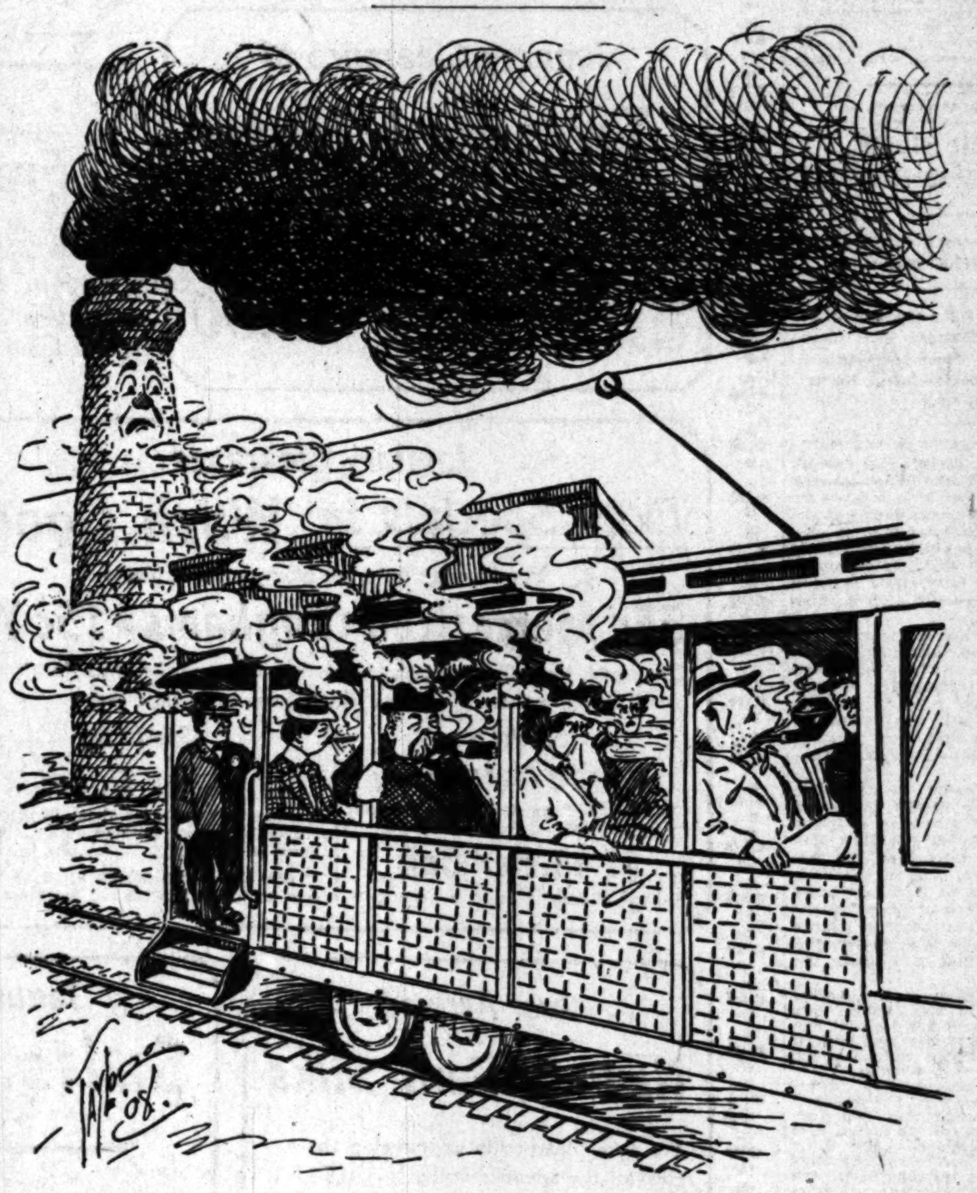
The citizen of Los Angeles who in these beautiful winter days chances to wander around what ought to be beautiful Westlake Park and sees the disgusted tourists, just arrived in this land of heart's desire, holding their nostrils tight and running to get out of the reach of the dirty dregs of waters which were once a lake, could scarcely help asking the question, What have the Park Commissioners done with their memories?

These winter days annually with the regularity of the striking of a clock the tourists come to spend the winter here. The parks are naturally points of great attractiveness to these people with nothing to do, and as much time as money. None of the parks attract more than Westlake because of its proximity to the hotels. The beautiful spot is abandoned these January days by natives and visitors and it is a reasonable conjecture that the swans, ducks and other aquatic birds would also get away if their wings were not clipped. The water has been nearly all drained out of the depression for the first time since it was established as a lake some seventeen years ago. There is just enough of it left to make it an offense. So it has been for six weeks.

The Park Commissioners have an excuse probably appearing good in their eyes. A new retaining wall is being constructed around a part of the lake. Some people ask, Why? The water was staying within its boundaries before and the depression there is so deep that it could scarcely get out of it even under the impelling force of a severe earthquake. But waiving this, supposing the wall were a pressing necessity, why were the winter months chosen as the time for constructing it? In the summer months the tourists are scarce and a great many of the residents around Westlake Park are at the beaches and mountain resorts. It would appear to a man nearer the ground than the top of one of the tall eucalyptus trees in the park or in the exalted position of a Park Commissioner as if summer would have been the time for the draining of the lake and the construction of this new wall. If it were forgotten last summer, why not remember that there will be another summer to come when this work might be done?

This blunder raises in the minds of many citizens a general reflection upon the making and keeping of Los Angeles the City Beautiful. This broader reflection draws in the whole city government. In past years everybody was too busy to do anything. The pressure of superabundant affairs upon all city officials was quite as great as on the person engaged in his own private business. The population has grown so rapidly that there has been great strain to keep up, with building schools, taking care of streets, developing parks, and everything else. We are now having a breathing spell which with all its inconvenience can but impress us as in some respects a blessing in disguise. The city officials will not be so pressed with new things to do in the future as they have been in the immediate past. Idle men will be glad to go to work and put in a few more hours for the municipality, or work for a little less wages than the legal day and the legal pay fixed by our exceedingly generous Council. The leisure days that are before us could not be put to better use than in keeping streets and vacant lots in a condition more becoming a city which arrogates to itself the epithet of beautiful. Perhaps we are wrong in indicating any arrogance in this assertion. It is a beautiful city and the pride of us all in it is spontaneous. But in the eyes of "outsiders" it will certainly look more fitting to call this the City Beautiful if the streets, parks, vacant lots and everything about us shall be kept a little trimmer.

THE SMOKE NUISANCE.



FATHER AND SON.

Now and then a young man is found who, in reality, knows more than many an old man—the son who is wiser than his father. Some young men acquire wisdom when they are mere boys. Pitt was Prime Minister when he was twenty-one, and the junior John Rockefeller was never known to squander a penny since the time that he knew what a penny was. But these are the vast exceptions. Youth is notoriously profligate and improvident, and quite naturally so. It is the most difficult thing in the world to put an old head on young shoulders.

The rule is that the father has acquired a wisdom and a knowledge of the world's ways that a son can acquire only with years. There are many things—in fact most things in this life—that can be learned in no possible way except through experience. Yet there are mistakes that a man grown old has made, which his son need not necessarily make, and especially if age will take the trouble to guide youth in a saner and safer pathway than it has traveled itself. It is not only in the great affairs of life but in its minor experiences that an old man's advice can be made invaluable to a young man if the advice is rightly given and the effort made to make it plain that such guidance as is offered is not a mere blast of pedantry.

Many a man suffers for the want of teeth who might have a mouthful had he been properly warned in his youth and had sanitary rules been enforced upon him. Many another man who regrets the lack of a college education might have had it but for the fact that his parents did not push him to it. There are "fiddlers" who might have become great violinists were it not that there was no one to sympathize with a boyish aspiration. The world is filled with these wild regrets, for which, in most cases, parents are to blame.

There are too many fathers who think that spasmodically scolding a boy is better than taking him patiently in hand and showing him the importance of traveling the right road. It is not enough for a father to insist that his boy keep out of mischief and devilment, as some fathers suppose. The boy will thank him in after life for his stern censorship, of course, and he may not blame his father for what he did not do for him, but he will be sorry that he did not sternly keep him sticking to the things for which he showed a talent and that might have been the means of lifting him above the commonplace in after life.

The father's clear duty is to see that his boy is made to develop his natural bent, if the bent be a good one. The boy will shirk at doing even the things he likes to do, but he should not be allowed to shirk. It is because they are not kept at work to develop their talents that so many boys grow up mediocre when they might have escaped that curse. It is this lack that fills the world with amateurs.

WHAT'S THE USE OF KICKING?

It is as rare a day as any in June when the daily newspapers fail to bring us some effort on the part of the obsessed Democratic mule to kick W. J. B. of Nebraska out of the saddle and off the poor animal's back.

There is no use, fellow-citizens of the Democratic brand! You might as well carry your load. We realize that it is heavy, that your steps will be greatly retarded in the race for the Presidency this coming fall, as they have been in other campaigns by this unwelcome load which you have allowed to be placed upon your back. But why not realize the inevitable? Mr. Bryan insists that he and he only is the one qualified person in the party to lead you to defeat. Be patient and resigned.

Suppose your kicking were effective and you managed to jolt the able rider of your party from his saddle and to put some more acceptable person in his place, what would you gain by it? This is an experiment that you have tried, too. It is too recent to be easily forgotten. Did you not serve notice upon Mr. Bryan four years ago that he had had two "tries at it" and had failed in both? Did you not set up as your standard-bearer Alton B. Parker of New York? What was the result? Only a little more disastrous than on the two previous occasions when you allowed Bryan to ride the old mule. It was indeed more disastrous, and who made it so? Bryan! Whether Mr. Bryan rides or trails on foot behind, he is your number 13, your number 23, your hoodoo and your skidoo, and you can't get rid of him anyhow. If you don't let him lead you to defeat himself, he will drive you to defeat with another in the lead. He will knife any other candidate you may name.

"DEMOCRATS AND ARISTOCRATS."

We have not yet forgotten Mr. Bryan's special pleading a few weeks ago in a speech in which he sought to stir up class animosity by representing his party as standing for the plain people, for human rights, and broadly for the people, while the Republican party was represented as composed mostly of aristocrats standing for the interests of a few. Of course an oligarchy composed of an overwhelming majority of 90,000,000 is a queer conception. But Mr. Bryan's conceptions are not infrequently of that type. The great commoner so earnestly intent on the interest of the plain people should make a visit to some of the down-trodden Democrats in Mississippi. African slavery having been ended by the intervention of the aristocratic Republicans who fought the war for the Union, the grandchildren of the kind-hearted Democrats who fought so fiercely for the "peculiar institution" have turned their many and great talents to the maintaining of a system of peonage little less cruel and unjust than outright human bondage.

In Mississippi a grand jury composed to a man of Mr. Bryan's political associates refused within a few days to indict persons known to hold men in bondage under this unjust and cruel system of peonage. These associates of Mr. Bryan are so democratic that in their burning desire for equality for all, special privileges for none, they look upon their fellow-men as fit subjects of barter and sale.

The subtle insinuation that technically-called Democrats are all for the "peepul" and that the Republican party is a practical oligarchy will be slow of operation until so many Democrats cease "grinding the face of the poor"

FOR THE SMELTER.

Again we have a movement on foot looking to the building of a smelter near this city. The rich mineral deposits of the country round about have been greatly developed, and railroad lines connect most of the camps with Los Angeles. No doubt there is now enough ore in sight to keep a large smelter here in business every hour of all the days.

There will be objection, of course. But such objection will not be well founded if the site is properly selected. The promoters will not seek to place the works within the city limits. Locations can be chosen where no material interest can suffer.

The advantages to the community would be many and great. In times past, when a dull period was impending, something has always turned up so large in magnitude that it lifted our interests out on solid ground and set them moving smoothly and at a good pace. Perhaps a big smelter is to be the thing this time.

Upon the roaming winds will they

THE LANCER.

IF THE children will now retire, we will talk in a delicate and shaded manner about "Three Weeks"—[illegible] book.

It's a story about a beautiful Russian woman of royal blood, married to a king—a drunken brute and rotten with disease, whom she longs to "choke to death and throw to hell." Traveling incognito in Switzerland, she meets a nice, clean, "beautiful" young Englishman.

She—that is to say—well, you know—they—

Well, the authoress wants to know if this unhappy Queen hasn't the moral right to be loved by a decent man when her marriage to the brutal King was none of her own doing, but a political scheme to save a staggering kingdom?

The first part of the book is a tough version of Bertha M. Clay, E. P. Roe, Marie Corelli, Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth and others.

The last half is really fine, somewhat suggesting the "Prisoner of Zenda"—only more pitiful and appealing. If you read the thing all the way through, the impression it leaves with you is one of infinite pity and sorrow.

Of course the part talked about is the tough part. Not suggestive, you know, but raw and blunt. Frankly sensual.

It wouldn't be worth mentioning except for this extraordinary fact—nine-tenths of the buyers of the book are women—decent women. A well-known bookseller in Los Angeles told me so.

The Girl—Why?

That this reeking book was mentioned was principally to have an excuse for discussing what George Ade calls the "Girl Proposition."

The Queen in "Three Weeks," had she been slightly more conventional in her ideas, would have been one of the most adorable women in fiction.

She could TALK.

According to the private opinion of The Lancer, the trouble with most girls is—well, they are girls.

Honestly, the ignorance of the girl of today is something appalling. This "sweet innocence" and "undefiled maid" is all right; but she really doesn't have to be a pink-and-white [illegible].

The Lancer listens to his girl friends in the street cars; they talk clothes. He listens to his married girl friends at pink teas; they talk about the trials of Cousin Helen's twins who are down with a rash.

The chaperon is usually the only interesting feature of the occasion. She's old enough to know something.

Imagine what a tumultuous social success would be a girl who could talk about politics in the Balkans, rose culture, army reorganization, Japanese [illegible], big game hunting and scientific [illegible] reform.

We all have men friends who can talk charmingly on all these things with absolute familiarity; and we hang eagerly on their words.

The Lancer's wife says this is all bosh, and that what he wants to get acquainted with is a female encyclopedia.

Shakespeare With Annex.

Shakespeare so up to date that the manager is kept in a lather trying to keep pace, has been shown to the [illegible] at the Mason Operahouse by [illegible] Hanford. And yet some of the [illegible] were saying that Hanford was [illegible].

The [illegible]ulations of Shakespeare's [illegible] were accompanied by a biograph. Oh, shades of the bard of Avon! A moving picture series of Egyptian scenes with some English tourists mounted on burros! This preceded the play.

The next thing we are prepared for is an up-to-date version of other Shakespeare dramas—perhaps Mr. Hanford has others in his repertoire.

Do you think the Juliet of the future will sigh: "Oh, swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon" etc.

Oh, no; Hmp, Um! It will be thus:

Romeo: Lady, by yonder moon I swear—

Juliet: While you are swearing by the moon, I will now sing my latest New York success, "If the Man in the Moon Were a Coon." Perfessor, kindly play.

During the fete at Capulet's house, I suppose Juliet will sing "I'd Rather Two-step than Waltz, Bill," and King Lear's ungrateful daughters will warble at him in chorus: "When Yo Ain't Got No Money—Well, Yo Needn't Come Around."

However, there is another side to this. What is there in the world more piteous than an old actor of whom the public are tired? The old Shakespearean actor is a pathetic type. He is living back in the memories of McCullough and Booth. He gets out in his toga and his Roman cuirass—let out at the joints to fit his increasing avoirdupois. But the public stays away. His lot is one of bitterness.

The wise ones are those who see that the public—whether you approve or not—are tired of Shakespeare; infinitely prefer Clyde Fitch or Augustus Thomas. The wise ones turn to other fields and other methods before it is too late.

What's the use of roaring and raging and calling the public fools, because they won't hear Shakespeare.

Down here in the corner—and just between ourselves—suppose, at one theater was to be seen Mlle. Modiste with Fritzi Scheff and at the other, Julius Caesar?

But, then, of course, you wouldn't really tell!

The Whale's Tenderness.

One of the Los Angeles evening papers told last week the sweet story of the kind-hearted whales.

It was told how that a large school of whales were seen sporting about the [illegible] near Venice. "Although," says the Express, "they fight fiercely enough among themselves, there is no danger to the fishermen." It says that not one of the whales would touch a fisherman for anything.

No, sir: one of the most touching things in nature is the sight of a big, able-bodied whale weeping over a dead fisherman.

And, by the way, isn't it a pity that the Express correspondent didn't bother to mention the details of that scrap between the whales? What do you suppose a whale does when it fights [illegible] among itself?

Do you suppose it possible that E. [illegible] Earl is becoming a nature [illegible]?

Japanese Personality.

Every few nights, the Japs of this city come trooping down Spring street to some sort of a meeting. No one seems able to find out what they meet for. A people who can keep a secret like that can pretty nearly do anything.

When you know a Jap, you know a PERSONALITY. There's something attached to him—whatever else you may think about him.

Incidentally, the American woman—who is blessed with executive ability anywhere—has found some one whom she can't "boss." She's afraid of the [illegible] of her Jap gardener.

A neighbor of ours has one who comes once a week.

He will arrive early in the morning to find that she has been gardening herself during the week. When [illegible] time comes, she finds all red [illegible] pulled scornfully up by the roots and replaced by pink ones.

"Why don't you tell him you hate pink?" I asked.

"Because," she confessed, "I am afraid. I know perfectly well that in the end I shall discover pink is what should have been there. The creature's knowledge is something terrific. He never guesses, he knows."

Ruef and Heney.

Long before the graft campaign came to anything definite, a friend of The Lancer's made a prediction.

"Abe Ruef," he said, "carries too many guns, intellectually, for Frank Heney.

"Heney has bulldog tenacity and immense force. He rushes into things like a bull into a China shop. Ruef, on the other hand, is intricate, subtle, crafty and a master hand at cunning. Of the two men, Ruef has by far the better education and the more able mind.

The present prospective humiliation of California in having this satyr—Ruef—turned out to freedom seems to justify that prophecy.

The graft crusade was a great cause; but alas, that it should have fallen into the hands of a man like Heney who misused its force to play politics.

Mocking Uniforms.

As a Lancer is presumed to be a military expert, we will now talk a little about the stocky, businesslike artillery major who gave Los Angeles people something to think about one evening last week.

He pointed out to the engineers and architects the glaring danger of this city in the event of war. "Danger of an awful disaster," he called it.

He urged us, among other things, to do our best to encourage the national guard—our only hope when war comes to reënforce our pitiful handful of regulars.

The Lancer feels that it is a shameful thing, the way we snub, and ignore the militia. If we don't think the national guard good, then we must make it better. It is a vital, imperative duty.

This is all very well, calling up memories of the Civil War and telling confidently about the volunteer army that jumped into being.

But you may remember that the Confederacy wasn't possessed of an immense army of crack, trained, veteran troops. The Rebels had to raise a volunteer army of their own.

For the sake of the flag and the memories of other tragic times, help the militiamen all you can. We will need them some day. Visit their drills; let your clerks do their military duty without growling; never, never "knock," because, in the first place, you probably know nothing about it anyhow. At any rate, speak well of the reserves.

Remember Kipling:

"Oh, making mock of uniforms that guard you while you sleep
"Is cheaper than them uniforms, and they're starvation cheap."

HOROSCOPE FOR
Sunday, January 19, 1908.

Help for the ill shines from the kindly stars,
And gently gleams even the warrior Mars.

Mars, the red, hangs his shield in benefic aspect to the waning moon this day.

Help of rt he afflicted lies in the promise of these twenty-four hours. Good counsel will come from physicians and surgeons this day. Alleviation waits on the ill.

Herbs under Mars will be potent at 4:30 p.m.—wormwood, rhubarb, mustard, horse radish and gentian.

A doubtful day for most undertakings except visits of friendship.

To discuss or attack vexing problems of business this day will probably mean that you will have your labor for your pains.

Keep quiet. If you go abroad, seek the open country, if possible.

There is danger in narrow streets this day to him who taketh not heed for his feet.

A fine and imposing new acquaintance will ruffle it into the circle of the woman whose birthdate falls on this day. She will do well to show him that she disdains his vanity.

Position and money will improve for the man who has a birthdate today. He must guard his physical well-being.

The girl born today will be ambitious beyond most women.

The boy born this day will succeed wonderfully well. He will take good advantage of opportunity and should have a full education.

People who are even slightly posted on such matters will notice at a glance that, instead of being a meager collection of commonplace articles made up by tne Japs and Chinese for export trade, this showing is made up of the rarest and richest objects of art produced by many Oriental nations. SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

Officials at the City Hall confidently believe Mayor Harper will veto the latest license and fire-escape ordinances.

Councilman Dromgold said yesterday that the city workhouse ordinance will be passed Monday.

Judge Smith sentenced Rollo Robe, convicted, with Meskil, of the murder of Patrolman Lyons, to San Quentin prison for life.

Judge James began taking testimony yesterday morning in Mrs. Annie Gidney's contested suit for divorce from Stephen Gidney on the ground of cruelty.

Judge Monroe deferred until Friday morning the hearing on the Salt Lake Railroad's application for a temporary injunction against M. D. Hamilton and others asserting title to Terminal Island and reclaimed tide lands, said to be leased to the railroad.

Judge Smith sentenced Max Sauls, convicted of embezzlement, to Folsom for six years, while Carl Wilson, convicted of crimial ill treatment of a young girl, was sentenced to Folsom for five years.

AT THE CITY HALL.

WILL LIKELY SEND IN VETO.

OFFICIALS FORECAST MAYOR HARPER'S ACTION.

Say Both License and Fire Escape Ordinances Are Doomed—Councilman Dromgold Declares Positively That Workhouse Ordinance Will Pass the Council Monday.

Many pairs of eyes were glued on the door to the office of the Mayor, yesterday, watching to see if anything came through with reference to the license and fire-escape ordinances.

It is generally understood about the City Hall that the Mayor will veto both of them—one because it is inopportune, and the other because it is regarded as a weak concession to owners of old fire escapes.

The license ordinance is nothing more nor less than a lot of old patches, torn from all the license ordinances the city has ever had, and stuck together in a sort of an emergency measure. This is done just on the eve of a general revision and readjustment of the license fees, and it is regarded by the officials of the city as a great blunder to print in book form and promulgate this last ordinance, under such circumstances. Those who ought to know believe that the Mayor will veto the ordinance before the Council meets on Monday.

As to the fire-escape ordinance, there is a general clamor among the official corps for the veto of the amended measure, while it is said there is an equally loud clamor on the part of a lot people who own buildings equipped with the old type of fire escape, for the Mayor to place his signature to the measure. It is confidently believed that he will veto it, and it is cited that if he had intended signing it he would have done so not later than yesterday.

For the Mayor, Clerk Kennedy said there would be "nothing doing" until Monday.

WORKHOUSE SURE.

WILL PASS ORDINANCE.

That City Workhouse will be built in Chavez Ravine in the very near future, if Councilman Dromgold understands the situation and he probably does.

The ordinance appropriating a sum not in excess of $20,000 for its construction, accompanied by plans and specifications, came up for final passage at the last session of the Council, but owing to the lateness of the hour, action was postponed for one week.

"Oh, yes," said Mr. Dromgold yesterday, "we will build the workhouse to relieve the pressure on the City Jail. The ordinance will be passed finally on Monday, and there will probably be no opposition to it. It is fair notice to the hobos to pass us by, for the rockpile will surely be theirs. It is to be a worhouse and nothing like a stockade; it will be much better for the city and for the unfortunate fellows who get on the chain gang. It is a bad thing to parade them on the streets, to and from the City Jail."

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

BEHIND BARS FOR ALL LIFE.

IS APPARENTLY UNAFFECTED BY HIS SENTENCE.

Meskil's Accomplice Receives His Sentence With Apparent Unconcern—His Attorney Is Perfecting an Appeal—Salt Lake Railroad Starts Legal Fight for Tide Lands.

When the name of Rolla Robe was called in court yesterday morning, the man convicted with Meskil of the murder of Patrolman Patrick Lyons walked quietly to a position before Judge Smith and, without apparent interest, waited for the court to pass sentence on him.

The room was filled with a crowd of curious spectators. If it expected to hear or see anything sensational, it was disappointed, for when Judge Smith asked Robe if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed on him, the convicted man simply answered, "No."

Robe's attorney asked the court that he might not be removed from the County Jail for a few days, that an appeal to the higher court might be perfected. This request Judge Smith granted after he had denied a motion for a new trial, based on the usual technical grounds.

"The jury that tried you," said Judge Smith, "brought in a verdict of murder in the first degree and recommended that you be sentenced to prison for life. In accordance with that recommendation, the court now sentences you to San Quentin prison for the term of your natural life."

Robe at once stepped back and walked out of the courtroom with the jailers, apparently unaffected in any way by the sentence, for which he had been prepared by the verdict.

ASK INJUNCTION.

MUCH TIDE LAND INVOLVED.

Yesterday saw the beginning of a series of suits to be instituted by the Salt Lake Railroad against persons who have filed on reclaimed tide lands at Terminal Island, when attorneys appeared before Judge Monroe for a hearing on the application of the corporation for an injunction directed against M. D. Hamilton and others.

Under the act of 1852 Hamilton has filed on twenty-six acres of reclaimed land at Terminal Island and this land is claimed by the railroad under the terms of a lease from the city of Long Beach. In November the railroad attempted to fence in the land and Hamilton and others tore down the barrier. The court was asked to issue an order enjoining the removal of fencing that might be put up by the railroad.

After some discussion between the attorneys representing the conflicting interests, Judge Monroe finally consented to postpone the hearing on the temporary restraining order until next Friday morning.

Suits are to be filed against persons claiming the land on the east and west sides of the breakwater respectively, that the legal questions at issue may be thoroughly tried out.

SCORES SAULS.

SAYS HIS OFFENSE IS VILE.

In sentencing Max Sauls to six years in Folsom, Judge Smith yesterday morning scored Sauls without mercy and said that his was a far worse case than that of Carl Wilson, whom the court had just sentenced to five years in the same prison.

Wilson was convicted of the criminal maltreatment of a young girl, while Sauls was convicted of the embezzlement of $125 from Miss Minnie Brown, a woman of the town, who had given Sauls her rings to pawn that she might help a friend under arrest.

"Sauls, you are a long flight of stairs, morally speaking, below either Miss Brown or this man Wilson," said Judge Smith. "Any one can see that Wilson is not altogether right in his head, and Miss Brown is to be pitied. You worked a smooth, bad game on Minnie and the meanness and depravity of it, of trying to live off the earnings of such a woman, should be beneath the meanest lowest-down dog."

"I have been jobbed here," retorted Sauls. "I was jobbed once before in San Francisco on the same charge. I never lived off a woman in my life. It will leak out some time."

"Oh, yes, yes," said Judge Smith drily. "The sentence of this court is that you be confined in Folsom prison for six years."

DENIES MARRIAGE.

HUSBAND ASKS ANNULMENT.

Judge James yesterday took testimony on Mrs. Annie R. Gidney's application for temporary alimony, pending the final decision of her suit for divorce against Stephen Gidney, which was to have been heard yesterday morning, but was postponed by the court until Friday.

Mrs. Gidney was married to Gidney, who is a Santa Monica business man, in June, 1907. In December she filed a suit for divorce on the ground of cruelty. Gidney then filed a cross complaint asking for an annulment of the marriage, for he asserts that Mrs. Gidney in 1901 married John Dearbaugh, and that while she was granted an interlocutory decree, the final decree had not been entered at the time of her marriage to him. Since the beginning of her divorce proceedings the final decree has been entered, but Gidney asserts that this does validate the marriage.

TOO MUCH WATER.

RANCHER ASKS FOR DAMAGES.

William Cooper, who owns an orange orchard on part of the Marengo tract, South Pasadena, yesterday filed in the Superior Court a suit against the city of South Pasadena, in which he asks that an injunction issue compelling the city to remove an embankment in a watercourse on Mission street, and that he be awarded $3200 damages for injuries done to his land by reason of the damming up of the watercourse at this point.

Cooper says that in January, 1903, the embankment was put in by the city, with the result that the water was deflected into another course through his land, and the united streams have worn away a channel six by ten feet through his ranch and brought many large stones upon his land. He says the water in the old course did his land no damage, but the present flow has been exceedingly detrimental to his interests.

COURTHOUSE NOTES.

BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS.

SUES RAILROAD. Richard R. Coleman, a contractor, yesterday filed suit in the Superior Court against the Tonopah and Tidewater Railroad Company for $26,907, which he says is due him for grading the railroad right of way during 1907.

FINED FOR CRUELTY. George Reed, J. B. Parker and S. E. Lawrence yesterday pleaded guilty in Justice Pierce's court to a charge of cruelty to animals, for having worked a horse when sick with a sore shoulder. Each paid $10 fine.

FOUND GUILTY. Justice Selph yesterday found Attorney H. E. Wills guilty of the embezzlement of $20 from Mrs. May Martin, and sentenced him to pay $50 fine and serve thirty days in the County Jail.

VIOLENCE CHARGED. F. Veyssett was arraigned before Justice Selph yesterday on a charge of threats to kill and another charge of battery, made by S. H. Duncan, who is the complaining witness against Veyssett and two others in connection with the burning of a field of grain at Mountain Meadow ranch in November. Veyssett pleaded not guilty, and bail was fixed at $1000.

INCORPORATION. Articles of incorporation were filed with the County Clerk yesterday by the R. H. Shoemaker, Jr., Company, capital stock, $15,000.

PLEAD GUILTY. Charles McCaw pleaded guilty in Judge Wilbur's court yesterday to grand larceny, for having stolen $200 from William Ayton August 29. Roy Rogers also entered a plea of guilty to the charge of having burglarized J. W. Newman's house December 30. They will be sentenced Monday morning.

IS FORGER. Saveria Rappa, a French youth who passed on a Main-street clothing store an $81 check, bearing the forged signature of L. Robbins, appeared before Judge Smith yesterday for sentence, which was deferred for one week that the case may be further investigated.

GET TWO. Sheriff Hammel yesterday morning received a telegram from Deputy Sheriffs Claude Mathewson and Joseph Sepulveda, Independence, Inyo county, that they have captured Will Westfall, alias Mays, and his pal, who are wanted here for alleged complicity in the stealing of horses by Bob Brown, now under arrest. Mathewson and Sepulveda followed the two men for 350 miles in an automobile, and are on the trail of other men suspected of having shared in the operations of Brown and his associates.

IN THE POLICE COURTS.

Even Justices Puzzled by New Traffic Ordinance—Will Meet to Interpret Its Clauses.

Fifteen drivers were arraigned in the Police Court, yesterday morning, on charges of having violated the new traffic ordinance. Justice Chambers was reduced to despair by the many legal points introduced in its discussion. Before the session of court terminated the Prosecuting Attorney decided that there must be many changes before the law will be fit for use. As it stands its validity may be attacked in a score of ways.

The patrolmen are not as yet thoroughly familiar with the commands of the ordinance, which covers a big sheet of closely printed matter and contains 40 sections. A driver may perform various kinds of feats on one side of the street that he would not dare to attempt on the other. Heavy wagons are forbidden on business streets during certain daylight hours. There are commands, too for bicycle riders and autoists.

The justices of the four Police Courts will meet to interpret the various clauses of the law.

Yesterday only light fines were imposed upon the arrested drivers and this policy will be pursued for the present.

STEALS BRUSH.

For stealing a dust brush, John Henry of North San Pedro street was fined $5 in the Police Court yesterday.

MERCY FOR EX-POSTMASTER.

Gets Three Years in San Quentin. Saved Many More by Plea of Friends and Own Demeanor.

Only the plea for leniency on the part of numerous friends and his own apathetic demeanor, saved Charles E. Lovelace, former Postmaster of Ocean Park, from spending many years in San Quentin. Judge Wellborn of the Federal Court yesterday sentenced him to three years in that institution on two counts—embezzlement and unlawful issuance of a money order. Six other charges were dismissed.

Instrumental in the dismissal of the greater number of charges was United States Dist.-Atty. Lawler, who recommended mercy. Judge Hutton of the Superior Court, in a letter to Judge Wellborn, referred to the former good character of Lovelace and also begged for leniency for him.

For some time it was thought that the former Postmaster was insane, and his friends wanted to take proceedings to prove it, but he refused to entertain such a plan for his liberation. He is supposed to have lost more than $5500 in playing poker and other games of chance. His salary being inadequate to meet these losses, he took the funds of the postoffice. He was arrested in December. At the trial he pleaded guilty. The count charging embezzlement of $3009.98, brought two years, and the other year was given for the issuance of a money order for $100 to J. E. Finall on December 20, for which no money was received. Exemplary behavior may reduce the sentence eight months.

DOPE.

WHEN WHISKY ISN'T WHISKY.

THE LABEL THEN INFORMS YOU WHEN IT'S RISKY.

The Pure Food Law Points Out the Flaw and Brands the Brand With Labels and Thus Makes Plain to Those Who Fain Would Have It on Their Tables What 'Tis.

Early this week it is expected that certificates will be received in Los Angeles from Prof. M. E. Jaffa, in charge of the State laboratory at Berkeley, giving an official analysis of the samples sent to the laboratory last week by Deputy District-Attorney H. S. G. McCartney, who is in charge of the enforcement of the pure food law in this county.

Armed with these certificates, if they show that the samples of food sent North are deleterious or not what they were sold as being, prosecutions will at once be instituted. Yesterday another big box of samples was started on its way to the laboratory, and according to the inspectors who are doing the actual investigating, there are some disguises that are sold as food which would startle the hungriest kind of a hobo.

One of the things which Mr. McCartney hopes to bring about is to put out of the market, so far as Los Angeles is concerned, certain vitriolic brands of alleged whisky which now help to poison the unwary. In case these brands seek a market here in spite of the crusade they will have to be under some other name than "whisky," and whoever buys will have the opportunity of knowing that whisky is not the beverage.

Meanwhile the coming of the certificates of analysis from the State laboratory is awaited with keen interest, and when they get here it is expected they will contain a few surprises for the housewife who has been innocently asking for something which she does not get.

Mr. McCartney stated yesterday that he was agreeably surprised at the excellent showing already made by the big wholesale grocery companies in Los Angeles and among the majority of manufacturers.

"I find the wholesale grocery houses in fine shape," said Mr. McCartney yesterday, "and where I point out any violations they show the greatest willingness to conform to the law. The primary purpose of the law is to establish honest dealing in foods and drugs and to have everything labeled showing just what it is so the consumer will not be deceived; also to stamp out fraud and prevent the use of deleterious substances in food products.

"There is no doubt a great evil has grown up in the manufacture of foods and drugs, especially foods, since the housewife has stopped putting up her own supplies, and the demand has caused the use of cheap and oftentimes deleterious substitutes. The honest manufacturer when he sends out his salesmen finds that retailers say they can get the same thing cheaper elsewhere.

"The big groceries in Los Angeles have on hand fruit stuffs to supply this city for thirty days, yet they have gone over all of this stock and re-labeled it and have stopped dealing in certain brands because they don't comply with the law. Many dealers have told me that they consider this law one of the most important in California to preserve the general health of the public."

One of the things which the inspectors rely upon to help in enforcing the law is the jealousies between retail dealers. Where one dealer tries to live up to the law and finds out that some other dealer is underselling him with a certain illegal article he will see to it that the law is enforced for his own protection. The District Attorney will be ready at all times to hear such complaints and investigate them.

ALMOST PANIC IN THEATER.

Rude Man in Gallery Shouts, "Rotten," While Opera Star Is Singing. Excitement Follows.

A man had the temerity to openly criticise Mlle. Zelie de Lussan, the grand opera star, by yelling "Rotten," during the performance at the Orpheum, yesterday afternoon, and a small panic ensued.

Before the people were aware of what was going on, the scream of a child startled them. A big man, near the front of the first floor, leaped to his feet and dashed madly up the aisle. The handsomely gowned women in the boxes arose and rushed toward the exits, leaving fancy wraps behind them. The singer reassured the audience and quiet was restored.

The fellow who started the trouble had a seat in the gallery, and was accompanied by a little girl. When the fair singer reached a high note, the sweet tone did not appeal to him and he gave voice to the impolite remark. Two or three men who sat near him jumped on him and struck him and then the child screamed. No one was injured and the performance was interrupted only for a few moments.

KNOPF'S LETTER.

...letter has been received by ...hundred of his former asso... "We Boys" class at the First ...Church. Some of them have ...understood his views long ...him. They are not surprised ...This is the letter:

...and Fellow Member of ...of My Association: ...aware of the fact ...withdrawn from the church ...I was associated for about five years, and as I withdrew without publicly giving any reason for my action, I take this occasion for correcting any possible false impression that I have forsaken the blessed Christ, whose steps I have attempted to follow, though with almost total failure while a member of the church of our association.

While apparently enjoying the average Christian experience, I was not at all satisfied with the apparent inconsistent and contradictory teachings of the Bible, and was not at all satisfied with the explanations offered by the different "teachers" to whom I went for information.

I have always been under the impression that the Bible was being neglected for that which is generally sought for, i. e., our "Christian experience," which is really nothing more stable than feeling.

It was with a view to settle, if possible, the many troublesome and apparently contradictory statements of the Bible that I accepted God's promise, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him," and I began to study and search for all possible light on the meaning of His word, and He has rewarded my efforts far beyond my expectations.

Regarding certain reports that are circulated to the effect that I "have been listening to some freak people and have gone off and joined them," I can honestly state that such is not the case, as all my studying and investigating was conducted entirely alone and my decisions were made without any direct persuasion, and it was three weeks after my decisions were made before I was aware of the fact that there were others in the city who held the same views.

"NOT CONSISTENT."

I have not joined nor will I again join any earthly organization, believing, as I do, that the present condition of a couple of hundred different organizations (all claiming His name) is not consistent with God's nature as we know it to be, one of absolute harmony and order.

I would not have you understand that I saw a vision, or had a special revelation; such things are not for this day and age, when we have so many aids to the study of His word, such as are found in the later and better translations and student helps. I will briefly mention a few of the long-buried truths, which answer my former questionings: The Bible, when correctly translated, does not teach that pagan doctrine of "eternal torment" for all but the saints, but that the penalty for willful sin against clear knowledge will be the "second death." That God has been following a definite plan, known to him from the foundation of the world, for the salvation of all mankind who choose to accept Him in the light of clear knowledge of His purpose, which will be known to all, from the least to the greatest, during the next dispensation or next world. I find that the Bible clearly states that God's present work in the world is taking out or preparing a people for His name, the true church, whose names are written in heaven, Acts xv: 14-17, who are to be His agents in bestowing that great blessing during the judgment (or trial day, 1000 years long) upon all mankind who have not had a fair opportunity in this world, including the millions who have gone down to the grave without a knowledge of Him who gave His life a ransom for every one who came into the world.

This judgment or trial day is what is generally known as the millenium and will be inaugurated by the presence of Christ, for whose coming we are taught to pray "Thy kingdom come," and that it is the chief duty of all those who wish to have part in the bestowing of that blessing to prepare themselves for it by a thorough knowledge of His word.

READY REFERENCES.

Also I find no scriptural authority for the doctrine of the immortality of the soul which is so generally accepted, but on the contrary, I Timothy vi, 15-16, clearly teaches that God only hath immortality. I will be glad to furnish you with the scriptural references for these and many other truths which are to be known in this day as part of the "meat in due season to the household of faith."

I find that many of these satisfying truths are in direct conflict with views as held and taught in the denominational literature, etc., and hence in honesty to you and myself I had to withdraw from membership in this church. To remain would be to misrepresent your views and to have you misrepresent my views and would inevitably lead to conflict, especially on the doctrine of eternal torment, which I believe to be a misrepresentation of God's character to the unbelieving world. Let me assure you that in withdrawing it is not because I consider myself "holier than thou," or that I do not care for your associations; on the contrary, I wish that all my former associates might now know the truth which is due to be known and which shall be known to all mankind in that glorious day when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

I withdraw that I may be more free in my conscience toward God and man, and that I may have fuller fellowship with all who are God's people.

I ask no letter of admission, for I could not hope to be better suited in the other denominations than I have been in yours. So far as I am concerned, I wish to remove every barrier between myself and fellow pilgrims, being satisfied that I belong to Jesus Christ and that where He leads me I will follow. So then to all who are in Christ Jesus—members of His body—I still am a fellow member, a branch of the true vine (Christ) whom nothing can separate from the love of God in Christ my Lord. JJohn xv, 5; Rom. viii, 38-39. Faithfully, yours in Christ,

EZRA C KNOPF.

[The Times freely publishes the views of correspondents without holding itself responsible for writers' opinions. Be brief, write plainly, state clearly. The Senate and the President.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 17.—[To the Editor:] I want you to allow me space enough in your columns in which to enlist for the war. I note by the press dispatches that the Senate has declared war on the President. The President is not before the country asking renomination and, at first blush, it would seem as if there was no cause and no object for hostilities, but one doesn't have far to go to find both the casus belli and the motif. It is prompted by the interests who are ably represented in the Senate, and its object is to weaken and destroy President Roosevelt's hold upon the affection and respect of the people. It is plain to the Senators that hardly a man Jack of them will be returned to his present position, if the President retains his hold upon public sentiment and the Senate declines to carry out the President's policy for taking the government of the country out of the hands of the corporations and restoring it to the people.

I first met President Roosevelt a good many years ago at Miles City, Montana, when he was a Montana cowboy engaged in the cattle business in that vicinity. At the time there were quite a number of fairly prominent men engaged in the same business near there, and they used to consult together over their affairs at the Miles City Club. I noticed then that though Mr. Roosevelt was one of the youngest among them and far from having the largest investment in the business, his opinions and views were listened to with marked respect. It was even then clearly apparent that he was a man far above mediocrity. I was then strongly attracted to him, partly, I will confess, because he was an ardent sportsman, very fond of field sports.

Since then, of course, I have followed his career and I think I know him. He is honest and every impulse of his nature is on the right side. I will not say that he does not make mistakes—there is only one infallible man and that is the Pope. If the President makes a mistake, he is big enough and broad enough and man enough to confess and correct it, as far as it can be done. On the main issue between himself and the Senate, which, by the way, is not the appointment of a few paltry postmasters, he is right; he clearly stands for the best interests of the country.

As to the Senate, it has now been fifty years since I first sat in the Senate gallery and looked down on that branch of our lawmakers. I guess "looked down" is right, for in all that time, in my judgment, there were never more than ten or twelve men in the Senate at any one time of real Senatorial stature. These were men of ability who were statesmen acquainted with public affairs and who took part in and really transacted the business of the Senate. I mean men like Judge Douglass, Sherman, Hoar, Benton, Butler, Vest and others that might be named, a class of men who, from their early education, general ability and long experience with public affairs, could arise, and did arise, without any special preparation and discuss everything and anything that came before the body. With the death of Senator Morgan and the retirement of Senator Spooner, the Senate has lost most of its timber that comes up to my idea of a fit and competent United States Senator. I have no hesitation in declaring it to be my unqualified opinion that the present Senate of the United States is the weakest body of men that have filled that chamber since I first saw it. Now, do not misunderstand me. I know there are some good men in the Senate, men of ability in certain directions, honest and honorable men; but take the body, by and large, I say it has fewer men of ability and more men representing the interests that are inimical to the people than at any time within my memory.

AFFAIR OF STATE.

MURDER GOES UNPUNISHED.

Disregard of Southern States for Foreigners.

Powers Demand That the Nation Force Justice.

Data Provided Ignored by Gov. Vardaman.

Complaints made to the State Department by the Italian and other European governments regarding the treatment of foreigners in the South, immediately after the holiday recess, says the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune.

These particular complaints do not concern the peonage cases, which are become so pressing that the matter is to be submitted officially to Congress and, particularly in Mississippi, have now being prosecuted by the Department of Justice at various points in the Southern States. They are much more serious. Cases have been presented to the State Department in which it appears that foreigners have actually been murdered in cold blood, and yet nothing whatever has come of it.

The Federal government is absolutely powerless in such matters. It has no jurisdiction at all in case of murders. All such crimes are punished by State laws alone. Only in the District of Columbia and Territories can the United States see to it that a foreigner gets proper treatment.

FEDERAL POWER TO RESCUE.

The complaints have become so general and so serious that the Secretary of State and the President have concluded to present the matter to Congress, with the recommendation that new laws be passed expressly authorizing the Federal government to become party to any case involving the treaty rights of foreigners.

This will create a tremendous sensation, especially in the Southern States. In all of that section of country special efforts have been exerted within the last two or three years to secure a fair share of the enormous European immigration into the United States.

Many of the States have established immigration bureaus, and have sent agents abroad to assist emigrants to come to the southern part of the United States. In many cases passage money has been advanced and the movement took on extraordinary proportions, until, at last, it ran counter to the contract labor and general immigration laws.

Thousands of these foreigners, citizens of Italy and Austria-Hungary in particular, have been happily placed in Southern States and are prosperous today.

SUFFER UNDER OLD LAWS.

Others have been less fortunate. In most of the Southern States there are peculiar laws regarding labor contracts, as a result of which some of these immigrants who have failed to repay their passage money or have broken their contracts with their employers have been forced to return to work against their will, or have been sent to convict camps and made to labor in chain gangs.

These conditions have been protested against by the foreign governments, and the Department of Justice has instituted dozens of prosecutions under the United States law prohibiting the keeping of men in involuntary servitude. Many of these prosecutions are proceeding slowly, but in other cases the attitude of the Federal government has been entirely satisfactory to the foreign countries which are seeking to protect their own citizens during the early years of their residence in the United States, and before they become naturalized citizens of this country.

MISSISSIPPI CASES FLAGRANT.

Where foreigners have been attacked, and even murdered, or where their property has been forcibly taken away from them the Federal government, of course, is powerless to interfere.

One or two recent cases in Mississippi have stirred up the State Department to such an extent that Secretary Root has informed the foreign ambassadors that he will present the case to Congress and seek to secure authority to protect foreigners whenever local authorities fail in their duty.

There was one murder case in Mississippi which was reported upon by an Italian Consul. The Ambassador presented the matter to the State Department in a strong note and subsequently wrote a letter to Gov. Vardaman. To that he received no reply, even in the way of an acknowledgment.

Thereupon Secretary Root wrote to the Governor last April. This official communication from the Federal government was not answered. Last month the Secretary of State wrote to the Governor again, and received only a curt note of acknowledgment of his communication.

GOV. VARDAMAN UNDER FIRE.

The records of the State Department show that the consul-general furnished to Gov. Vardaman the name of the Italian who was murdered, the circumstances under which the crime was committed, the name of the man who was guilty of the murder a list of witnesses, and all the evidence necessary for a conviction.

In a recent note to the State Department the Italian Ambassador calls attention to this fact and complains that not the slightest notice has been taken nor any steps instituted to bring the murderer to justice.

It is said at the State Department that there are many such cases. The result has been that the Austro-Hungarian government has notified its citizens not to go to Mississippi, Arkansas and one or two other States, and the Italian government is considering action even more sweeping.

Some time ago an Italian Consul-General at New Orleans refused to verify the passports of Italians destined for the Yazoo delta and that vicinity on the ground, first, that the local laws provided for imprisonment for debt, and, secondly, because Italian citizens had been attacked and killed and no steps taken to punish the guilty persons.

PLAN RADICAL, BUT NOT NEW.

In presenting the matter to Congress Secretary Root and President Roosevelt will recommend the passage of a bill providing that any act committed in any State or Territory of the United States in violation of the rights of a citizen or subject of a foreign country, secured by treaty, and constituting a crime under the laws of the State or Territory, shall constitute a like crime against the United States, and may be considered in the Federal courts.

This is radical legislation, but it has been recommended vigorously by both of the last Republican Presidents before Roosevelt.

It is a coincidence that it is Italians who seem to be always the victims. Four times during the decade between 1890 and 1900 the Italian government protested against the summary lynching of its newly-arrived citizens in the United States.

LYNCHERS UNPUNISHED.

The case which stirred up President McKinley happened at Tullulah, La., where five unfortunate Italians were taken from jail and lynched. The State authorities and the Italian Embassy each instituted an investigation, and, as a matter of course, each inquiry resulted in a different finding.

The State authorities assumed the men were naturalized citizens, and, besides that, the local courts asserted they had made due effort to discover the persons who took part in the lynching, but that they had been entirely unable to fix the responsibility on any person sufficiently to justify criminal prosecution.

Of course, nothing was done in the matter at all. The Italian Embassy, the State Department, and Louisiana authorities all went over the ground, but without fixing the guilt on anybody, although nine out of ten men living in the vicinity of the crime knew just who composed the lynching party.

The Federal authorities were powerless then, as they are now, and the only thing to be done was to get Congress to make an appropriation to pay money to the families of the victims of the lynching bee. Even then it was necessary to stipulate that the United States did this as a matter of grace and not one of personal responsibility.

OUTLINE OF PROPOSED LAW.

In presenting this matter to Congress the President and the Secretary of State will endeavor to make it clear that it does not concern such a denial of treaty rights as was alleged in the San Francisco school case.

It is only provided that where a crime has been committted upon the person or property of a foreigner, the Federal courts may assume jurisdiction if it can be shown that any treaty rights are involved, or that the foreigner is not being given exact justice.

for many more. The additional ground is necessitated by the fact that henceforth all the forest reserves in Southern California will be supplied from one nursery.

It is thought that the cheaper cost of production on the new site will more than offset the cost of transportation from Lytle Creek to the San Gabriel reserve.

The late rains have made it impossible to do the usual amount of planting this year but 30,000 seeds have been sown at Lytle Creek. The work will now be continued and, though somewhat late, it is thought that the results will be fully as good as under normal conditions.

AIDE TO NATIONAL PRESIDENT.

Stanton Corps, No. 16, W.R.C., has received new honors through the appointment of one of its members, Mrs. Sophia Hodges of Pasadena, as an aide on the staff of National President W. R.C. Kate Jones of Ilion, N. Y. Although the appointment came as a surprise to both Stanton Corps and Mrs. Hodges, the position will be well filled, as she is entirely able to fill the high office, having held many offices, including that of Corps President, and is at present a member of the Board of Trustees of Stanton Corps.

Rodman is chairman of the Playground Committee. These women will address the convention on these subjects, and make reports of progress in their various lines of work.

The chief topic of the "Civic Day" will be the billboard which disfigures Los Angeles, every city and village in Southern California, and the public highways, the women maintain. Mrs. Kanst will make a report of what has been done—and also what has not been done—owing to the adverse decision of Judge Bordwell. Heretofore, the club women have offered a compromise in that the billboard should be limited in height, and that an intervening space of two feet be made between the bottom of the board and the ground; also, that all obscene advertising be eliminated. Failing in this, they have now declared a war of extermination, maintaining that the billboard must be swept from the streets of Los Angeles and the surface of California. Mrs. Kanst has issued about 500 circular letters to the leading members of the various clubs outlining the campaign. The members are to learn the names of the owners of the ground rented for billboard purposes, and report these names to the association, together with the names of the advertisers. They are also requested to write to the advertisers requesting them to discontinue such advertising. If they do not harken to these mild requests the sins of omission or commission will be visited upon them in some manner, the women declare.

The club women maintain that the billboard is both a private and a public nuisance, that it obstructs the view and decreases the value of property, and that most of the advertising is of a suggestive nature, and much of it is obscene. Hence, the billboard must go! The picturesqueness of Southern California must and shall be preserved, they hold.

Highland Park Club Home.

The Highland Park Ebell, right at the very dawn of the new year, has just completed arrangements for a beautiful $10,000 clubhouse. It will be built at Pasadena avenue and Avenue 57.

Mrs. J. W. Jeffrey is at the head of this enterprising club, and she and her co-workers have been foremost in making their section of the city beautiful and interesting.

The Highland Park Ebell, organized six years ago, has now an enrollment of 125 enthusiastic members. Four new departments have just been added: Shakespeare, in charge of Miss Cunningham; books and conversation, Mrs. Robert Hood; civics, Mrs. Willieil Thomson, and art and travel, Miss Elizabeth Packard.

This club is providing two free child-labor scholarships, and the new committeee on civics has in mind many needed reforms.

—o—

What Other Women's Clubs Are Doing.

The other women's clubs of our city have already much important new work well under way and a glimpse into future plans reveals items of unusual interest. In pioneer days, women, organizing for self-improvement, were content with the study of music, art and letters. Today she is stretching forth a philanthropic hand, and her efforts toward civic and municipal reform is far-reaching.

—o—

An Important Year.

The coming year will be one of greatest interest both local and national. It is biennial year, and already the first thrill of excitement is on, and Los Angeles clubdom is awaiting with interest the return of Mrs. Josiah Evans Cowles, a prominent officer of the general federation, now in Chicago attending a board meeting of the general federation. Many well-known club women are planning to attend this great gathering, which meets at Boston in June.

—o—

Philanthropic Work.

The Ebell, the Cosmos, Wednesday Morning and other departmental clubs are uniting their efforts in much of the philanthroupic work now in progress. Mrs. William Baurhyte was appointed district chairman of philanthropy at the last meeting at Monrovia, and this same gathering indorsed an important issue, that of raising the age limit of girls from 18 to 21 years. An effort will also be made to secure legal aid for the poor, and many an innocent person may thus be saved from the prison pens.

The Woman's Parliament, an all-Southern California organiaztion, reports the work of establishing juvenile courts in all the counties well under way; only Ventura and Orange counties yet to be heard from. This organization meets only once a year and the annual meeting is planned for an early date.

—o—

Departmental Clubs.

The Ebell, of which Mrs. P. G. Hubert is president, has now nearly 900 members, and practically a score of departments. It is planning to furnish the music-room of the Young Women's Christian Association building now being erected at Third and Hill streets. An important new section has just been added, the department of expression. Since women need no longer obey that ancient command, "Silence," members of this department may have the privilege of both oral and literary expression. An interesting feature will be a village newspaper, with Mrs. J. R. Francis as editor-in-chief. The old-fashioned country paper will be burlesqued. Mrs. Charles E. Curtis is the local editor; the dramatic work is in charge of Mrs. R. J. Waters, and the club editor is Mrs. Elmer Calkins. The important position of advertising manager is filled by Mrs. Fred H. Jones, and many celever bits of nonsense are expected. There will be the poets' corner, and the weekly story, and thus old things long since passed away will be revived, reviewed and enjoyed.

The civics department of this club is now arranging an emergency registry bureau. This is intended for aiding worthy women to that kind of employment for which they are best fitted. This plan has been tried in England with unusual success, therefore, it will surely prove highly satisfactory here.

Mrs. George W. Jordan is directing affairs at the Cosmos Club. This club is also providing two scholarships, and added two new departments to the work.

The Friday Morning Club, with its thousand members, led by Mrs. Shelley Tolhurst, is concentrating efforts on the final preparations for their new club home to be built at Adams and Hoover streets. Members and friends expect soon to hear two very important addresses by competent speakers, one on "Local Manufacturers," and the other on "The New Movement Against Tuberculosis."

The Ruskin Art Club will give an exhibition of studies in black and white in the early spring, and later will take up the study of magazine illustrating and Japanese art.

Among the newer musical organizations is the Dominant Club, also the Harmonia Club, which is composed of musicians of the southwest section.

The Ebell Club will meet on Monday with Mrs. Frank A. Kelly, in charge. The subject will be "Current Topics." Mrs. Robert J. Burdette, Mrs. W. S. Bartlett and Mrs. Eliza T. Wilkes will speak.

The Cosmos Club will meet Wednesday. Speakers to discuss educational problems will be Mrs. O. S. Barnum, Mrs. E. R. Root and E. J. Likely. A parliamentary session precedes the regular meeting. The Shakespeare section for Tuesday will be conducted by Mrs. H. C. Gower at No. 1407 De Long street.

FIGHTS THROUGH FLAMES.

By Lamp Explosion, Man Loses Home, Garage and Auto and Sustains Burns.

Fire resulted from the explosion of a night lamp, destroyed the home of S. S. Berry, at No. 240 West Fifty-fourth street, early yesterday morning. He had to fight his way out of the house through the flames and was burned on his hands and neck.

The building and furniture were valued at $600. A small garage in the back yard was also destroyed, and an automobile valued at $1000.

MAN AND HORSE KILLED.

Plumber Tries to Cross in Front of Rapidly-Approaching Car and Loses His Life.

Going at a high rate of speed yesterday morning, an in-bound Long Beach car struck and instantly killed Ebenezer F. Melville, a plumber, who lived at Fifteenth and Tennessee streets. The body was thrown fifteen feet into the air and the horse, driven by Melville, was hurled upward higher than the car top and killed. The man was mangled almost beyond recognition. The light wagon was splintered into pieces and one wheel was all that was left intact.

Melville, who was driving east on Fifteenth street, attempted to cross in front of the rapidly-approaching car. He owned a shop at No. 228 East Seventh street. The body is at the Pierce morgue, where an inquest will be held Monday. He leaves a widow and one little son.

CALL DISCUSSES HARBOR.

Joseph H. Call addressed the Non-Partisans yesterday at the noonday luncheon on the subject of the San Pedro harbor. He devoted much time in opening to the organization and conduct of railroads. He declared, among other things, that, "At the present time the city of Los Angeles only threatens to enforce water competition. She is now practically shut off from the ocean and occupies the position of Denver, Salt Lake and other inland cities." "San Pedro, with ten miles of water-front, holds but thirty feet, and that through a lease from the Southern Pacific Railroad, and has bound herself not to use that for commerce, but only for pleasure or fishing. There is not a foot of water-front where a citizen of Los Angeles may land without committing trespass upon the property of the Southern Pacific Railroad." "The United States government has entire control of the situation, but there is not a Senator or member of Congress from California who would, if he could, cast a vote to open the San Pedro harbor to free commerce." Mr. Call spoke in favor of the plan of Capt. Fries to dig canals to the half-mile strip of this city and into Long Beach, but declared if such a step were taken, it would not receive the support of the California delegation in Congress.

CLOSED FOR A DAY.

The Ramona school in the Cahuenga district, between East Hollywood and Los Angeles, which was closed Friday to be fumigated, will reopen tomorrow morning.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

OMAHA (Neb.) Jan. 14.—

Joseph Zoover.	Geo. W. W. Smith.
Charles E. Ewing.	Henry Straw.
John J. Suits.	Jesse Luman.
O. H. Scott.	Thomas Birchell.
Philip Moomaw.	Edgar Fenton.
Charles Hitchcock.	Charles Henshy.
D. C. Bigford.	A. W. Townsend.

Mrs. A. W. Townsend of Dodge, Neb., has been married to fourteen men within the last forty-five years. Above is a list of their names, in the order in which she married them. Her marriage to Mr. Townsend, who is a wealthy retired farmer, has just been celebrated.

Mrs. Townsend became the wife of Joseph Zoover, who was a Colorado miner, when she was 12 years old, and before she was 14, she was a mother and a widow. Before she was 15 she was married to Ewing, who was also a miner in Colorado, and before she was of age she had had several husbands, and was the mother of a number of children.

She is now 58 years old, and is a well-preserved and by no means an unattractive woman.

TWELVE VETERANS.

All but five of her fourteen husbands are living. All but two of the fourteen were old soldiers—veterans of the Civil War.

Zoover, Suits, Scott, Bigford and Smith are dead. Ewing lives in Colorado, being at Cripple Creek when his former wife last heard from him. Moomaw lives in Salt Lake City; Hitchcock lives in Oakland, Cal.; Straw lives in Council Bluffs, recently returning there from Leavenworth, Kan.; Luman lives in Council Bluffs, returning there from Quincy, Ill.; Birchell lives in Council Bluffs; Fenton lives in Seattle, and Henshy lives in Dayton, O.

Mrs. Townsend was married to both Zoover and Ewing in Colorado. With Ewing she came East to Council Bluffs soon after their marriage. She divorced him there before she was out of her teens, thereupon setting out upon that matrimonial career which has been the wonder of all who knew her and is, doubtless, without a parallel in the history of the West.

Her partiality for old soldiers as husbands Mrs. Townsend explains in this wise:

"The men who enlisted in the army, went to the front, and fought for the preservation of their country in the early sixties, always commanded my respect. Respect is a good basis for love. Being prepossessed in favor of the old soldiers who paid court to me, they naturally had less difficulty to win my love and get my consent to marry them than other men would have had.

"My present husband, Mr. Townsend, is an old soldier. A braver and better man never charged the enemy on the field of battle, and a kinder and gentler one never asked a woman to become his wife."

GETS THEM MIXED.

Mrs. Townsend has had so many husbands that she sometimes experiences a bit of difficulty to recall the names of some of them. When she talks of them she occasionally gets their names confused and has to stop and think to get them straight in her mind. Their faces she cannot always recall to mind at will, either. Nor can she always recall clearly just what sort of men some of them were mentally, morally and spiritually.

"Of course I know the names of all my husbands when I stop to think," she said. "It is true, however, that I do get them confused in my mind occasionally. Within a period of a very short time I was married to and separated from a good many men. With some of them I lived but a few months. It is those with whom I lived so short a time that I sometimes cannot recall to my mind readily. Some of my husbands I remember very, very distinctly, and can tell you all about."

For somewhat more than thirty years this remarkable woman made her home in Council Bluffs, where she is well known. Most of her numerous marriages were celebrated there. Her old neighbors in Council Bluffs have a good word to say for her despite her peculiar views on marriages and the extraordinary matrimonial record she has established.

The men living in Council Bluffs who were formerly her husbands speak not unkindly of her, either.

THEY'RE ALL FRIENDLY.

Her children have opposed her marrying so frequently, but they say she is a woman of good heart and has always been good to them.

"I was her husband once," said Henry Straw, "and I have nothing to say against her, either. We separated, and she went her way and I went mine. She has been married several times since our separation, but I wish to say that, even though we didn't get along, there are lots worse women in the world than she is. We didn't have any particular trouble, come to think of it. She just seemed to get tired of living with me, and we agreed to separate. The fact is she hasn't been able of late to content herself with a husband of any kind for more than a year or so. She would marry a man—generally an old soldier—keep house and live with him as his wife for ten or twelve months, and then get dissatisfied and hanker after another man. The upshot of it would be that she and her husband would part and she would get married again in a little while.

"I don't know just how she manages, but she never seems to have a mite of trouble to get a new husband when she wants one. There must be something mighty cute and fetching about her, else she couldn't do it, that's all. The man she married last—Townsend is his name—is, I hear, a mighty fine old chap, with lots of money. I am glad she has at last married a rich man. The rest of us old fellows whom she has tried to trot with in double harness never had any money, and I guess our poverty was the principal thing that made her dissatisfied with us and drove her to look up new husbands. I shouldn't be a bit surprised if she should settle down now in the cosy home her husband has taken her to and quit the matrimonial game for good.

"None of us former husbands of hers, so far as I know, begrudges her the money she has married, and all of us, I reckon, wish her nothing but happiness and prosperity. She is a pretty good sort of woman, taken all in all."

FAMILY WAS MORMON.

"Mother's people were Mormons in the early days," said Mrs. Townsend's son, John Ewing, of Council Bluffs. "Her father was from Pennsylvania, and most of his family came out to Utah to join the Mormons. Mother herself has never been a Mormon, but I have a notion that she got her peculiar ideas on marrying from the Mormons. She does not think she is to be censured for getting married so many times. She thinks it is wrong for a woman to live alone, and whenever she has found herself alone she has gone out and looked up a new husband. She had five children by my father, who was her second husband, and I must say that, despite the fact that she has had so many husbands to look after, she has been a good mother to us. She did not neglect us when we were little, and her love for us has never since then grown cold. She has a very warm, tender heart, and to those husbands who were kind to her, she was a good wife. She separated from most of the men she married, but I am convinced that the fault was theirs, not hers."

As for Mrs. Townsend herself, she says the explanation of her fourteen marriages lies in the fact that she is of a very affectionate nature, and cannot live happily alone, and to the further fact hat every woman needs a husband to support her.

"A widow has a hard time to get along alone in this world," she said. "I have been married a good many times, but I am afraid I have not had the best of luck in my marriages. It seems to me that just when I would get a husband who loved and was good to me, he would up and die, and I would have to get another. I have a very affectionate nature and I never could be happy and content without some one to bestow my love upon. Whenever I would lose a husband I would get lonely and despondent, and there was just nothing for it but for me to marry again. I have lost some of my husbands by death, and I have had to separate from the rest of them because they were unkind to me or would not support me. To none of them was I a bad wife. I always tried hard to do my part as a wife, but some of my husbands did not even try to do what they should have done."

ADVERTISED AT LAST.

Mrs. Townsend has a pleasant face, a matronly figure, dresses in good taste, has a fairly good education, is intelligent, talks well, and men and women who know her well declare that she is possessed of that something called personal magnetism to an uncommon degree.

She advertised for a husband after her separation from her thirteenth husband, and in this way she became acquainted with and finally became the wife of Mr. Townsend. Townsend himself desired a wife, and when he read Mrs. Townsend's advertisement he straightway sat down and wrote her a letter. She answered his letter and after keeping up a correspondence for awhile, he went to Council Bluffs to see her. They fell in love with each other at first sight, and before they had been in conversation an hour they were engaged to be married. Their marriage ensued in a very short time, and he took his bride to his snug little home in the pretty little town of Dodge.

Mr. Townsend is about 65 years old, is hale and hearty, a man prepossessing in personal appearance and address, and is held in the warmest regard by all who know him. He has lived in and near Dodge for many years, and no man in the community is more respected and honored than he.

He and his wife are very happy together and are very fond of and devoted to each other. Mrs. Townsend is so happy and content and is so attached to her fourteenth husband that she thinks she will never again have to be led to Hymen's altar.

NOW SHE'S HAPPY.

"I have been happier with my last husband than I ever was with any of the others," she declared. "He has been perfectly lovely to me, and I shall try to be a sweet, loving wife to him. He is just the dearest man, and I am so fond and proud of him."

Mrs. Townsend has never suffered her children to influence her in matrimonial affairs. She always declared that she was the best judge of her own heart and that she could brook no interference in her love affairs from any of her children or from any of her friends.

When she was married to Mr. Townsend, her daughter wrote her: "According to report, mother, this is about your thirty-second venture upon the sea of matrimony. For the sake of the family, I hope you will stay married this time."

"I expect to stay married this time," says Mrs. Townsend. "Mr. Townsend and I are just as happy as we can be, and it is perfectly ridiculous to think of our separating."

Mrs. Townsend says it is easy enough for any woman to capture the husband she sets her heart upon if she but manage right.

"I never had the least difficulty to marry any man I desired to make my husband," she declared. "Any woman can marry any man she may choose to marry if she goes about it right. Husbands are not hard to win."

Increase in Number of Immigrants Making Return Trip to Europe Is Enormous.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—The rush of immigrants to return to Europe keeps up, and the figures for January will show an enormous increase over the same month last year.

Already in seventeen days 30,056 steerage passengers have left New York, as against 9476 last year. During the same period this year only 7138 steerage passengers have arrived at this port.

The increase in east-bound steamer passengers this month is 210 per cent., and the outward flow is greater by 320 per cent. than the incoming.

WELL WORTH KNOWING

ANY LUMP IN WOMAN'S BREAST IS CANCER.

The papers made mention some time ago of several marvelous cures of large cancers in women's breasts by Dr. Chamley, the world renowned cancer specialist at 747 South Main St., Los Angeles, Cal. This Doctor makes the bold assertion that he has in over 35 years cured more cancers than any other Doctor living and offers $1000 if he fails to cure any single cancer he treats. Strictly reliable; no X-ray or other swindle. The fact that not a dollar need be paid until cured should convince the most skeptical of the Doctor's honesty and fair dealing. He has, probably the best book ever printed on cancers and tumors cured without knife or pain, wherein he teaches and proves that any lump in woman's breast is cancer. This book of testimonials of thousands of wonderful cures everywhere is sent free to all who write Dr. and Mrs. Dr. Chamley & Co., describing their cancer. The reader may save a life by sending this to some one with cancer.

MAY ANNEX DOLGEVILLE.

Question of Extending Boundaries of City of Alhambra to Be Submitted.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

ALHAMBRA, Jan. 18.—The question of annexing Dolgeville, lying west of Alhambra, and a strip of territory south of the city, is agitating the public mind here. The Board of Trade has called for a public meeting next Wednesday evening at the High School auditorium to discuss the matter. The election for final determination is to be held on Thursday next. Predictions are that there will be a majority in favor of the proposition.

The City Marshal found an aged woman wandering about the streets last night after midnight. She carried a small satchel, and could not give any account of herself, save that her name was Mrs. Nellie Townsend. The Marshal took her to the hotel, and had her kindly cared for. The old lady was quite deaf, and talked in an incoherent way about Highland Park. She was neatly attired, and had the appearance of being a person of intelligence and culture. The officer took her to the County Hospital today on a warrant for insanity.

Francisco Jesus, a young Mexican, was arraigned today before the township justice for disturbing the peace. The defendant, in the course of an unmapped programme, made a loud and unusual noise and also annexed a horse and buggy belonging to W. W. Wiley, and meandered into a near-by garden, making havoc with flowers and other forms of vegetable life.

With that the patrolman folded up the paper and passed it to the offender with advice to study it.

A minute afterward the automobile of a rich Los Angeles man passed the corner, and again the officer held up his warning stick.

"That's all right," said the autoist nervously, as the officer steered him over to a curb. "That's all right; I know all about that ordinance."

"That can't be possible," said the officer, "because I know you have too high a regard for the law to violate it if you knew."

Out came the inevitable ordinance, while the crowd stood around and gaped.

"Ordinance No. 15,755 (new series) . . ." read the copper.

After the autoist escaped, came a dye wagon driver, who howled with rage at being held up. The people of the clothing to which he is attached rushed out, threatening and waving their hands.

"Why," they yelled, "why do you arrest our man?"

"Why?" repeated the officer, amiably. "I will tell you why."

He produced a folded paper. "Ordinance No. 15,755 (reading) new series An ordinance regulating traffic . . . ."

"That's all right, that's all right," muttered the clothing man, as the crowd began gathering. "I don't want to know about it."

"An ordinance regulating travel and traffic upon the streets and other public places of the city of Los Angeles . . . ." continued the officer, on through to the end.

One thing is certain; the traffic ordinance will be observed at Third and Broadway—and without arrest.

Patrolman Lennon makes no arrests. He has his own ingenious way of impressing the law on the public mind.

RECORD TIME TO GOLDFIELD.

Theo Tetzlaff Makes Trip in Fifteen Hours and a Half Running Time. Delayed by Broken Spring.

Theo Tetzlaff, in a Pope-Toledo touring car, has lowered the Los Angeles to Goldfield record to fifteen hours and twenty-five minutes running time, the elapsed time being forty-one hours and twenty minutes, which included a stop over night at Daggett to sleep and eat and stops for meals at San Bernardino, Victorville, Chino Ranch and Rhyolite.

The car belongs to George Vickers, a mining man in Goldfield, and recently came down from that mining camp in seventeen hours running time. He instructed his driver, Theo Tetzlaff, to take the machine back to Goldfield as promptly as possible, and he would meet him there, having to return by cars on another route. Teddy left the White garage in this city with the big car, accompanied by Sydney Kendall, a local driver, for company, at about 11 o'clock in the morning. He made the run to San Bernardino in two hours, which is seven minutes faster than the time made on Friday last by Edgar Apperson in his racing car. Daggett was reached at 7:45 o'clock that evening, a stop for dinner having been made at San Bernardino and for supper at Victorville.

The next morning the car pulled out of Daggett at 7 o'clock and reached Crackerjack at 9:45 o'clock and Rhyolite at 7 o'clock in the evening, where Tetzlaff stayed till nearly 2 o'clock in the morning, fixing a broken spring and to change tires, having had some punctures. He was delayed twice with tire troubles and once with a broken chain, and once with a dirty spark plug.

The running times between places, all of which are town-to-town records, are as follows:

Los Angeles to San Bernardino, 2 hours; San Bernardino to Daggett, 3 hours and 35 minutes; Daggett to Crackerjack, 2 hours and 5 minutes; Crackerjack to Chino Ranch, 2 hours and 20 minutes; Chino Ranch to Rhyolite, 3 hours, 45 minutes; Rhyolite to Goldfield, 1 hour and 40 minutes; total, 15 hours and 25 minutes.

Tetzlaff says that he can make the run in 12 hours running time, the total distance being 435 miles.

The new assembly hall in the Los Angeles High School will be opened to the public, Friday and Saturday evenings, with a unique entertainment, which posters, done by young artists of the school, describe as the "High School Nemead." (Time in ancient Nemead was reckoned not by years but 'Nemeads.")

The 1600 young people have contributed a great many bright ideas and the programme of the first Nemead promises to be something memorable indeed. Artists, musicians, actors, gymnasts will all have part. Spontaneity and sparkle, cleverness and fun will be combined with spectacular beauty.

PERFUMED PESTS.

SILLY WOMEN SIT IN FRONT.

Disgusting Type of "Female Johnnie" Appears.

Amorous Idiots Ogle Stars in Local Playhouses.

Insults Fly in the Guise of Insipid Compliments.

Arrayed in fluffy garments, smelling of liquid that comes in fancy bottles at $2.85 an ounce, and all prepared for the conquest, a new theatrical pest, known as the "Female Johnnie," has descended upon the city, with the avowed intention of making the leading men on the local stages tremble before her glances.

Managers say the "Female Johnnie" has every other kind of nuisance "backed up a tree and yelling for help." The class has developed in the last few months, probably in preparation for the opportunities offered by leap year.

At any matinée one may see their "deadly" work. There are dozens of them; some old-timers, who have flirted with leading men regularly for half a year, and who have the seats in the front row reserved for them. It matters not whether she be young or old, the "Female Johnnie" is certainly giddy. Like the old bald-heads, who have long been the butt of jokes, the spinster Johnnies furnish amusement for any one who studies them.

The front row, once was always reserved by men; now it is to a great extent retained by women. The first-nighters, who used to gape at the dainty lingerie of the chorus girls and wink at their bepainted faces, have been compelled to take a back seat. Hence the dainty kickers of the musical comedy shows are not being treated to so many wine suppers of late.

The back doors of the theaters are no longer surrounded by an eager, excited group of men, waiting to get a view of fair damsels as they leave the stage entrance. In their places are giggling "mashers" of the other sex, who ogle the leading man unmercifully when he appears, and frequently insult him by brutal remarks about the color of his eyes and hair, the turn of his ankles and the size of his feet.

These matinée hero worshipers weekly purchase seats in the front row at the Mason Operahouse and at the Belasco and the Burbank similar conditions obtain.

The most dazzling glances shot across the footlights by amorous males would look cold beside those of the Female Johnnie, when once she catches the eye of her favorite.

WOMEN ON STAGE IGNORED.

Does the presence of other women on the stage embarrass the damsel? Not at all. She ignores the other women. They do not count. Wealthy widows, either of the grass or turf variety, are most dangerous. There are two or three from Pasadena, who never miss a matinée at the Mason Operahouse. In fact, this theater is a sort of clearinghouse for stars on matinée day. It generally comes on Wednesday, when the other companies are not working, and many actors from the stock companies attend the Mason. When a light of the theatrical world appears in the lobby, he is compelled to thread his way through groups of women, who make remarks about him, in the hope that they will get one little smile in return. Lucky is the star who escapes hearing something like this: "That's him. Ain't he cute? I could just love him to death." They talk about his clothes, whether he looks young or old, whether he has lived a good life. They tell him how often he has been married, how many children he has, and whether he likes blondes or brunettes best. They have found out these things by comparing notes.

All the women, of course, want to be introduced to a star, and if they find a man of their acquaintance who knows him, the latter must grant their wishes. And then what happens? Why, the Female Johnnie looks deep into the hero's eyes, turns to her friend with a giggle and says: "'Ain't he just too cute for any use?" The same language is also frequently used in speaking of a pet poodle.

SOME STARS' EXPERIENCES.

Henry Woodruff, the curly-headed blonde with the "Brown of Harvard" show, had a dimple in his fair white chin that caused the female oglers "to sit up and take notice." And the things they said about "peaches and cream!"

Dustin Farnham, who plays the Virginian, had to keep a body guard to prevent the female mashers from cutting off locks of his hair as souvenirs. William Faversham, too, who appeared as the "Squaw Man," received so many tender glances that he fairly blushed.

A widow with money will call an usher and send a note behind the scenes asking for an interview or extending an invitation to lunch. The star rejects these politenesses.

Often the matinee idol is besieged by women with autograph albums. The stage hands generally supply signatures and send them back to the fair owners, who impress fervid kisses upon the ink spots made, perhaps, by the grimy hands of the electrician.

It is almost as much as a star's life is worth to walk the streets. Lewis Stone, of the Belasco Theater, is insulted right and left every time he makes a public appearance. And he is a gentleman and never flirts, but that doesn't make any difference to the absurd females.

Willie Desmond of the Burbank gets similar treatment, but he puffs out his chest, holds his head high and looks into the far distance.

Stone is a modest man. At his club he dons an apron and serves up frijoles and beef with pepper sauce when[illegible] it comes his turn, and he can wash dishes with the best of them. But he hates notoriety. But on New Year's day he rode in the procession. All along the line women fairly squealed their joy at seeing him.

On the return trip from Pasadena he rode with a party of friends. Automobiles filled with girls drew up alongside his horse and the girls stared insolently at him, made remarks about him and then followed in his wake for blocks.

HERE'S THE CHANCE.

New York Genius, for Two Dollars a Day, Essays to Carry Ocean Through Los Angeles to Long Beach.

For $2 a day and the transportation of himself, wife, son and baby from New York, Los Angeles may obtain the services of a modest genius, who has a plan for making this a real port of entry, with ships sailing through the Los Angeles River the year 'round, making a half-circle from Santa Monica to Long Beach.

Secretary Wiggins of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce has received a letter from E. V. J. Richmond, of Richmond Hill Circle, Old South Road, New York City, (which sounds wonderfully like Paul Revere's ride,) in which is contained a drawing of the project for connecting the ocean with itself through hills and valleys and a part of the Los Angeles River.

Richmond says he lived in Los Angeles from 1904 to 1907, but left here because of the "lack of moisture and the barrenness of everything during dry season."

This lack of moisture he proposes to remedy by circulating water freely through the city, tapping the ocean at Santa Monica and carrying it around in a semi-circle to Long Beach, there to get back to its own.

Richmond would freshen the salt water by simple means, but declares he would not have it understood that he is attempting to rival the Owens River plan. In fact, he says he would have broached the subject while here, except that the big Owens River scheme absorbed all attention.

The genius regrets that he will have to ask $2 a day for his services as engineer in charge, but he feels that they would be worth it.

YELLOW FOR RED.

MUCH GOLD IN STRAWBERRIES.

PROFIT OF FIFTEEN HUNDRED AN ACRE OBTAINED.

The President's Table Supplied from Los Angeles in Winter Months—Shipments East Made by Express—Luscious Fruit Enjoyed Here Always at Low Cost.

"Strawberries in January strikes the average citizen of the East as wonderful, although the very wealthy people can have them at any time by paying as high as a dollar a basket for fruit grown in the hothouse or shipped from the districts around Los Angeles.

The forwarding of strawberries at this season has developed into a very profitable industry. Special arrangements have been made for handling them by the railroads. One of the latest inventions is a refrigerator, which travels by express to its destination, and carries thirty-six, forty-five or 108 baskets, according to its size. The principal points to which the fruit is sent are New York, Chicago, Cleveland, St. Louis and Washington, D. C.

The berries shipped to the capital are, as a rule, for the tables of Congressmen, and special lots are sent to the White House, of Brandywines, which are very hardy, and keep better than any other varieties. Prices, net Los Angeles, on eastern shipments at present, are from 40 to 60 cents a basket. There have been seasons in which the first-mentioned sum has been doubled. Losses are not very frequent, because of the precautions taken.

In this city, and ordinary wage-earner may enjoy the luscious strawberry from January 1 to December 31, at an average price, the year around, of 7 cents a basket. During the most plentiful season prices are down to 5 cents, and even in February and March, when the berries ripen slowly and are rather scarce, prices never exceed 20 cents.

This year the crop is heavy, owing to the continued warmth of the weather. The Tropico and Glendale Berry Growers' Association is forwarding a daily average of 200 cases to its local agents, in addition to quantities sent to the North and near-by points. The Gardena and Moneta associations ship as much more, and Irwindale about half the amount. The daily consumption of berries in Los Angeles exclusively this month has been about 500 cases. In the spring and summer, it is 2000 cases.

The grower prospers. From data secured, it is learned that a yearly net profit of $1500 an acre is expected. This has frequently been exceeded in good years. A Tropico patch of three acres in six months brought its owner $5765 net.

Many fields in this section are owned by white people, but cared for by Japanese and Chinese, who have proven themselves particularly fitted for the tiresome routine work of keeping down weeds and making daily pickings and weekly irrigations.

The life of a strawberry plant is generally three years. Then it is pulled up, and the ground fertilized and new plants put in. The variety which at present enjoys the greatest popularity is the Brandywine, a berry large and solid. Excelsiors are close seconds, and a host of others are propagated with more or less success. The towns of Tropico, Glendale, Moneta, Gardena, Strawberry and Irwindale have become famous for their berry production. Preparations are going on apace in all of these places, as well as in new fields for the planting of extra acres.

TRY TO DRAW GUNS.

Two Men Carrying Sacks Filled With Chicken Feathers Resist Arrest. Valuable Fowls Missing.

With almost a score of raids on poultry yards charged against them, M. Golendo and M. V. Gomez were arrested yesterday morning in the University district. They carried sacks filled with chicken feathers and submitted to arrest only after a desperate fight, in which they attempted to draw revolvers on the officer.

For a month the police at the University Station have been receiving reports regarding the theft of chickens in the fashionable residence section. Several hundred valuable fowls have disappeared.

DOWNING STREET.

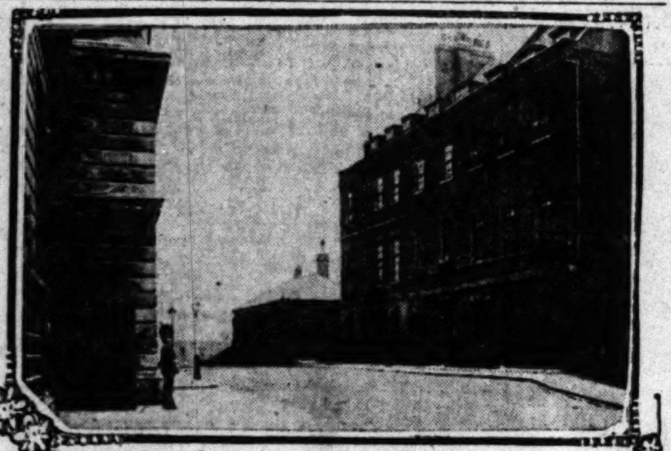
"CONNECTING LINK" TO BE CLOSED TO PUBLIC.

Thoroughfare that Is Hub of British Empire Built by and Named After an American—Government in Fear of Riots by "Suffragettes."

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Jan. 9.—"The most famous street in the world," as it is called here, is about to be closed to the public. This is Downing street, which ex-Ambassador Joseph H. Choate once described as "the connecting link" between England and America, and which certainly is one of the most interesting streets in the world, if it be not the most famous.

Downing street is the hub of the great British Empire, yet as a street it is insignificant. In fast, it is worse; it is the dreariest, dingiest cul-de-sac imaginable, and is dignified by being called a street at all. Excepting the big government buildings which corner it there are but two houses, Nos. 10 and 11. One is the official residence of the Prime Minister of England, the other of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The first of these, "No. 10," is indisputably one of the most historic buildings in existence.



"10 Downing Street,"
the shabby little two-story building, which for over 200 years has been the official residence of Prime Ministers of England. Lest it should be raided by the irrepressible British "Suffragettes," the famous street in which it stands is about to be closed to the public.

It is in Downing street that the British Cabinet meets. It is here that the most important matters affecting the Empire are discussed, ministries made and broken, and peace and war declared.

So it is rather surprising that Downing street should have been owned, laid out and built by an American. Yet it is so. It was in this connection that Mr. Choate referred to it in a memorable speech at the London Guild Hall as "the connecting link between the Old World and the New."

There is, of course, a sufficient reason for such a surprising step as the closing of Downing street to the public. The government scarcely would go to all the trouble of passing a special act through Parliament for the purpose unless it thought the matter of sufficient importance. Governments do not always take the public into their confidence, and so the reason may for a long time be kept an official secret. Yet the open secret is that the government is afraid—and afraid of women, too! The women happen to be that vast body yclept "Suffragettes" which, in various guises, has been disturbing political meetings and generally threatening Cabinet Ministers all over England the last few weeks or more.

There have been whispers that the Suffragettes intended besieging the official residences of the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In days gone by there have been two riots in Downing street. Perhaps the government is heedful of that wise baseball saw, "Three times and out," and wishes to prevent a third one. At any rate, the street is to be closed, and if the Suffragettes desire to do any rioting, they must do it elsewhere.

WHO WAS DOWNING?

Downing street, as I have said, was started by an American. His name was George Downing, but he was not an American on whom the United States can pride itself. A historian of his own nationality, in fact, declares that "it became a proverbial expression with New Englanders to say of a false man, who betrayed his trust, that he was an arrant George Downing!"

This Downing was the son of Emmanuel Downing of Salem, Mass. His mother was Lucy, sister of Gov. John Winthrop. He was educated at Harvard, and was the second graduate of the University. For a time he was professor there, teaching the younger students. Then he went off to the West Indies, was chaplain of the ship, and did a deal of preaching. He eventually reached England. The times were troublous, the Civil War was raging, and Downing sided with Cromwell. He became chaplain to Okey's regiment. Before he was 30 years old, he suddenly appeared as general scoutmaster to Cromwell's army in Scotland. He was afterward engaged in the settlement of Scotland, and appointed his father clerk of the Council of Scotland.

Downing's forward rise was much helped by his marriage. His wife was Frances Howard, sister of the Earl of Carlisle. He curried favor with Cromwell, and was appointed Treasurer of England, and later became Cromwell's foreign policy maker. He journeyed to Holland, to France, Denmark, Sweden and Portugul, and, finally, as Holland was in those days one of the most important countries, he became Ambassador at The Hague.

When the King once more came into his own, Downing's peace was made with Charles II by Thomas Howard, brother of the Earl of Suffolk and ancestor of the man who has made Daisy Leiter of Chicago and Washington an English Countess.

The King reappointed Downing as Ambassador to Holland. At the King's instigation he brought on a war with Holland. After this, when again at The Hague, he chased and captured three of the regicides, among them Okey, his old colonel, friend and protector. He arrested these men, responsible for the beheading of Charles I by a trick, pretending to befriend them.

Although he was generally condemned for this, the King was pleased. Downing was made a baronet and given a grant of land in Whitehall. This is the land upon which Downing street now stands.

The man's actions in arresting the regicides so angered the Dutch that a mob went after Downing and he fled from The Hague. On arrival in England he was clapped into the Tower for leaving his post without leave. He remained there only a month, though, for that doll-faced French woman, the Duchess of Portsmouth, one of the King's mistresses, interceded for him.

Soon after Downing was restored to favor the King made him the chief treasurer. Downing gave the profligate King all the money he wanted and in several pamphlets defended his royal master. He also saw that the King's three chief mistresses, the Duchess of Portsmouth, Lady Castlemaine and Nell Gwynn, had their share of dips into the English treasury.

He was such a great sycophant that he secured a grant of $400,000 from the King. He served in all the Parliaments and was known as "the house-bell to call all the courtiers to vote."

So much for the founder of Downing street. His abilities were proved by his career but his reputation was stained by servility, treachery and avarice.

HISTORIC INCIDENTS.

Naturally the scenes and incidents that the street has witnessed in the past 250 years are vivid with interest. Here the gay Lady Castlemaine wandered from her walk in Whitehall Gardens to chat and intrigue with the man who guarded the nation's gold. Here the dainty Duchess of Portsmouth also visited Downing's mansion secretly to intrigue with and to cajole the American who handled the treasury. And here no doubt other fair ones, whom the rollicking King had made great ladies of title, came to get their share of the golden stream.

In the time of James II, as now, the position of master of the horse was one of the most important at court and in Lord Lichfield's mansion there were held numbers of secret councils where conspiracies and plots were hatched.

Great men not only lived there but died or were born in this street. Aubrey de Vere, last Earl of Oxford, died there over two centuries ago. Lady Walpole and Lord Iddesleigh also died at No. 10. Herbert Gladstone, son of the Grand Old Man, was born there and although he is only Home Secretary of the present government and indeed is shortly resigning, yet his home is now at No. 11, yielded to him by the Chancellor of the Exchequer whose official residence it properly is.

FAMOUS DENIZENS.

Others who have lived in the street are the two Pitts, Lord Grey, Spencer Perceval, Lord Liverpool, Canning, Lord Melbourne, Sir Robert Peel, Disraeli, Gladstone, Lord Salisbury, Balfour and a score or more whose names are known throughout the world. It was here that Lord Chatham hastily was brought when he had his fatal fit in Parliament.

Sir Robert Walpole was the first Prime Minister to make "No. 10" his home. Lord North, whom England blames for losing America, merely lodged on one of the floors and gave the other to another Cabinet Minister. Pitt, Lord Grey, Disraeli, Gladstone and Balfour actually made it their home. Other Prime Ministers used it more or less merely as offices.

It was on Downing street, in the reception-room at No. 14, the Colonial Department, that Wellington and Nelson met for the only time. They were not introduced, but merely chatted together, and after separation Nelson learned Wellington's identity.

In the early reform riots a mob ran into Downing street and rushed upon the sentry at the main entrance of the Foreign Office shouting, "Liberty or Death!"

The soldier presented his musket and shouted, "Halt! I know nothing of liberty, but if you come a step farther I'll show you what is death."

At the second reform riots, another mob came into the street, and assembled around the Prime Minister's residence, and prepared to pull it down about his ears. The Premier coolly looked on at the antics of the mob from one of the upper windows. Troops arrived before any real damage was done.

It was in the old Cabinet room on the ground floor of the Prime Minister's house where occurred the dramatic scene between Lord Grey and Stuart, a London coal merchant who had amassed a fortune. Stuart wanted to become a great power in politics, and so bought the Courier, then one of the biggest of newspapers. He visited Lord Grey, and offered him the support of the paper. The government stood then in great need of support of the press, and the Premier was delighted. But Stuart was unlike the modern newspaper proprietor. He had no diplomacy. He blurted out that in return he wanted the Treasury patronage—that is the dispensing of all the offices in the gift of the Prime Minister.

Lord Grey was furious. "You deserve to be thrown out of the window," he said, "but——" and there was an impressive silence. Lord Grey rang the bell, and to the footman answering he said: "Take this 'gentleman' out—through the door."

It was at the beginning of the nineteenth century that Downing street began to be wholly an official street. At that time the only official residence on it was the Prime Minister's. Buildings were taken for the Foreign and Colonial Offices, for the Judge Advocate, and for the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and lastly, the whole row of lodging-houses at the end. These were portioned out among the Scotch and Irish members of Parliament as lodgings. In one of these Smollet tried to establish himself as a surgeon. Benzoin, at that time the greatest African explorer, lodged there with his wife on his return from Nubia.

Eight years later, in 1828 to be exact, the government decided to demolish the old buildings. The first to go was "The Cat and Bagpipes," a saloon and chophouse on the corner. It was famous for its mutton chops and tankards of musty ale. Boswell constantly patronized it.

But the government worked very slowly at the demolition. For years the very important business of the Foreign Office was carried on in a mean, unsightly double row of buildings. These became so tumble-down that the aid of Parliament was invoked by private members. The only aid given, however, was to shore the buildings up with beams and girders, and it was two-score years ago that the government departments were hastily removed across Whitehall and the buildings torn down. The flight was due to a continuous rain of bricks and mortar—the houses were on the verge of falling down.

Stately buildings, the present ones, were erected. These were designed by two Royal Academicians, Sir Digby Wyatt and Sir Gilbert Scott.

Downing street as it is today, therefore, is but 33 years old. Its glories will not dim it though it has been modernized. No romances such as those of its long past may be enacted, but it still will remain the headquarters of the rulers of the British Empire. Cabinets will continue to sit there, the Prime Minister will continue to live there, and all the diplomatic business of the nation with the United States will continue to be transacted here.

The public alone will be debarred from entering the street. There is hope for the American tourist, however, for in the summer-time, when the holidays come and the government and the Prime Minister forsake London, Downing street again will be opened for a brief period to sightseers.

NOVEL ENGINE SEEKS SHOPS.

INVENTOR PLANS BIG FACTORY FOR LOS ANGELES.

Asserts That His Patents of Device of Small Cost and Inexpensive Operation Will Revolutionize the Building of Steam Power Plants, Taking Place of Costly Machinery.

If the dreams of a local inventor come true, Los Angeles soon will be the center of manufacture of an engine built on new principles, through which there will be a complete revolution in the building of steam power plants, and a wonderful extension of the use of such power for all purposes, even to the running of automobiles.

The inventor is J. Grindrod, and he terms his device a radical piston double expansion cut-off and compound condensing engine. He says it is suitable for marine and large power plants

Simplicity of design, low cost of manufacture and economy of operation are claims made by Grindrod for his patent. He has lived in Los Angeles many years, and recently has been operating in the vicinity of Bakersfield, where pumps under his patents are used quite extensively in the oil fields. His intention now is to build a factory in Los Angeles for the manufacture of his new engine on a large scale.

One of the assertions of the inventor is that his engine, costing less than others now in use, can be operated at a tremendous saving of steam—at least 50 per cent., he says.

The engine is similar in some respects, says Grindrod, to one designed by a Scotch engineer, which has attracted a good deal of attention among engineers throughout the world.

"This engine is simple in design," says the inventor, "having but two working parts—a main driving shaft, having two radical pistons mounted thereon with a small radical valve mounted on a small auxiliary shaft to work in conjunction with the main driving shaft to prevent back pressure on following pistons, so the steam is able to exert its entire expansion on the pistons without any back resistance.

"As the steam acts directly on the pistons similar to the ordinary engines now in use, this engine is constructed to use the steam double expansive in one cylinder on the same pistons. The steam is only admitted during one-half of the stroke; the other half-stroke is completed by the expansion of steam so admitted before any new live steam is admitted, hence the high-pressure steam is only admitted during one-half the stroke of each revolution.

"By adding a larger or a second cylinder, a greater expansion can be utilized in connection with the condenser.

"The steam acts directly on the radical piston and and is continuous, as there is no reciprocating motion in this type of engine, so the steam energy is utilized to the greatest possible extent."

Grindrod says his engine can be built at a cost much lower than that of turbine engines now in use, and he asserts it is less liable to costly accidents. He proposes to build a factory here, where the engines can be made in large numbers, giving employment to many men.

Danger in Stray Bullets.

At Jackson, Miss., last week a stray Krag-Jorgensen bullet more than an inch long passed entirely through the body of Annie Speeks, two-year-old daughter of a merchant, but physicians say she will recover. Where the bullet came from, and who fired the gun is a mystery. Nobody near the child heard the shot, and it is suggested that the bullet traveled a long distance before striking. The bullet entered the home of the child through an open door, near the business center of the town, but, after wounding the child, passed through a two-inch door facing and buried itself in the floor of an adjoining room.

PROGRESS.

GREAT OPPORTUNITY FOR LOCAL SMELTER.

Wake Up, Los Angeles!—New Railroads Have Opened Tributary Mineral Land—Industrial Freedom Strong Argument.

BY SIDNEY NORMAN, MINING EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

THE recent completion of new railroads, which tap developed mining regions, and the unsatisfactory condition of the customs smelting situation in Salt Lake City, have given to Los Angeles the greatest opportunity of her history for the successful exploitation of a large customs smelter on a location adjacent to the city, but far enough away to be unobjectionable.

If interests identified with the mining industry and with the future greatness of the city will now pull together for the one common purpose, Los Angeles may clinch her position as the mining metropolis of the West for all time.

The mines are at our doors, the men are already within our gates, the necessary fluxes can be obtained without difficulty and the fuel question is solved for all time by the great Pacific, which offers its placid breadth to the cause with cheap rates from the coal fields of the North.

Those who have not kept close watch upon the rapid developments in railroad expansion do not realize what the great trunk railroads centering here have done for the development of Los Angeles and how indissolubly the mining industry is now bound to the city No locality in all the West offers such inducements for economical reduction of ores.

The Tonopah & Tidewater branch of the Santa Fé and the Las Vegas and Tonopah branch of the Salt Lake Route have given access to the gold ores of Goldfield, of Tonopah, of Rhyolite, of Crackerjack, of Johnnie, of Lee-Echo and of many other prominent districts, now held back by the lack of smelting facilities. These roads have also opened up the lead deposits of Tecopah and will serve the copper district of Greenwater, if it should enter the shipping stage in the future.

The Pioche-Caliente branch of the Salt Lake Railroad has revivified one of the greatest silver-lead districts in the United States; the Searchlight branch of the Santa Fé has placed the gold and copper deposits of Searchlight and Vontrigger and Manvel at our very doors, while the great trunk lines of the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fé have been ready for years to deliver the wealth of Mexico, New Mexico and Arizona into our hands. The open waterway of the Pacific will contribute its share with the ores of Lower California and districts adjacent to the shore line further south.

No man who knows the unlimited and varied production of this vast domain can doubt that enough ore can be delivered to keep a modern plant of huge capacity in active operation for generations to come. The deplorable conditions in San Francisco have redounded to the benefit of Los Angeles and the recent public clamor against the erection of a plant at San Mateo has turned the eyes of operators further south. Los Angeles offers all the advantages that San Francisco has heretofore offered with the important and invaluable addition of industrial freedom.

Of flux there is abundance in all directions. Iron is found in great quantities at Kelso and elsewhere, while lime abounds on every hand. Coal in unlimited quantity may be brought by sea from Alaska, from British Columbia, from Washington or from the Coos Bay fields of Oregon, while it is entirely probable that the development of economical smelting will soon permit of the general use of crude oil with success. The industrial lull of the past few months has given us time to take stock of our manifold advantages, time to look the situation over carefully and satisfy ourselves that the scheme is feasible, if the same energy and hard work that has placed the city in the front rank is brought to bear.

Los Angeles has forged to the front as the undisputed mining center of the Southwest without a smelter within 200 miles. Her position may be made unassailable for all time by the added prestige she would gain by the creation of a smelting outlet for the wealth that clamors at her gates and may be hers for the asking.

The men are here, too. Men of the West, whose energies and foresight and grit have wrested fortunes from the golden desert wastes of Nevada and from the inexhaustible copper stores of Arizona and of Mexico. They are all interested in the future of Los Angeles and have already shown their faith by investing their surplus wealth in business and in homes. The mining industry is dear to their hearts and any enterprise of this nature would appeal to them and enlist, without solicitation, the aid of their money, their energy and their brains—agents already successfully used in the desert conquest of Nature.

The condition of the smelting industry in Utah is another potent argument in favor of the establishment of such an enterprise. There the damage suits brought against reduction companies by agricultural interests have closed many of the custom smelters and have cut off the only outlet of ores from an immense area that should rightfully be tributary to this city. Los Angeles has many superiorities over Salt Lake and could, if properly equipped, successfully reconquer the territory which has poured its wealth into the coffers of the Mormon city.

And so Los Angeles has every necessity for the successful operation of such an industry. In the past, selfish shortsighted and unpatriotic speculators have nullified well-defined plans to the same end by asking exhorbitant prices for available sites. It should be the duty of every man who has the best interests of the city at heart, of public bodies such as the Chamber of Commerce, the Chamber of Mines, the Merchants' Protective Association and the Stock Exchanges, to decry such methods in the future and secure a proper site, far enough away to prevent damage, and near enough to make the industry directly tributary to the city.

The eminent qualifications of Los Angeles should be blazoned to the world and, above all, the word must go forth that she is industrially free and that every dollar invested in such an enterprise will be protected to the last ditch from the destroying rapacity of labor agitators who refuse to work and who refuse others the privilege.

It would seem that the only possible stumbling block lies in the matter of favorable freight rates on ore and fluxes coming to the city. The question is one that is too intricate and voluminous for proper treatment here but, as a general rule, it may be safely assumed that railroads, run for business and run by business men, are alive to their own interests and will do their part, for the further upbuilding of a city that contributes so much to their success, when the proper time comes.

The Times believes that the psychological moment has arrived for the establishment of such an industry near Los Angeles. It invites the opinions of smelter and mining men to the end that the matter may be thoroughly thrashed out in all its bearings. When that has been done Los Angeles may safely count upon all the capital required. No industrial development of the future means more to her destiny or will add more to her wealth.

WHAT'S SAID IN SAN FRANCISCO.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 17.—With the advent of the big fleet only a few months distant and the promise of a record-breaking social season, two startling announcements were made the other day. It is said beyond contradiction that Mrs. Inez Shorb White, society leader, is to leave us in the lurch and go to Manila in a few months. Mrs. Voorhies, another society leader, positively states that because of the illness of her husband she has chosen the simple life and quiet retirement. In this crisis Ned Greenway, rotund and smiling, has thrown himself into the breach, saying that he will lead us socially against the forces of Admiral Evans, even though he has to give away weight.

Mrs. Teresa Oelrichs, daughter of our former distinguished citizen, the late Senator Fair, after eschewing the gayeties of the New York season to attend to her business interests here, finds plenty of vexation and annoyance. Before the fire she swapped the magnificent Fairmont Hotel for the Rialto and Crossley business buildings owned by the Law brothers. In the disaster the hotel suffered little, while the two office edifices were total wrecks. Now comes a grasping man, who owns property next to the Rialto site, and sues Mrs. Oelrichs for $10,000 damages alleged to be done to his holdings by the adjacent ruins. It is a peck of trouble all around, and Mrs. Oelrichs is not boasting of her swap.

Champions of education have locked horns with the advocates of crude commercialism and in a few days the courts will have to arbitrate the matter. Dr. Margaret Mahoney, president of the Teachers' Federation, has enjoined the works board from erecting a free market on a school lot. The lady is afraid that it is but the entering wedge of commerce and that ere long other school lots may be gobbled up. The law is with the lady, as the charter provides that school property shall be used for no other purpose. The teachers think that it is hard enough now to get money to teach the young idea how to shoot without diminishing it by selling sprouts.

A cool quarter of a million has gone in the air and hundreds of sorrowing people have lost faith in the allurements of a prospectus. The National Airship Company, with offices at No. 61 Van Ness avenue, is now a thing of the past, and stockholders who believed in it to the extent of $250,000, are also up in the air. The promoters wished to raise a million dollars to build an airship to take passengers in a few hours from San Francisco to New York, but after raising a quarter of that sum they have taken themselves elsewhere, without leaving their telephone number. Now it is unsafe to mention airships in this city, and there are plenty of people who believe that airy graft is as bad as that of bankers and politicians.

Abe Ruef, the muchly-indicted boss, is hard to please. Between times when he is not driving a hard bargain with the graft prosecution he is finding fault with his hotel accommodations. He has had his cell in the County Jail scrubbed and he says no matter how much effort is made the place cannot be kept clean. He insists that filth accumulates with gases from the drain pipes permeating the cells and no running water provided. He thinks it would be a good plan if newly-elected Mayors and Supervisors were compelled to spend a week in the jail to see the evils of the place. Despite the filth he will stay in his cell rather than pay $700 a week at his former Fillmore-street boarding-house.

The great fire which devastated our city and caused so much loss of life and property is not regarded by all as an unmixed evil. Quite often in the criminal courts a prosecuting attorney will dismiss a charge against a defendant because the records were burned and there is no hope of a conviction. This has been done in the case of a murderer who killed a man in Market street some years ago. The other day the embezzlement charges against the Eppingers were dismissed because the records in the case were burned and the prosecution did not know where to find the witnesses. For years the banks of the city have been trying to convict the Eppingers on charges of borrowing $750,000 on grain receipts alleged never to have existed. With every fire alarm that is turned in Abe Ruef is a-hoping that his 122 indictments are going up in smoke.

Lawyer Costello called Lawyer Moore a hoodlum and was promptly punched in the neck as well as fined $50 for his pleasantry. Lawyer Moore paid a like amount for the punch and the privileges of calling the other a cur. Judge Murasky, who acted as referee, decided the bout a draw and warned the contestants to break away clean. Costello, who is much the younger man, says that he simply held the arms of Moore, who is much the older. The two attorneys quarreled over the qualifications of jurors and the result of the controversy has been the announcement that certain lawyers are going to form a trust to thwart professional jurymen.

CHAPTER I.

THE WHITMANS.

HENRY WHITMAN was walking home from the shop in the April afternoon. The spring was very early that year. The meadows were quite green and in the damp hollows the green assumed a violet tinge, sometimes from violets themselves, sometimes from the shadows. The trees already cast shadows as of a multitude of bird wings, the peach trees stood aloof in rosy nimbuses, and the cherry trees were faintly aflutter with white through an intense glass of gold-green. Henry realized all the glory of it, but it filled him with a renewal of the sad and bitter resentment which was his usual mood, instead of joy. He was past middle age. He worked in a shoe shop. He had worked in a shoe shop since he was a young man. There was nothing else in store for him until he was turned out because of old age. Then the future looked like a lurid sunset of misery. He earned reasonably good wages for a man of his years, but prices were so high that he was not able to save a cent. There had been unusual expenses during the last ten years, too. His wife, Sylvia, had not been well, and once he himself had been laid up six weeks with rheumatism. The doctor charged $2 for every visit, and the bill was not quite settled yet.

Then the little house which had come to him from his father, encumbered with a mortgage, as is usual, had all at once seemed to need repairs at every point. The roof had leaked like a sieve, two windows had been blown in, the paint had turned a gray black, the gutters had been out of order. He had not quite settled the bills for these repairs yet. He realized it always as an actual physical incubus upon his slender, bowed shoulders. He came of a race who were impatient of debt, and who regarded with proud disdain all gratuitous benefits of their fellow men. Henry always walked a long route from the shop in order to avoid passing the houses of the doctor and the carpenter whom he owed. Once he had saved a little money, that was twenty-odd years before, but he had invested it foolishly and lost every cent. That transaction he regarded with hatred, both of himself and of the people who had advised him to risk and lose his hard earned dollars. That small sum which he had lost had come to assume colossal proportions in his mind. He used in his bitterest moments to reckon up on a scrap of paper what it might have amounted to, if it had been put out at interest, by this time. He always came out a rich man, by his calculations, if it had not been for that unwise investment. He often told his wife, Sylvia, that they might have been rich people if it had not been for that, that he would not have been tied to a shoe shop, nor she have been obliged to work so hard.

Sylvia took a boarder, the High School principal, Horace Allen, and she also made jellies and cakes and baked bread for those in East Westland who could afford to pay for such instead of doing the work themselves. She was a delicate woman, and Henry knew that she worked beyond her strength, and the knowledge filled him with impotent fury.

In the winter he found plenty to do in the extra hours. He sawed wood in his shed by the light of a lantern hung on a peg. He also did what odd jobs he could for neighbors. He picked up a little extra money in that way, and he worked very hard. Sometimes he told Sylvia that he didn't know but he worked harder than he had done when the shop time was longer. However, he had been one of the first to go heart and soul with the union, and he paid his dues ungrudgingly, even with a sort of fierce satisfaction, as if in some way the transaction made him even with his millionaire employers. There were two of them, and they owned houses which appeared like palaces in the eyes of Henry and his kind. They owned automobiles, and Henry was aware of a cursing sentiment when one whirred past him, trudging along, and covered him with dust.

Sometimes it seemed to Henry as if an automobile was the last straw for the poor man's back; those enormous cars, representing fortunes, tyrannizing over the whole highway, frightening the poor old country horses and endangering the lives of all before them. Henry read with delight every account of an automobile accident. "Served them right; served them just right," he would say, with fairly a smack of his lips. Sylvia, who had caught a little of his rebellion, but was gentler, would regard him with horror. "Why, Henry Whitman, that is a dreadful, wicked spirit," she would say, and he would retort, stubbornly, that he didn't care; that he had to pay a road tax for these people, who would just as soon run him down as not, if it wouldn't tip their old machines over; for these maniacs, who had gone speed mad, and were appropriating even the highways of the working people.

Henry had missed the High School teacher, who was away on his spring vacation. He liked to talk to him because he had always a feeling that he had the best of the argument. Horace would take the opposite side for a while, then leave the field, and light another cigar, and let Henry have the last word, which, although it had a bitter taste in his mouth, filled him with the satisfaction of triumph. He loved Horace like a son, although he realized that the young man properly belonged to the class which he hated, and that, too, although he was manifestly poor and obliged to work for his living. Henry was, in his heart of hearts, convinced that Horace Allen, had he been rich, would have owned automobiles and spent hours in the profitless work-play of the golf links. As it was, he played a little after school hours. How Henry hated golf! "I wish they had to work," he would say, savagely, to Horace.

Horace would laugh, and reply that he did work. "I know you do," Henry would say, grudgingly, "and I suppose maybe a little exercise is good for you; but those fellers from Alford who come over here don't have to work, and as for Guy Lawson, the boss's son, he's a fool. He couldn't earn his bread and butter to save his life, except on the road digging like a common laborer. Playing golf! Playing! Mm." Then was the time for Horace's fresh cigar.

When Henry came in sight of the cottage where he lived, he thought with regret that Horace was not there. Being in a more pessimistic mood than usual, he wished ardently for somebody to pour out his heart to. Sylvia was no satisfaction at such a time. If she echoed him for awhile when she was more than usually worn with her own work, she finally became alarmed and took refuge in scripture quotations, and Henry was convinced that she offered up a prayer for him afterward, and that enraged him. He struck into the narrow footpath leading to the side door, the footpath which his unwilling and weary feet had helped to trace more definitely for nearly forty years. The house was a small cottage of the humblest New England type. It had a little cobbler's shop, or what had formerly been a cobbler's shop, for an ell. Besides that, there were three rooms on the ground floor—the kitchen, the sitting-room and a little bedroom, which Henry and Sylvia occupied. Sylvia had cooking stoves in both the old shop and the kitchen. The kitchen stove was kept well polished and was seldom used, except in cold weather. In warm weather the old shop served both as kitchen and dining-room, unless, indeed, there came very hot days before the summer vacation. Then Sylvia, in deference to the High School teacher, used to set the table in the house kitchen. When Henry neared the house he smelled cooking in the shop. He also had a glimpse of a snowy table cloth in the kitchen. He wondered, with a throb of joy, if possibly Horace might have returned before his vacation was over, and Sylvia was setting the table in the other room in his honor. He opened the door, which led directly into the shop. Sylvia, a pathetic, slim figure in rusty black, was bending over the stove, frying flapjacks. "Has he come home?" whispered Henry.

"No, it's Mr. Meeks. I asked him to stay to supper. I told him I would make some flapjacks, and he acted tickled to death. He doesn't get a decent thing to eat once in a dog's age. Hurry and get washed; the flapjacks are about done, and I don't want them to get cold."

Henry's face, which had fallen a little when he learned that Horace had not returned, still looked brighter than before. While Sydney Meeks never let him have the last word yet he was much better than Sylvia as a safety valve for pessimism. Meeks was as pessimistic in his way as Henry, although he handled his pessimism, as he did everything else, with diplomacy, and the other man had a secret conviction that when he seemed to be on the opposite side, yet he wes in reality pulling with the lawyer.

Sydney Meeks was older than Henry, and he was as unsuccessful as a country lawyer can well be. He lived by himself; he had never married, and the world, although he smiled at it facetiously, was not a pleasant place in his eyes.

Henry, after he had washed himself at the sink in the shop, entered the kitchen, where the table was set, and passed through to the sitting-room, where the lawyer was. Sydney Meeks did not rise. He extended one large, white hand affably. "How are you, Henry?" said he, giving the other man's lean, brown fingers a hard shake. "I dropped in here on my way home from the Postoffice, and your wife tempted me with flapjacks in a lordly dish, and I am about to eat."

"Glad to see you," returned Henry. "You get home early, or it seems early now the days are getting so long," said Meeks as Henry sat down opposite.

"Yes, it's early enough, but I don't get any more pay."

Meeks laughed. "Henry, you are the direct outcome of your day and generation," said he. "Less time and more pay for less time is our slogan."

"Well, why not?" returned Henry surlily, still with a dawn of delighted opposition in his thin, intelligent face. "Why not? Look at the money that's spent all around us on other things that correspond. What's an automobile but less time and more money, eh?"

Meeks laughed. "Give it up until after supper, Henry," he said, as Sylvia's thin sweet voice was heard from the next room.

"If you men don't stop talking and come right out these flapjacks will be spiled," she cried. The men arose. Meeks lumbered out with amazing agility for one so heavy. "There are compensations for everything," he said, laughing, as he settled down heavily and one-sidedly into his chair. "Flapjacks are compensations. Let us eat our compensations and be thankful. That's my way of saying grace. You ought always to say grace, Henry, when you have such a good cook as your wife is to get meals for you. If you had to shift for yourself the way I do you'd feel that it was a simple act of decency."

"I don't see much to say grace for," said Henry, with a disagreeable sneer.

"Oh, Henry!" said Sylvia.

"For compensations in the form of flapjacks with plenty of butter and sugar and nutmeg," said Meeks. "These are fine, Mrs. Whitman."

"A good thick beefsteak at twenty-eight cents a pound, regulated by the beef trust, would be more to my liking after a hard day's work," said Henry.

Sylvia exclaimed again, but she was not in reality disturbed. She was quite well aware that her husband was enjoying himself after his own peculiar fashion, and that if he spoke the truth the flapjacks were more to his New England taste for supper than thick beefsteak.

"Well, wait until after supper, and maybe you will change your mind about having something to say grace for," Meeks said mysteriously.

The husband and wife stared at him. "What do you mean, Mr. Meeks?" asked Sylvia a little nervously. Something in the lawyer's manner agitated her. She was not accustomed to mysteries. Life had not held many for her, and especially of late years. Henry took another mouthful of flapjacks. "Well, if you can give me any good reason for saying grace you will do more than the parson ever has," he said.

"Oh, Henry!" said Sylvia.

"It's the truth," said Henry. "I've gone to meeting and heard how thankful I ought to be for things I hadn't got, and things I have got that other folks haven't, and for forgiveness for breaking commandments, when, so far as I can tell, commandments are about the only things I've been able to keep without taxes, till I'm tired of it."

"Wait till after supper," repeated the lawyer again, with smiling mystery. He had a large, smooth face with gray hair on the sides of his head and none on top. He had good, placid features and an easy expression. He ate two platefuls of the flapjacks, then two pieces of cake and a large slice of custard pie. He was very fond of sweets.

After supper was over, Henry and Meeks returned to hte sitting-room and sat down beside the two front windows. It was a small, square room, furnished with Sylvia's chief household treasures. There was a haircloth sofa which she and Henry had always regarded as an extravagance and had always viewed with awe. There were two rockers, besides one easy chair covered with old-gold plush, also an extravagance. There was a really beautiful old mahogany table with carved base, of which neither Henry nor Sylvia thought much. Sylvia meditated selling enough Calkin's soap to buy a new one and stow that away in Mr. Allen's room. Mr. Allen professed great admiration for it, to her wonderment. There was also a fine old gold-framed mirror and some china vases on the mantelshelf. Sylvia was rather ashamed of them. Mrs. Jim Jones had a mirror which she had earned by selling Calkin's soap, which Sylvia considered much handsomer. She would have had ambitions in that direction also, but Henry was firm in his resolve not to have the mirror displaced, nor the vases, although Sylvia descanted upon the superior merits of some vases with gilded pedestals which Mrs. Sam Elliot had in her parlor.

Meeks regarded the superb old table with appreciation as he sat in the sitting-room after supper. "Fine old piece," he said.

Henry looked at it doubtfully. It had been in a woodshed of his grandfather's house when he was a boy, and he was not as confident about that as he was about the mirror and vases, which had always maintained their parlor estate. "Sylvia don't think much of it," he said. "She's crazy to have one of carved oak like one Mrs. Jim Jones has."

"Carved oak fiddlestick!" said Sydney Meeks; "it's a queer thing that so much virtue and real fineness of character can exist in a woman without the slightest trace of taste for art."

Henry looked resentful. "Sylvia has taste—as much taste as most women," he said. "She simply doesn't like to see the same old things around all the time, and I don't know as I blame her. The world has grown since that table was made, there's no doubt about that. It stands to reason furniture has improved, too."

"Glad there's something you see in a bright light, Henry."

"I must say that I like this new mission furniture myself pretty well," said Henry, somewhat importantly.

"That's as old as the everlasting hills, but the old that's new is the newest thing in all creation," said Meeks. "Sylvia is a foolish woman if she parts with this magnificent old piece for any reproduction made in job lots."

"Oh, she isn't going to part with it; Mr. Allen will like it in his room. He thinks as much of it as you do."

"He's right, too," said Meeks; there's carving for you; there's fine grain of wood!"

"It's very hard to keep clean," said Sylvia, as she came in, rubbing her moist hands. "Now, that new Flemish oak is nothing at all to take care of, Mrs. Jones says."

"This is worth taking care of," said Meeks. "Now, Sylvia, sit down. I have something to tell you and Henry."

Sylvia sat down. Something in the lawyer's manner aroused her and her husband's keenest attention.

They looked at him and waited. Both were slightly pale. Sylvia was a delicate little woman, and Henry was large framed and tall, but a similar experience had worn similar lines in both faces. They looked singularly alike.

Sydney Meeks had the dramatic instinct. He waited for the silence to gather to its utmost intensity before he spoke. "I had something to tell you," he said, "when I came in, but I thought I had better wait till after supper."

He paused. There was another silence. Henry's and Sylvia's eyes seemed to wax luminous.

Sydney Meeks spoke again. He was enjoying himself immensely. "What relation is Abrahama White to you?" he said.

"She is second cousin to Sylvia. Her mother was Sylvia's mother's cousin," said Henry. "What of it?"

"Nothing, except"—Meeks waited again. He wished to make a coup. He had an instinct for climaxes. "Abrahama had a shock this morning," he said suddenly.

"A shock!" said Henry.

Sylvia echoed him. "A shock!" she gasped.

"Yes, a shock. I thought you hadn't heard of it."

"I've been in the house all day," said Sylvia. "I hadn't seen a soul before you came in." She rose. "Who's taking care of her?" she asked. "She ain't all alone?"

"Sit down," said Sydney. "She's well cared for. Miss Babcock is there. She happened to be out of a place, and Dr. Wallace got her right away."

"Is she going to get over it?" asked Sylvia anxiously. "I must go over there any way, this evening. I always thought a good deal of Abrahama."

"You might as well go over there," said the lawyer. "It isn't quite the thing for me to tell you, but I'm going to. If Henry here can eat flapjacks like those you make, Sylvia, and not say grace, his state of mind is dangerous. I am going to tell you. Dr. Wallace says Abrahama can't live more than a day or two, and—she has made a will and left you all her property!"

There was another silence. The husband and wife were pale with their mouths agape like fishes. So little prosperity had come into their lives that they were rendered almost idiotic by its approach.

"Us!" said Sylvia at length with a gasp.

"Us!" said Henry.

"Yes, you," said Sydney Meeks.

"What about Rose Fletcher, Abrahama's sister Susy's daughter?" asked Sylvia presently. "She is her own niece."

"You know Abrahama never had anything to do with her after Susy married John Fletcher," replied the lawyer. "She made her will soon afterward and cut her off."

"I remember what they said at the time," returned Sylvia. "They all thought John Fletcher was going to marry Abrahama instead of Susy. She was enough sight more suitable age for him. He was too old for Susy, and Abrahama, even if she wasn't young, was a beautiful woman and smarter than Susy ever thought of being."

"Susy had the kind of smartness that catches men," said the lawyer with a light laugh.

"I always wondered if John Fletcher hadn't rally done a good deal to make Abrahama think he did want her," said Sylvia. "He was just that kind of a man. I never did think much of him. He was handsome and glib, but he was all surface. I guess poor Abrahama had some reason to cut off Susy. I guess there was some double dealing. I thought so at the time, and now this will make me think so even more."

Again there was a silence, and again that expression of bewilderment, almost amounting to idiocy, reigned in the faces of the husband and wife.

"I never thought old Abraham White should have made the will he did," said Henry, articulating with difficulty. "Susy has just as much right to the property, and there she was cut off with $500, to be paid when she came of age."

"I guess she spent that five hundred on her wedding fix," said Sylvia.

"It was a queer will," stammered Henry.

"I think the old man always looked at Abrahama as his son and heir," said the lawyer; "she was named for him, and his father before him, you know. I always thought the poor old girl deserved the lion's share for being saddled with such a name, anyhow."

"It was a dreadful name, and she was such a beautiful girl and woman," said Sylvia. She already spoke of Abrahama in the past tense. "I wonder where the niece is," she added.

"The last I heard of her she was living with some rich people in New York," replied Meeks. "I think they took her in some capacity after her father and mother died."

"I hope she didn't go out to work as hired girl," said Sylvia. "It would have been awful for a granddaughter of Abraham White's to do that. I wonder if Abrahama never wrote to her, nor did anything for her."

"I don't think she ever had the slightest communication with Susy after she married, or her husband, or the daughter," replied Meeks. "In fact, I practically know she did not."

"If the poor girl didn't do well, Abrahama had a good deal to answer for," said Sylvia thoughtfully. She looked worried, then again that expression of almost idiotic joy overspread her face. "That old White homestead is beautiful, the best house in town," she said.

"There's fifty acres of land with it, too," said Meeks.

Sylvia and Henry looked at each other. Both hesitated. Then Henry spoke stammeringly. "I—never knew—just how much of an income Abrahama had," he said.

"Well," replied the lawyer, "I must say not much, not as much as I wish, for your sakes. You see, old Abraham had a lot of that railroad stock that went to smash ten years ago, and Abrahama lost a good deal. She was a smart woman; she could work and save, but she didn't know any more about business than other women. There's an income of about, well, about $600 and some odd cents after the taxes and insurance are paid. And she has enough extra in the East Westland Savings Bank to pay her last expenses without touching the principal. And the house is in good repair. She has kept it up well. There won't be any need to spend a cent on repairs for some years."

"Six hundred a year after the taxes and insurance are paid," said Sylvia. She gaped horribly. Her expression of delight was at once mean and infantile.

Let Something Good Be Said.

When over the fame of friend or foe
The shadow of the grave shall fall; instead
Of words of blame, or proof of thus and so,
Let something good be said.

Forget not that no fellow-being yet
May fall so low but love may lift his head;
Even the cheek of shame with tears is wet,
If something good be said.

No generous heart may vainly turn aside
In ways of sympathy; no soul so dead
But may awaken strong and glorified,
If something good be said.

And so I charge ye, try the thorny crown,
And by the cross on which the Savior bled,
And by your own soul's hope of fair renown,
Let something good be said.

Sir Richard Escombe.

A ROMANCE.

By Max Pemberton.

(Some pages from the life story of Sir Richard Escombe, Bart., particularly concerning his relations with the notorious Society of St. Francis, as founded at Medmenham Abbey, on the River Thames, by Sir Francis Dashwood and John Wilkes; of the manner in which he brought that society to an end; also of his relations with Kitty Dulcimore of Sherbourn, in the county of Warwickshire; of the misfortune which befell him when he drew her name in the lottery; of his subsequent service at Windsor Castle. The whole giving a true account of certain social practices in the reign of George II, and of a club but ill remembered in the present day, though entitled to perpetual obloquy.)

The Author's Foreword.

THIS is the story of the club at the ruined Medmenham Abbey, and, so far as it may be told to modern ears, a true account of that famous beauty.

Many visit Medmenham in our day. There is no fairer country than that which lies between Henley and Marlow town. But the true history of that ancient foundation is known to but few.

Viewed as we may view it, an inn thrust against its walls, the great pillars crumbling to dust, ivy twined about its stately but glassless windows, it is difficult to cast the imagination back to those tempestuous days of Sir. Francis Dashwood and John Wilkes, of Churchill and of Ailsa; of the poet Whitehead and that rascally voluptuary, Frederick Lord Harborne. Yet all these lived and have played their part at Medmenham. Those silent courts have resounded to the patter of women's feet. Hall and refectory have glowed with lights. The high road we follow and name so solitary has glittered with the gauds of gallant and of courtier, has witnessed the beginning and the end of many a disgraceful pageant, when George II was King. Today the abbey is but a name, yet it is but little more than a hundred and fifty years since these things were done, since Sir Richard rode down from Windsor and Kitty's coach was stopped at the crossroads in the lane.

We have created a river life since those days. The Thames is much even to the twentieth century. Clubs arise on every hand. The Blues today drive over from Windsor to the vales below Hambledon, and, it may be, have a poor title to accuse their forefathers. There is no prettier thing in modern life than the water pageant, none so readily acknowledged at the zenith of the summer. But that which is changed is the fundamental notion of a man's honor and of the price he must pay to defend it.

Who in our time would put a pistol to his head because the rule of an infamous club demanded that he should do so?

The laws of Medmenham, read aloud to a modern company, would provoke but ribald laughter or pity for the men whose wit had framed them. And yet in justice to that fine old liberator, John Wilkes, we must remember that such a society as that of St. Francis would not have endured a single day but for the rigor of the rule which its founders had ordained.

When they decreed that a man must die or marry the woman whom he defended, marriage was named as a mock alternative hardly to be thought of in such an atmosphere. Contemplate such a dandy as Lord Ailsa whispering of church and parson to the singer from the opera in whose honor he had proposed a toast! What the society demanded above all else was such a modicum of order within its walls as should avert a public scandal and keep out George and his unwelcome dragoons. This it could not preserve, despite its laws. A fine sense of honor, difficult as it may be for us to understand, was as a precious possession to every man of the age. It forbade the success of that mock ritual which might well govern a similar society in our own time. Fay ce que voudras—as the motto stands over the abbey door today and may be read by all who pass by—that could prevail only when honor was all to those who caroused within, when for honor's sake men would lay down their lives without one thought of the truth or falsity of the creed which thus compelled them.

There was published in London some hundred years ago a novel called "Chrysal, or the Adventures of a Guinea." This purported to give a true account of the revels at Medmenham and of the scandals associated with the famous social fraternity. It does not appear to have done anything of the kind. A close analysis of such records as exist—and they are few enough—these and a just appreciation of the spirit of the age make it perfectly clear that the author knew nothing whatever of Medmenham Abbey, as Sir Francis Dashwood and John Wilkes reëstablished it, and less of the ceremonies taking place within its walls.

That these were an open mockery of established religious faith does not appear, nor in fairness to the Society of St. Francis may we assume any such thing. It has not been assumed in this story of Sir Richard Escombe, nor, I may hope, implied. The men seem to have been mere jesters, but clever jesters. The mock habit was not assumed in hostility to any creed nor in burlesque of it, but as a jest in keeping with much else done within those hoary walls. Perchance if the whole truth were written there are clubs today as little worthy of public approval as the famous club at Medmenham. The manner changes, but man is eternal. What humor was to Richard Escombe, social applause is to many in our own time. We carouse in palaces, asking no ivy to stand sentinel. The current of a swift life passes where the old river used to flow. And if Time does not give glamour to that which is least worthy to shine, at least the pages of the old romance may carry some truth which this generation may not read without profit.

CHAPTER I.

UPON THE ROAD TO WARWICK.

It would be very proper, I suppose, to begin the history of Sir Richard Escombe, baronet, with some account of his ancestry, both British and Irish; to tell you of Castle Escombe, in the county Meath, and of Moreton Fell, in Cumberland, the homes that have sheltered him; to speak of his doings at St. James, and afterward at the French court; to depict him in the habit of a squire and a soldier, and by no means to neglect some particulars of that notorious blackguard, Brian Escombe, whom he had called grandfather when George I was King. If I do none of these things, pass by matters so profound, let their inconsequence be my excuse. His forbear do not interest men. The man himself shall be my study.

Now, I could show you mad Sir Richard in many places for our beginning, but for some of these I have no love at all, and of others I know nothing. So here's a good excuse for bringing you at once to the good county of Warwickshire, and setting you down upon a windy night of March, in the year 1746, of our Lord, where you shall see Sir Dick as he was, and follow him up the winding drive to Mr. Dulcimore's house, and the somewhat remarkable experience that was to befall him there.

There are many who know the road; many who cross the seas to ride it in our own day. Sherbourn of the Vale lies little more than a mile from the great keep at Warwick. The whole glory of the woods and meadows of Shakespeare's country is reflected round about it. Here in the thickets we may still hope to espy Bottom the weaver and Flute who mended the bellows. There are inns enough upon the road to shelter old Jack and his ragamuffins—vast kitchens for merry wives; cellars whence came the sack—all the substance, the simplicity, the red cheeked fullness of England's yeomen, unchanged and unchanging through the years. Here the Avon winds amid the graves of the living dead. Here is the greenwood tree beneath which many a lad has tuned his merry throat—assuredly to no sweeter note than you may hear today should fortune carry you to the heart of Warwickshire and unlock her secrets for you.

You would not make the journey as Sir Richard Escombe made it. That goes without saying. For what wise traveler would choose the month of March for such a visit, and what freak of travel would bring him to Avonside when a bleak east wind was blowing and a moonless night watched him upon his way? Sir Richard, a nomad from the crown of his curly head to the proud toes of his high leather boots, might well delight in the very circumstance which the mere sightseer would reprobate. With but one clear idea had he ridden from Chester to Warwick. The same impulsive notion carried him down the vale to Sherbourn. And there he stood at the gate, as much lost for an excuse, it would seem, as old Dulcimore himself after his third bottle of claret.

Let it be confessed at once that this would have been no surprise to Dick Escombe's friends—that is, to such as misfortune had left him. The same hot impulse which now carried him to old Anthony Dulcimore's house had achieved many a folly since they hunted him from his regiment, declared him a danger to the peace of any debauched community, and sent him headlong to the French King's court.

His very presence in England this night might have been named as a new affront to justice and the Parliaments—for did not a hundred tongues tell you that he had marched to Derby some three good months ago, and had not gossip been over ready to name him among the most notorious of those who had raised the Pretender's standard at Glenfinnan? If gossip lied she was but practicing a pretty habit and one with which she could not be unfamiliar. None cared to ask whether the rumor were true or false. None, certainly, would have believed that Sir Richard Escombe, baronet, would be mad enough to show himself here on the road to Warwick at such a time.

Yet here he was, none the less. Look a hundred yards down the road and you shall see that incorrigible rogue, Barry Michigan, who would have crossed the Styx for Dick Escombe's sake as readily as he now crossed the Avon. Barry already had taken his flute from his pocket and would pipe a stave. This must be a weary hour of waiting. You could not deceive Barry Michigan—he knew the tale too well.

"Will I give the horses a feed at the inn?" he had just asked his master.

"What are you thinking of Barry?" Sir Dick had replied. "I am going but to peep at their door."

"Sure, your honor, I can count the quarters on the church clock yonder."

"Barry, Barry—would you have me pass the house that shelters Kitty Dulcimore?"

"I'd have ye pass any house but your own."

"And this house full of soldiers, Barry—I do believe I'm the biggest fool in Europe this night."

Barry did not dissent.

"I've no head for figures, master—but you might not be so much out of the reckoning."

He took his flute from his pocket, linking a bridle rein to each arm and pesing for an air. Sir Richard regarded him, amazed.

"Heaven and my soul! would ye be piping me in, Barry? Have ye no discretion, then?"

"Ay, master, they'll hear of your coming soon enough. I'll be there at the hanging with the 'Death of Ould Morney.'"

Sir Richard said nothing. How could he fling a stone of speech at Barry Michigan? Certainly it was folly to be there; but not as Barry imagined it to be. This new thought quickened his step and sent him briskly to old Dulcimore's gate. He opened it, fearing the challenge of its crazy hinges, passed up the white drive, came suddenly to a full view of the house and then stood very still. A mad visit—he had known it from the first.

The house which old Anthony Dulcimore occupied at Sherbourn stands no longer, but did it do so it would call for little remark. Just a long, low, two-storied building which would have done well enough for the vicar or doctor of the parish—a rose garden slopping to the river's bank; considerable stables upon the right hand, a high brick wall enclosing an orchard upon the left, a short double drive before it and a modest porch for its chief adornment—these Sir Richard made a note of at a single glance. Be sure, at the same time, that he cared nothing, nor would a palace have delayed him that night an hour upon the road. He had turned aside that he might see little Kitty Dulcimore again—perhaps change a word with her concerning his fortunes. And here, at Sherbourn, through the blindless window, he saw her, standing high upon a stool, redcoats all about her and their admiration not very far removed from the scene.

A hunting man would have said that they were asking her to sing a catch of the coverts; Sir Dick observed but this, that she was laughing loudly, while an old friend of his, Capt. Beddoe, called for silence and another old friend, Capt. Rupert, for a song. A proper moment for a man who loved her to arrive! Sir Richard, honest always with himself, uttered no fool's talk of make pretense or dreams. 'Twas always a little devil for the

The Distinguished and Successful President of the Southern Railway Says Railroads Cannot Afford to Overcharge Patrons.

BY JAMES B. MORROW

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON (D. C.) Jan. 13.—Thirteen years ago J. Pierpont Morgan organized an assortment [illegible] railroads, various as to their lengths [illegible] values, into a single system. "[illegible] opinion," Mr. Finley replied, [illegible] his words just as he spoke "[illegible] has been caused, almost en[illegible] by a failure on the part of a [illegible] of the general public to [illegible] the truth of certain basic and [illegible] economic principles, the [illegible] which is that adequacy of [illegible] facilities is essential to [illegible] and prosperity of a community. The second is, that prosper[illegible] along its lines are es[illegible] to the success and prosperity [illegible] And the third is, that a [illegible] as a business institution is [illegible] the same economic laws that [illegible] enterprises of all others, and is entitled to earn a [illegible] between its receipts and [illegible]

"[illegible] would attempt to deny, I [illegible] that if the people of [illegible] are to prosper, they [illegible] to dispose of such of [illegible] as are not needed for [illegible] or local consumption in [illegible] where there is a demand for [illegible] words, they must have [illegible] the markets of the world. [illegible] clear, it seems to me, [illegible] is vitally interested in [illegible] the very widest possible [illegible] it has for sale—transportation—and that its market for such service can only grow with the growth and increased prosperity of the communities on which it depends for its very existence. In this latter principle of sound business and economics will be found the most effective safeguard to the public against unreasonable charges and unjust treatment by railway corporations.

"It must always be remembered that if a railway is to be successful as a business undertaking it must establish such rates as will induce traffic to move over its lines in constantly increasing volume. Theoretically, a railway is free to adjust its rates subject only to the common law restrictions enacted into State and Federal statutes, that they must not be unreasonably high, and that they must not be unduly discriminatory as to persons, places or commodities. Practically, however, a railway can do nothing of the kind. It must accept the rates fixed for it by commercial and economic conditions, over which it can have but little control.

"Rates, you must understand, are not arbitrarily established, but are determined by the competition of producing localities and markets, by the competition of other carriers, both rail and water, and by the competition of commodities themselves. Therefore, in such a complexity of competition, it is the constant task of the traffic officer to so adjust his rates as to put the products of the communities along his lines into contesting markets on favorable terms. The free working in the past of all these competitive forces, with a minimum of arbitrary governmental interference, has given the American consumer and shipper the lowest railway rates in the world, notwithstanding the fact that wages on American railways are the highest in the world. It has appeared to me that the business and economic principles which I have tried to make clear to you are misunderstood by a large part of the American people, and to that misunderstanding I attribute much of the legislation injurious to railroad property.

MUST ENCOURAGE INVESTORS.

"Again, it is perfectly clear that if a railway is to supply adequate facilities for transportation and be in itself a successful business enterprise, its revenues must be sufficient to yield a reasonable margin over expenditures. If there is no margin, there cannot be efficient service. Money for increased facilities has either to be earned or obtained by means of additional railway capital, or, in other words, the sale of new stocks or bonds. Current earnings, especially in sections where population and traffic are growing rapidly, are now utterly inadequate to provide needed increases and improvements in facilities. New capital is required in all directions. It will not be procured, however, unless the railroads can earn a proper margin over maintenance and cost of operation, and thus encourage investors to believe that money put into railroad securities will return a fair and sure rate of interest. But investors can have no such assurance if the income of railways is liable to be cut down by a capricious reduction of charges."

"Why has the public failed to understand the railroad question?" I asked. "There has been a prolonged discussion of it in all quarters."

"Yes; but there has never been a general and intelligent discussion of transportation problems as purely economic questions. There has been discussion enough, but most of it has been from a wrong standpoint—the viewpoint of personal and partisan politics. Too little attention has been given to the shaping of public policies affecting railways so that they may conform to economic laws. I believe, however, that a gradual improvement has begun, and that the discussion of transportation as a problem in economics, heretofore confined almost exclusively to railway men, is becoming more universal and scientific. This, I think, is the most hopeful sign of the times. Intelligent discussion, I am confident, will lead in the end to the adoption of public policies which will be most beneficial, not only to the railways, but to all the people of the country."

"Railway rates," you think, should be left to the control of commercial and economic laws. Then you oppose any regulation of the railways on the part of the government?"

FAVORS GOVERNMENT CONTROL.

"Not at all. On the contrary, I believe, and I know that practically all of the responsible railway officials in the United States agree with me, that governmental regulation within reasonable limitations is entirely proper. The right of the government, you must remember, to prescribe regulations for a railway company which could not properly be prescribed for a corporation engaged in ordinary business comes from the fact that a railway is a highway open to the public, and as such has been subject for centuries under the common law of England to certain well-recognized restrictions. Those restrictions have been embodied in the statutes of the United States."

"How far should State and national regulation go?"

"So far as may be necessary to prevent the infliction of wrong on any individual or community. Laws for the prevention of wrong cannot be too stringent, nor can they be too strictly enforced. The extreme limit of public regulation of privately-owned railways is reached, however, when the prevention of wrong and the protection of the buyers of transportation and the public as a whole in all their rights has been assured and safeguarded by legislation. Any attempt to carry Federal or State regulation beyond such a limit would be in conflict with economic laws and with the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees protection to the owners of railway property, as well as to the owners of property in all other forms."

"You speak of general wrongs to the people and the protection of the buyers of transportation. Specifically, what do you mean?"

"Unreasonable railway charges and such discrimination as may place individuals, localities, or commodities at an unjust commercial disadvantage. But when the Federal government or a State government goes further than to prevent unreasonable charges and discrimination there is an undue regulation of business, in which private individuals have assumed all the risk. Such further governmental regulation can no more be justified than could be the governmental regulation of farming or any other private business. Consequently, when the charges of a railway are not extortionate and are no more than a reasonable compensation for services performed, their arbitrary reduction is as unjustifiable and is as much the taking of property in violation of the Constitution as would be the reduction by the government of the price of the farmer's wheat or of the workingman's labor."

"What effect has the capitalization of railways on their charges for transportation?"

CAPITALIZATION NOT A FACTOR.

"Practically no effect whatever. A railway company, as I have said, must accept such rates as will cause traffic to move over its lines. The great railways between New York and Chicago are capitalized at different amounts per mile. And the difference is very wide. Yet none of them can advance, ever so slightly, a freight or passenger rate between New York and Chicago, or, if the result is to make its charge higher than that of other lines, between any other points where two or more of them compete. It is equally true that none of them, no matter how large may be its capitalization, can unduly advance rates affecting non-competitive points. Rates affecting competitive points are kept down by the competition of carriers, as well as by competition of other kinds. Rates affecting non-competitive points are kept down by the competition of other producing localities, the competition of markets, and the competition of commodities.

"A flouring mill, for example, may be located at a point served by a single railway, yet the charge for transporting wheat to the mill must be low enough to enable the miller to bid successfully for his raw material against millers in other localities, including those doing business at competitive points. Likewise, the freightage on flour from his mill must be such as to permit him to sell his finished product in highly competitive markets. You see, therefore, that the capitalization of the railway can have no possible effect on either rate."

"What have you to say about the recent legislation at the South and elsewhere establishing a charge of 2 cents a mile for the transportation of passengers?"

"I shall only say it is a common error to assume that because a particular charge may afford reasonable compensation in one section of the country, or on one particular line of railway, that the same rate would be reasonable in all other sections and on all other lines of railway. A moment's consideration will show any one that a charge which might be fairly profitable in Massachusetts, with a population of 370 to the square mile, and where 76 per cent. of the population live in cities, would be ruinously low in the States of the South, where the population is only thirty-seven to the square mile, and where only a little more than 8 per cent. of the people reside in cities. If a southern road, or one in the West, where conditions are similar, should reduce its rates to the vanishing point, it could not build up a passenger traffic equal to that on the more fortunately situated road in Massachusetts, for the reason that not enough people live along its lines to make such a traffic possible. Passenger business is simply a matter of cities and density of population."

"What business opportunities has the South to offer to the young men of the North?"

OPPORTUNITIES IN THE SOUTH.

"There is no section, so far as I know, where the opportunities for a young man who is not afraid to work are so varied, promising, and attractive as the South. Its resources are almost boundless. Although its industrial development during the past twenty-five years has been extraordinary, the South is preëminently an agricultural region. In its moderate-priced lands, facilities for reaching markets, and climate, it offers to the farmers of large or small means chances for money-making which they will find nowhere else. Farmers from the North are prospering in all parts of the South, not alone in cotton, but in general agriculture, in live stock and poultry raising, and in dairy farming.

"Industrially, development in the South has scarcely begun, notwithstanding its immense production of iron and steel and its great mills, containing millions of spindles, in which more southern cotton is manufactured into textile fabrics than is consumed in the mills of New England. The tendency of modern business is to concentrate manufacturing near the sources of raw materials. So the movement toward great centers of supply will continue in the South for a long time to come and will open fine opportunities to young men in all kinds of work."

HEAVY LOSSES CAUSE INQUIRY.

PORTO RICANS SEND ENVOY TO STUDY GOTHAM MARKET.

Failure to Get Returns on Five-Million-Dollar Investment Induces Island Growers to "Sit up and Take Notice"—Trouble Lies Wholly in Their Careless Methods.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Orange dealers and others interested in the business have been entertained by F. B. Wilcox, a special envoy of the Associated Fruit Growers and Shippers of Porto Rico, who has been here for some time to investigate the causes of the serious losses which growers in Porto Rico have suffered this year. He learned some things which may make a difference in the product which comes from that island next season. It has not been unusual for oranges which growers valued at $2.00 a box, to sell at 35 to 65 cents a box, which hardly paid freightage.

Porto Rico has about $5,000,000 invested in the business. The envoy found that the fault is all with the growers, who permit oranges to become too ripe and are careless in their methods of picking and packing. Fruit bruised in picking decays rapidly in transit. Some boxes arrived here one mass of rot.

The association blamed the steamship companies for some of their losses and it wants a weekly service for oranges and pineapples. It may even establish a line of its own.

The orange and pineapple men are said to be strong enough to carry out this plan regardless of opposition by existing steamship companies.

It is useless to deny the popularity of the Porto Rico fruit when it arrives in good condition. Now that a competent man has investigated the situation, such reforms may be instituted as will build up a growing and profitable trade.

The Phenomena of Electricity.

No less authority in Electrical Science than Thomas Edison is reported to have said: "If electricity is a substance or fluid of any kind, I have not been able to find, see, weigh or in any manner sense it." Electricians, and students of physics generally, are more and more inclined to the belief that there is no such thing as electricity. The phenomenon known as electricity may be likened to an echo. The impact of air waves, caused by the explosion of powder, against trees, houses or rocks, causes a disturbance in the aërial elements that produces sound. Sound is a rate of motion. It is claimed by some of the advanced thinkers that there is a rate of motion that will always cause the effect known as electricity. This particular rate is sometimes caused in nature by certain chemical action or combustions in earth and minerals; sometimes in aërial elements by counter currents of air, changes in temperature and varying degrees of humidity. The effect may also be produced by artificial means—water power, steam.—[George W. Carey, in The Balance.

Mayor Tom Johnson of Cleveland has been received by the President at the White House and describes his welcome as a gracious one. As he stepped out of the Cabinet room Mr. Johnson came face to face with Representative Burton, whom he defeated for Mayor of Cleveland last month. The two greeted each other with a handshake and Mr. Burton passed into the President's conference room. "Yes, I shook hands over the bloody chasm with Mr. Burton," laughingly remarked Mr. Johnson. "It was the first time I had seen him since the Cleveland election"

To command a great ocean steamship is one of the highest honors that can befall a seaman. Capt. Pritchard, the commander of the mammoth Cunarder Mauretania, has well earned the position which he now holds. He came to it by steps of well-merited promotion from a humble beginning.

WORKERS' PAGE—Discovery in South Starting International Economic Wa

Sulphur for the World.

THE CONE OF AN EXTINCT GEYSER IN LOUISIANA IS FILLED WITH PURE CHEMICAL.

UNTIL yesterday, comparatively all the sulphur used in the United States came from Sicily, where for many years has been mined the sulphur product of the world. As late as 1903 there were imported into the United States 175,000 tons of Sicilian sulphur, of a value of $4,000,000, with not one ton of American sulphur shipped out. Suddenly this has all been changed. As the result of the discovery of the sulphur deposits of Louisiana, there was produced last year enough sulphur to supply the demand of the United States, with 17,000 tons for export besides.

The story of the discovery and development of the sulphur deposits of Louisiana is told in the Manufacturers' Record. Wells were sunk for petroleum, near Lake Charles, but instead of petroleum a deposit of sulphur was encountered. The value of the strike was fully realized, but an intervening bed of 200 feet of quicksand baffled every attempt to sink a shaft into the deposits. Successive attempts to reach the deposits were made between 1868 and 1894, when the property passed into the hands of its present owners, who, by successive borings demonstrated the boundaries of the deposit and the character and nature of the formation. It appears that the sulphur lies in the cone of an extinct geyser, where it was deposited as far back as the tertiary period. The sulphur, embedded with limestone, in proportion of 70 per cent. sulphur and 30 per cent. limestone, extends 1100 feet downward from the lips of the cone to a body of gypsum. The mouth of the cone is from one-third to a mile across.

It took years of costly experimentation, even after the Frasch interests had secured the property, before his process was perfected. Briefly, the Frasch process consists in drilling a well, much as an oil well is drilled, to the bottom of the sulphur bed. Into the well a series of four pipes is then driven. The outer casing is a ten-inch pipe. The others are six, three and one inch. Between the ten and six-inch pipes superheated water of a temperature of 335 degrees is forced. From two to three feet above the bottom of the well there are perforations in the pipe, through which the heated water forces its way into the sulphur bed, liquifying it to as great a distance as the water retains the temperature required to melt sulphur. The melted sulphur, dropping to the bottom of the well, flows up the space between the six and three-inch pipe, and is brought to the surface by compressed air forced down the one-inch pipe.

The sulphur comes to the surface 99½ per cent. pure, and it is only necessary, therefore, to put it in shape for shipment. As it comes from the wells it is allowed to flow into large open bins 250 to 350 feet long, with a depth of 40 to 50 feet. As it cools the mass solidifies, so that, in shipping, it is necessary only to knock down the boards forming the sides of the bins, break up the mass into forms convenient for handling and load into the cars which have been switched onto the spur tracks that skirt each bin.

There are some 30 derricks on the grounds. The wells are sunk 50 to 100 feet apart. One well will produce as high as 400 to 500 tons in a day, keeping up a steady flow for weeks at a time, and there is a record of 60,000 tons of sulphur from one of the wells. To provide the enormous quantity of superheated water required in the production of the sulphur a battery of boilers with a total of 24,000 horse-power capacity has been installed.

As an industrial enterprise, the sulphur mine would be of unusual interest apart from the novelty of the process employed and the important position it occupies as an element in the development and prosperity of the South and the prestige it gives in its way to the entire American nation. Modestly capitalized at $200,000, the company disburses from $150,000 to $180,000 a month for labor, supplies, etc. From 600 to 700 laborers are employed at the mines. Drillers get $5 a day and helpers $2.50. (In the Sicilian mines they get 20 to 30 cents a day.) The company has built a schoolhouse and supplied teachers for the benefit of the workmen's children. An artesian well has been sunk and a drainage canal dug, and although the town of Sulphur Mines is located in a swamp, there is no malaria or ague. Compared with conditions in the sulphur mines of Sicily, the Louisiana sulphur camp is a veritable paradise. In Sicily the sulphur is mined, and by hand. The workmen go down into hot pits and chambers filled with stifling fumes and carry 40-pound loads of the sulphur in baskets on their backs up as many as 180 feet of steps or ladder. Hundreds of the workmen are boys. Many of them are in such depths of poverty that they have to be paid their wage of a lira or lira and a half at the end of each day's work in order to live through the morrow. At the Louisiana mine the works are all above ground, all the mining is done by machinery, and the whole community is prosperous and wholesome.

The American company's product is sold with a guarantee of 99½ per cent. pure sulphur. The principal users of sulphur are manufacturers of sulphite pulp, gunpowder, rubber and general chemicals. For the manufacture of sulphuric acid for fertilizers it seems that pyrites is mostly generally used, but it is stated that the same plant working on sulphur will make 20 per cent. more acid than if working on pyrites. The Union Company sells only to the wholesale trade, and has secured the whole trade of America.

Just what will be the various stages of the apparently inevitable world competition with the Sicilian sulphur it seems impossible to foretell. With present methods of mining, and in view of the fact that reductions in wages are apparently impossible, it is declared the Sicilian product cannot be lowered to a point that will bring it into successful competition in America with the sulphur of Louisiana. The appearance at Marseilles of 2000 tons of American sulphur in the fall of 1904 opened the eyes of Italy and Europe to the competition which had suddenly come into being, and there has been acute international interest in the situation ever since. The Italian government has had a representative on the ground to ascertain the exact conditions and to see what means might be adopted to save the Sicilian industry from paralysis.

Unquestionably a grave crisis has been precipitated by the Louisiana development. The Italian government has felt impelled to take the situation in hand, following the recent expiration of a contract by which, for ten years, an English company, the Anglo-Sicilian, handled the entire output of the Sicilian mines. With an accumulated stock of some 500,000 tons of sulphur, with a capacity of production of some 450,000 tons a year and present exports of less than 400,000 tons a year, it is evident that a very difficult problem presents itself. The government-backed consorzio obligatorio, an obligatory trust compelling every Sicilian producer of sulphur to sell his product through one channel and at a fixed price, became operative in August, 1906. Up to the present time it has been necessary for the Italian government and the Bank of Sicily to advance some $11,000,000 to the consorzio in order to take over the accumulated stock of sulphur of the Anglo-Sicilian Company and make advances to the mine owners and producers. An attempt by the Italian government to reduce the percentage of money to be thus advanced brought on a general strike of 100,000 workmen in September of this year, so that the former artificial stimulus is still supplied.

It would seem to be an economic impossibility for the mines of Sicily to loosen the hold the Louisiana company has secured on the American market, in view of superior quality and advanced methods of supplying the trade. In Rome, so the statement is made, a representative of the Union Sulphur Company was told that the United States government would like to see Sicilian sulphur shipped to America, and it was intimated that the resources of the Italian government might be employed to run the Union Sulphur Company out of business. Two cargoes of Sicilian sulphur were sent over. The Union company cut the price $2.62 a ton in America and exported 17,000 tons. No other shipment has been made to this country from Sicily this year. The Union company has announced its intention of invading the European market in case any further assaults are made on its American trade. The price of Louisiana sulphur has been $22.50 a ton. The Sicilian prices in former years were $22 to $24 a ton. The recent shipment was offered at $20. The Union company cut the price to $19.50.

With its enormous stock of sulphur and the prospect of starvation, rioting and bloodshed in case of an interruption of the sulphur industry, it is difficult to see how Italy can stay out of the American market. Yet a war of rates here would result in a determined invasion of Europe by the American company, it is declared, with results that might be even more disastrous to the Sicilian industry in the final wind-up; for the American company is seemingly content to stay out of Europe just now and refrain from doing anything that would undoubtedly increase the hardships of the already miserable Carusi who toil in the Sicilian mines.

Industrial Independence.

THE BENEFIT OF OPEN SHOP URGED—THE DESTRUCTION OF GOOD FRIENDSHIP CAUSED BY UNIONISM.

THE Argonaut of San Francisco is the only paper in that city that continually keeps the fires burning on its watch towers. In its last issue it says:

"The open shop is the rule in industry at Los Angeles, and it has been the rule for several years past, to the immense advantage of every element in the community, including the wage-earning element. Some two or three months ago the rule of the open shop was declared in the iron working industries at Portland, and the same rule is being enforced in other industries, including the building trades. And now Seattle is falling into line. The open shop, declared a month ago in the Moran Ship Building Works and in the general foundries of that city, has been extended to other trades. Seattle, like Los Angeles and Portland, will decline to permit a private and selfish association to define the conditions under which industry shall be carried on there. At Sacramento the great railroad shops have always been on the open-shop basis, and within the last year or two the open-shop principle has been inforced in the building industries. Even in the raw mining town of Goldfield the spirit of American independence has risen in revolt against the monopolistic demands of labor organized on a selfish basis.

"And now, isn't it about time that San Francisco, the metropolis of the Pacific Coast, the center of financial interests in the western half of the continent, a city claiming character with the best, should get into line? Is it not about time that we should so organize the conditions of life and industry that a capable and willing man may have leave to earn his living untaxed, undisturbed, and in accordance with the guaranties of the Constitution of the United States? Isn't it about time for San Francisco to put an end to the tyranny of a system which has checked enterprise, driven out capital, put limits upon a general business; which, furthermore, in a hundred recent instances, has been guilty of wanton outrage against individual liberty, against public peace, against the law, against even life itself? We would do well to adopt thep lan now being inforced at Seattle, as follows: First—Employment without discrimination of union and non-union labor. Second—The employment of apprentices and helpers in such numbers as shall be decided by employers and contractors. Third—The employer shall be the sole judge of the competency of his men and shall determine the conditions under which his work shall be done. This is a good programme. It has the merit of being fair all round. It would be a good system for San Francisco. While other cities of the Coast, large and small, are striking off the shackles of labor-union domination, is San Francisco, alone, to remain under the heel of this unspeakable tyranny?

"It hardly needs to be said to men of intelligence that a community which submits to the exactions and overcharges of an arrogant unionism, which suffers the wastes of a reckless labor unionism, which lies under the menace of unionism, can compete industrially or in a business way with free communities. Sooner or later, unless we find the courage and power to free San Francisco from the gross evils of unionism, we shall succumb to the competition of communities where life and industry are free. No enslaved city can hold its own against the competition of free cities. The history of the world—including the history of our own country—sufficiently exploits this fact.

"Industry in San Francisco can be relieved of its shackles in twenty-four hours, if those who command our industries will only say the word. Indeed, a beginning has already been made. In the Union Iron Works the open shop prevails. It took a stiff fight, but in the end the right principle won, and the consequence is that while wages have not been reduced, the efficiency of the men has largely been increased. Men who work for their employers always do better work than men who work in malignant spirit against their employers. The open-shop principle, too, has under circumstances of especial embarrassment been enforced in the street car service of San Francisco; and while the service is not what we would like to have it, it is quite as good as it was under the hand of unionism. The open-shop principle, too, rules in the telephone service, another success in the face of multiplied embarrassments. The open shop may be made the rule in San Francisco any day that the building contractors of the city, backed by the men who are putting up buildings, shall say the word. Men and brethren, we ought to find the courage to do this thing, not alone in the interest of material prosperity, but in the interest of social justice and under the inspiration of the Constitution and the laws. We have got to come to it in time; we cannot submit indefinitely to the economic wastes of unrestrained unionism; we cannot permanently consent that a private and irresponsible association shall monopolize our industry, tax every laborer for its own benefit, and enforce its arbitrary and selfish decrees by the ruthless methods of the boycott and of social outrage."

Unionism Destroys Friendships.

The Argonaut's statement of facts regarding the effect of unionism is well worthy consideration by any employer who has felt weak-kneed on the question of the maintenance of the open shop. The movement for industrial independence is constantly increasing its boundaries notwithstanding the claims to the contrary that Gompers and his industrial dupes may put forth. Hardly a week passes but some establishment heretofore dominated by the unions throws off the shackles and announces that hereafter it will be an open shop. Employers find this necessary in order to secure the former amount of effort from their employés. It is also necessary to restore the old-time respect for their employers that prevailed before union domination reared its ugly head. Proof of the latter is constantly coming to hand. At Portland, Or., recently the Willamette Iron and Steel Company placed two non-union men at work in their foundry, whereupon all the regular men walked out. Speaking of the demonstration President Corbett of the company says:

"It appears that their union affiliations are dearer to them than the pursuit of their legitimate industry, notwithstanding that some of them have been in our employ for over twenty-five years, and during that time admit that they have never had anything but the best of treatment."

Declares for Open Shop.

At Northampton, Mass., the Rogers Cutlery Company, the Northampton Cutlery Company and the Clement Cutlery Company have announced that their shops are hereafter to be operated as open shops. In Seattle the Master Builders' Association has declared for the open shop.

During the World's Fair in St. Louis, less than 10 per cent. of the building industries of this city were conducted on the open shop plan. The open shop prevails in fully 40 per cent. of those activities today, union men and non-union men working side by side in them on terms of absolute equality. This measures, in a general way, the stride toward industrial independence which was made in St. Louis between the end of 1904 and the end of 1907.

That the open shop impresses workers all over the country as being advantageous to them is shown in a convincing way by the fact that a deputation of the Workingmen's Protective Association of Baltimore, two weeks ago, came all the way from that city to St. Louis to present a gold-headed cane to James W. Van Cleave. They did this because they said that Mr. Van Cleave, as president of the National Association of Manufacturers and president of the Citizens' Industrial Association of St. Louis, has, during the past twelve months, done more meritorious work for the cause of industrial peace than any other man in the United States.

The Baltimore Workingmen's Protective Association is an open shop organization, and similar societies exist in several of the important industrial centers of the country, including St. Louis.

Gompers's Organization Turned Down.

Engineers seem to have more good common sense in the management of their unions than is usually displayed by many other kinds of workingmen, says the Square Deal. They seem to do their own thinking and to think upon right lines, and are less easily led astray by demagogical trouble-breeders in the employ of the labor trust. During a recent misunderstanding between the engineers of the Atlantic coastwise steamship companies and their employers as to wages, hours and conditions, the suggestion that the unions, represented by the American Federation of Labor, might well be called upon to assist the engineers was promptly turned down by the engineers, with the businesslike declaration that "the engineers of the different companies will conduct their own negotiations." The result was that the misunderstanding was speedily adjusted to the mutual satisfaction of all parties.

The Talk of Unionites.

For the benefit of thin-skinned people who believe in industrial independence, but have not the courage of their convictions, and argue that there should be no denunciation of labor-union methods, we quote the following from an editorial in a prominent labor-union organ:

"The manager of every scab institution reserves the right to make the standard of living for its menials.

"With a capon-lined bay window, a fat head and dwarfed intellect, these captains of iniquity sit in judgment of their betters and say that bacon is good and wholesome—for workingmen.

"So are beans—and grits!

"Then with a pious uplift of their hands and eyes they ask: 'Lord, what more do they want? Are we to be pauperized for their sake? Let that suffice for the present. Amen.'"

If the man who believes in soft words rather than in the manly way of calling a spade by its right name would read an occasional issue of a labor journal they would soon acquire a better understanding of the actual situation. The columns of the average labor organ teem with statements calculated to influence the passions of workingmen against their employers. This is the basis of unionism. It is the union way to promote the demand for the establishment of shop conditions that are generally conceived by union anarchists who take this way to flaunt the red flag.

Even Boss Gompers, from whom better things might be expected, is most unsparing in his denunciation of the employers, and, indeed, of everybody who does not happen to agree with him and his Federation of Labor. His speeches at Norfolk were filled with this sort of stuff, and he is faithfully imitated by all his sub-orators. Our good friends of whom we are speaking unquestionably read these fulminations of Mr. Gompers. Why is it that they never find any fault with his bitter vituperation, his diatribes and reckless persions, his dishonest tergiversation and his bullying, brutal methods? asks the Square Deal. If he, his organs, and his henchmen are not be to criticised for abuse and vilification, based upon falsehood and unscrupulous misrepresentations, why should people be so sensitive if we meet the same with plain speaking, based upon facts that are of public knowledge and indisputable?

After Coal, What?

Since coal is about to vanish, cannot man secure continued existence on this planet by means of electricity? Civilization will either change or end with coal. Every running stream can be lined with generators; the electric energy can be used by millions. It can be stored in batteries for use on ships, if the cells can be made light enough. But to have running water, forests must be planted everywhere, and without delay. Windmills can help turn dynamos.

Tide and wave motors can also be chained to servitude in turning armatures when all the coal disappears. It is said that energy enough from the center of energy, the sun, falls on the deck of a ship to run the engines. This all goes to waste now. Let Arrheinus, Thomson and Edison at once come to the rescue, grasp solar energy, change it to commercial electricity, store it by day for use in the night side of nature and relieve coming intolerable conditions.—[Edgar L. Larpin, in The Balance.

NEW PALACE HOTEL.

The First Steel Put in Position and Rapid Progress Will Now Be Made.

The erection of the new Palace Hotel in San Francisco has been finally begun after a long wait for the steel framework. The total amount of steel to be used will require over 100 cars for its transportation from the eastern mills, but although not all delivered enough is on the ground so that the erection of the building will suffer no further delay from that source.

The old Palace Hotel was a solidly built edifice and required months of time for its removal, and an expenditure of $90,000 for the same, enough to erect an ordinary hotel. But the Palace has never been in the ordinary class. The old Palace had sheltered more dignitaries of this and other countries than any other hostelry on the Coast. Great events in San Francisco were never complete without a banquet at the Palace. What the old Palace was to the old San Francisco, it is intended that the new Palace shall be to the Phoenix city now arising on the ruins created by the earthquake and fire.

The foundations for the new hotel consist of heavy steel bars and concrete laid on heavy piles driven down through the sand to the hard ground below. The superstructure will be nine stories in height, and it is expected to be completed on the fourth anniversary of the fire. The opening of the hostelry will be marked by one of the greatest banquets ever given in any land. Invitations will be issued to the President of the United States, his Cabinet officers, rulers of many foreign countries and diplomatic officers from all over the globe. This dinner will be given under the auspices of the California Promotion Committee and is expected to prove the most notable event in the history of San Francisco's reconstruction.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 30.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I have three samples out of the Funeral Mountains, and not being a miner of great experience, I would ask you if there are any values to pay to work more on samples 1 and 2—which samples are from an eight-inch vein. No Nickel or Cobalt.

DAGGETT, Jan. 4.—[To the Editor of The Times.] Registered (Dec. 3, No. 242.) Does the rock contain cobalt or nickel? Has it any mineral value in it? From Nevada. Thanking you in advance for your answer. Yours truly, J. C. M'M.

ANSWER. At sight of the specimen one would assert that nickel and copper were present. Not so, however. The sample reacts for phosphates. Prospect this piodside for leads of turquoise. Cobalt not present.

Sandstone.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 2.—[To the Editor of The Times.] Kindly let me know what the nature of this rock is. It is taken from a well being dug just outside of Los Angeles.

Also please state what chances there are of getting water in this kind of formation, and oblige. Respectfully, C. J. B.

ANSWER. The samples are gray sandstone. You are politely informed that this department does not take much stock in the divining-rod methods of locating ores, minerals, or water. It would appear, however, that if you could strike some moist clay in your "diggings" it would be more encouraging.

Black Copper.

WICKENBURG (Ariz.) Jan. 1.—[To the Editor of The Times.] In one of my claims near here, I have a stringer of ore which I would like you to name. Sample with this. Yours truly, C. W. W.

M'KESSON CAMP (Ariz.) Jan. 3, 1908.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The miners at this camp are much interested in your instructive "In the Earth" department. We like The Times for its manliness toward employer and laborer. We thank you for your good wishes "to the boys in the hills."

Our camp is coming more and more to the front. The ads. we inserted in The Times are bringing us the best of results. B. & C.

ANSWER: If there is a person more despised by a mining man than a "knocker"—he—or she—"it" is yet to be found.

Miners all over the West are realizing, at last, that The Times is and always has been the friend of the true laborer. When one hears such demagogues as "Pinhead" McCarthy denouncing The Times it is well to remember the four lines following:

"Boost and the world boosts with you,
Knock and you knock alone;
It's the pusher who eats the turkey meat,
While the growler gets the bone."

JOHNNIE IS HAPPY.

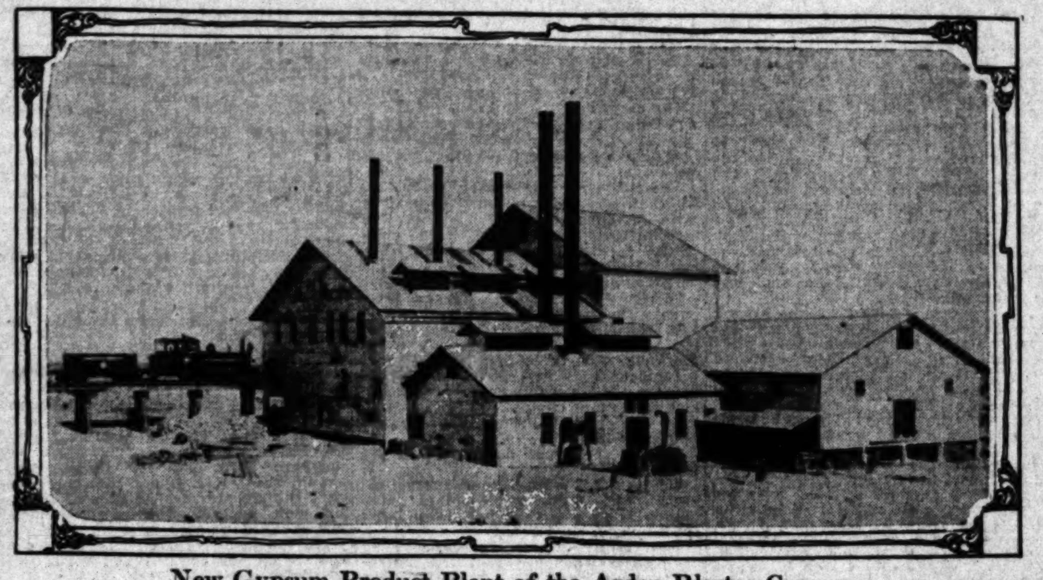
Year Starts With Fine Prospects—Mill Is not Yet Running Very Smoothly.

JOHNNIE (Nev.) Jan. 15.—Never has the mining outlook in this camp, been so bright as with the beginning of the year 1908. While nearly everyone who had property in the district, did assessment work, there were a few parties, non-residents, who failed to come through in time, and of course these claims changed hands. There was something of a scramble for some of the very desirable claims. Waters and Simmonds acquired the Jolly Rover, a claim adjoining the Johnnie on the north and the Battery on the west. This claim is an extension of the Johnnie ledge and in the three ledges that run through the property, is to be found the same character of ore as is found in the Crown Point Globe and the old Bowler lease.

Work is to commence on the Gold Crown group of mines immediately. This property adjoins the Johnnie on the west and has a ledge exposed of about 8 feet in width.

The crew on the Bullfrog saw the new year in, by jumping some of the most valuable claims in the district. They were so unfortunate as to locate some claims owned by one of the owners of the Bullfrog, and upon which work had been done; as a result the Bullfrog is getting together a new crew.

The mill on the Johnnie is running in a desultory manner, as yet, but is expected to be running up to its full capacity shortly. Reports from this property say that a body of ore has just been opened up, that, in itself, will furnish ore for the mill for two years to come. It is the intention of the management to mine and mill this new find at once, and leave the old ore bodies until later.



New Gypsum Product Plant of the Arden Plaster Company, recently completed by a Los Angeles concern at Arden, Nev. The company owns railroad equipment shown in picture, with five miles of track, connecting its gypsum deposits with the mill.

NEVADA.

MERGER MILL WORLD'S MODEL.

FINE PLANT PLANNED FOR GOLDFIELD CONSOLIDATED.

Will Cost Seven Hundred Thousand Dollars—Mohawk Runs Full Handed—Florence Mill Delayed. Syndicate Will Resume—Atlanta Leases Are Again Busy.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Jan. 16.—Plans and specifications for the company mill of the Goldfield Consolidated Mines Company are in the hands of contractors whose bids will shortly be opened for consideration. The reduction works, to be the model plant of the world, will cost $700,000, will possess a capacity of 500 tons daily, will be located west of the Sandstorm mine on Consolidated territory on the west slope of Columbia Mountain, will be connected with the Combination, Goldfield Mining, Jumbo, Laguna, Mohawk and Red Top merger diggings by three miles of standard gauge railroad, will be made ready for service now with all possible dispatch and will start treatment upon the waiting piles of milling truck ready at the Mohawk and Red Top workings, where are accumulations of sufficient bulk to generally supply the mill with grist for a year.

MERRILL IN CHARGE.

Construction of the reduction plant will be supervised by C. W. Merrill, a metallurgist and millman of wide repute from Lead City, S. D. He is patentee of a number of useful ore-saving devices which are employed in the Silver Peak and Montana Tonopah mills. A minimum saving of 90 per cent. on assay values of ores, running up to $100 a ton, will be effected by concentration and amalgamation and later the dirt that holds the other 10 per cent. will be cyanided at 25 cents a ton and 90 per cent. of its metal contents reclaimed.

COST FAIRLY LOW.

Actual milling of Consolidated ores will not exceed in cost $2.50 per ton. The Homestake plant in South Dakota treats 4000 tons daily at 50 cents per ton, making a saving, by the additional cyanide treatment at 25 cents a ton, of 94 per cent. of the assay value of ore that runs $4 the ton.

Combination, Goldfield Mining, Jumbo, Mohawk and Red Top have produced approximately $16,000,000 and to date have hardly been scratched. Laguna undoubtedly has ore bodies equal to those of the wonderful Red Top and it seems certain that Consolidated is destined to lay deep in the shade all previous records.

MOHAWK RUNS FULL BLAST.

Full shifts of miners are at work at the Mohawk, breaking ore and deepening the main working shaft. The crew is made up of local converts from the Western Federation of Miners and new arrivals from Utah and California.

Ore is developed in fine levels on the Red Top, whose main shaft is 400 feet deep and going lower.

An electric hoist is to be implanted on the Gotwaldt lease on the Combination, whose shaft is down 100 feet in search of the extension of the old Reilly pay shoot.

FLORENCE MILL DELAYED.

Owing to the vexatious delays in the delivery of parts, stranded between Denver and Goldfield for three months, it is likely that the Florence company mill will not be placed in commission until about the middle of April. It is to start with a capacity of seventy tons a day and very soon afterwards will run double that gauge. Ore that averages as low as $15 a ton will be reduced at a handsome profit.

MAIDEN DIVIDEND PAID.

Florence has paid its maiden dividend of $105,000, being 10 cents a share on the issued capitalization of 1,050,000 shares. There remain 200,000 shares of treasury stock worth, at market, about $800,000. Florence is unique in that it was incorporated after leases upon its domain had begun paying generous royalties. As a consequence not one share of its 200,000 treasury apportionment of the total capitalization of 1,250,000 shares has ever been floated.

LITTLE FLORENCE SHIPMENTS.

The Little Florence lease has completed its task of loading for the Globe smelter at Denver the 2200 tons of ore, valued at about $500,000, stored in bins and left on dumps at the time of the lamented strike of last November. In one abandoned dump near the railroad spur there was found a healthy streak that is good for $500 the ton and the entire 100 tons of the dump was loaded for the reduction works. In the main high-grade dump there was uncovered a mass of dirt that runs $6 a pound. This was sacked separately and stowed in bank vaults. Little Florence directors, elected this month, are George Vickers, A. H. Horton, J. C. Williams, J. E. Keelyn and George Aldrich, the last named director supplanting Dr. W. K. Robinson.

SYNDICATE LEASE TO RESUME.

The Syndicate Lease, one of the chief bonanzas on Florence ground, which produced upwards of $70,000 in the last fourteen days before the shutdown of Thanksgiving Day, is to resume stoping as soon as the management can retain a force of miners such as will insure against any interruption of operations. E. J. Warner of the Warner-Stewart Company, which promoted the syndicate on Florence and the Rosebud lease on Consolidated's O. K. fraction, has returned from a visit to Warner-Stewart's home office, at Chicago. These two leases, on adjoining estates, are connected deep underground and make up the largest single producing lay in the district. There is present on the O.K. workings every indication that the extension of the syndicate's fabulous pay shoot will be exposed.

The Von Polenz lease on the Florence is working with a full crew of its former employés, who have cast off the Western Federation shackles.

FRANCES MOHAWK PAYS.

A dividend of $45,500 has been paid in January by the Frances Mohawk Mining and Leasing Company, whose profits came from rich leases and a portion of whose proceeds is going into the development of its own ground. This first 1908 dividend is of five cents on the issued stock, 910,000 shares, the total capitalization being a million shares. Last year this company disbursed four quarterly ten-cent dividends, aggregating $364,000.

Work on company account is again the order at the Combination Fraction, where three shifts are busy, most of the miners being former adherents of the Western Federation.

ATLANTA LEASES BUSY.

Atlanta again presents a scene of life. The Jumbo Ledge lease on that property has a full complement of new men at work. The Hooper-Manning lease on Atlanta's Black Bear claim has transferred to its diggings the fifty-horse power hoist formerly in service at the Begole, a sub-lease on the Mohawk-Combination, expired, operating on the Mohawk. The main shaft at these diggings is down 250 feet en route of its destination, the 800-level.

YELLOW TIGER VALUES.

Stringers of ore that show values around the $20 mark have been cut in the 600-foot shaft of the Elks Consolidated lease on the Yellow Tiger, which expects to reach the main deposits at about 750 feet, but probably will continue to the 1000-foot level.

Much activity is evident among the leases and smaller company workings in the Diamondfield section of the district, where in some cases there was no cessation of development at any time since the scrip-strike began.

DOING WELL!

RAWHIDE RICH AND BOOMING.

NEW GOLD CAMP SHOWS UP HIGH HIGH VALUES.

Thirty-five Thousand Lease on Balloon Hill—Some Picture Rock. Gold Beats Theories—Montana Money Takes Hold—Camp Western and Woolly, Too.

TONOPAH, Jan. 15.—From all sides and from all places they are going into Rawhide—Rawhide, rough of exterior, but with a heart of gold. There is hardly anything else talked of in this camp but Rawhide, and the people are flocking in there from Reno, from Fallon and from Goldfield. And the camp is a youngster in the full glory of young life. They say that there is everything there but money; they said so a month ago, but since then several important deals have taken place in the camp, and there have been a number of moneyed men looking for good things.

THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND SALE.

The Kearns lease on Balloon Hill was a good thing for $35,000. The latter was paid to the Grutt brothers in the coin of the realm—not in conversation money. The Grutt brothers have many more properties which are covered with leases; they believed that the Kearns lease was a good thing when they sold it to Kearns, for they are all (there are four of them) practical mining men, and nobody thinks of doing anything without deferring to their judgment. If the brothers say that a claim is good, it is worth the price asked for it.

TWO-THOUSAND-DOLLAR ROCK.

But they sold the Kearns lease because they needed the money to prosecute the work on their other properties. On Sunday the Kearns lease shipped twenty tons of ore to the Nevada Reduction Works at Goldfield, which, it is estimated, will net in the neighborhood of $40,000. Two thousand dollars a ton is rock that is well worth mining. To be sure, the rock does not go that all through, and it is doubtful if there is a vast lot of it; but the lease is down eighty feet, and has at that depth four feet of rock that will go $500 a ton, and twelve feet that averages $250 a ton.

This is a wonderful showing, but there is no telling how much more there is of it in the camp. No less than twenty leases are sacking ore, and there are many more leases which have stopped work, with gold in sight, for lack of money. It is true that there is no money in camp, as money in a boom camp goes, and there is the chance for the man with little money to go in there and get something good.

MONTANA MAN BUYS.

The biggest transaction which has yet been made in the camp was the purchase of six claims on Balloon Hill by E. W. King of Bozeman, Mont. Mr. King paid not less than $50,000 for the claims; it is known that he passed over a certified check for that amount, and it has been said that much more was paid by him. Be that as it may, the first-named future seems large at first sight for a prospect in a new mining camp, but when it is taken into consideration that on the property are some of the best leases in the camp, the sum becomes a very insignificant one. Mr. King is going to work the property for all it is worth.

HEALTH AND WEALTH.

Frank Boehme, a Milwaukee capitalist, happened into Rawhide. It was a chance visit, for he had started on a tour of the world in search of health. He got as far as San Francisco, and then started for Goldfield to look after some interests he has in that camp. He stopped off at Reno for a day, and he has not yet gone to Goldfield. He was persuaded to go to the new boom camp, and he went, fearful of what the trip might do to his impaired health. He forgot all about his health. He saw the Murray lease on the Bald Hornet claim, and he put his money in with Murray and W. H. Hunter to work it. The samples which have been taken from the lease go $662.97, $588.33 and $1509.92.

Mr. Boehme has acquired another lease near the town, and he is well pleased with his selection, for good values show at a depth of forty feet. He says that he has not felt better for years than he does at the present time, and he is so delighted with Rawhide that he is going to get his friends in Milwaukee to get in there with him.

PICTURE VALUES.

On Grutt Hill, or Mascot Hill, as it is known, the Grutt brothers are down fifty feet on their main workings, and they are crosscutting at this depth to intersect the big ledge which outcrops on the surface. On Saturday they put in a shot in one place on the suggestion of a visitor to the camp, and the result was wonderful. The rock fairly glistened with the precious metal, and it looked like stuff that might be worth anywhere from $18 to $20 an ounce.

There are lots of such samples of the worth of the camp to be seen; assays will run to great figures, to picture values. There are also bald spots in the camp, where the gold has not yet begun to shine, and where the glisten of it may never been seen. Rawhide is as yet a prospect, but it is a glittering prospect, if ever there was one found in the State of Nevada. It is far and away ahead of anything that Goldfield ever had to offer at the same stage of development.

GOLD BEATS THEORIES.

The most pessimistic engineer who has gone into the camp has not had the hardihood to knock it, for the very good reason that when it comes to a gold camp, gold is where you find it. Rawhide has a similar formation to this camp; it has the andesit, and wherever that has been found, it has nearly always been permanent. No geological study of the camp has yet been made, or, if there has, it has not been made public. Of what use to the man who is hunting for gold is a geological thesis, anyhow? He does not want to pore over it. He is losing valuable time which might be devoted to the acquiring of a claim or a lease. The sight of hundreds of sacks in which is high-grade ore piled up on the hillsides around him is far more instructive to him than anything that he can read or be told.

Mining men believe in symbols and lucky incidents. The gold is the symbol here, and the lucky incidents are the men who are in the camp, the men who are always to be found in a live camp, for no other reason, perhaps, than their intuition takes them there.

Nearly every man who has made good in this State, and in other countries, who has ever ventured into Nevada, is either there, or has been there.

MILLS TALKED OF.

They are talking now of putting in mills in Rawhide, they are so sure of its making good. There is a good deal of high-grade ore on the dumps and sacked, but most of this will go to the smelters as soon as the smelters are in condition to do business. But there is plenty of low-grade ore which might do for the mill, and it would not take long to get one's money back for the venture of putting in a mill. The water problem has been solved. Water is being hauled in from a distance of six miles, and it is good for domestic purposes as well as mining. Wood is twenty dollars a cord, and coal forty dollars a ton; but this will not last long. It is not any colder in Rawhide than in Tonopah, and stuff can be hauled in from Schurz on the Southern Pacific, a distance of twenty-eight miles. When Tonopah was discovered there was a haul of sixty-five miles from the railroad, and it was not a very good railroad either.

WOOLLY WESTERN WAYS.

There are all the elements in Rawhide that go to make the booming mining camp. It is removed from the railroad, from water, from timber, from fuel; removed from everything but the precious metals. But wherever gold is, all these things come to it, including capital. There is a crowd of "bad" men in the camp, accompanied by their consorts of no better women, and the crack of the pistol is not an infrequent sound. There has been some blood let, and there probably will be some more, before the stronger part of the community get together and wipe out the undesirable element. But this time is not yet at hand, for these characters are concomitants of the budding mining camp, and they hang on until the camp begins to get so good that the necessary steps have to be taken to see to it that law and order prevail.

It is proposed to name Representative Denver, Democrat, from the sixth congressional district of the Democratic national convention next July, because Mr. Denver is the son of Gen. Denver, a Democratic Representative in the thirty-fourth Congress from California, for whom the city of Denver, Colo., was named.

OCTAVE HIGH IN THE SCALE.

YAVAPAI MINE HANDS VISITORS GOLD BRICK.

Pasadena People Locate Wickenburg Placers—Buzzard Group Sold. Britons Will Build Mill—Copper Queen Busy—Sasco Smelter Delayed—Clifton Labor Troubles.

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Jan. 15.—Parties of stockholders drift into Arizona occasionally to visit the Octave mine in Southern Yavapai county, north of this point. The latest delegation, of sixteen, was mainly from Northern Illinois and Michigan, and comprised capitalists who have invested heavily in the mine, and who are more than hopeful of rich returns. While the party was at the mine a mill clean-up was made, the result being a gold bar weighing 1213 ounces, troy, worth more than $25,000, the result of a two weeks' run. This bar was delivered in person by President C. E. Miesse of the company, to a Prescott bank. A new four-foot vein of ore has unexpectedly been encountered on the sixteenth level of the Octave, carrying sulphides said to average $100 a ton for the entire width of the ledge. Another find, made in the Joker mine of the company, at a depth of 1100 feet, was a six-foot ore body averaging $33 to the ton. The company now has 175 men employed, and is running continually a forty-stamp mill and a 250-ton cyanide plant. Preparations are being made for the enlargement of the mill to 120 stamps, and for the transmission of power from an electric generating works on the railroad. The company has eighteen claims and has behind it the record of several million dollars' production. This property lies immediately below Rich Hill, whereon the greatest placer deposit ever known in the Southwest was discovered in 1863 by a party of California miners headed by Pauline Weaver.

FORTUNA MEETING.

At an election held in Phoenix this week, the stockholders of the Fortuna Gold and Copper Company chose J. N. Sturdy of Pittsburgh as president, and F. B. Bithell of Pittsburgh, vice-president and general manager. The company has property near that of the old Union mine in the Winifred District, only fifteen miles north of Phoenix, and promises extensive development work for this year.

PASADENA PLACERS.

A Pasadena company has located 2000 acres of placer ground near Wickenburg, on which prospecting has shown values averaging about $1 a ton. It is claimed that this average will run over not less than 5,000,000 tons. Two placer gravel washing machines, capable of handling eighty tons a day each have been shipped to the property from Denver, and are to be tried. If successful, eight or ten more are to be installed. The property lies in Santo Domingo gulch, southeast of Wickenburg, a district which has been dry-washed by Mexicans for thirty years past, and which has produced millions of dollars in coarse gold. Los Angeles capital is being freely invested in the vicinity of Wickenburg, in all classes of mines, and it is said that Los Angeles money will soon establish a bank at that point.

UNIDA NEEDS A LAWYER.

In the District Court at Prescott, James Clayson has sued the Unida Gold Mining Company to clear title to three mining claims in Black Rock district, near Wickenburg, which plaintiffs claim belong to the Electra Mining and Milling Company, by them represented. Fraud is alleged in the transfer of the claims to the Unida company.

BUZZARD GROUP SOLD.

The Buzzard group of three claims on Groom Creek in Yavapai county, a property well developed and of good local fame, has been sold by William Gammill and James O'Brien to the Alma Empire Consolidated Mining Company. The claims adjoin those of the Empire, one of the best known properties of the county.

PLANET FIRST PROFIT PAYER.

It is stated that the Planet mine in Yuma county was the first copper mine ever operated at a profit in Arizona. It was opened in 1860, its ore being taken by flat boat on the Colorado River to the Gulf of California, and there loaded on sailing vessels and shipped to Wales for treatment. The Planet is again being worked, favored by much better transportation facilities, owing to the construction of the Arizona and California Railroad. A thirty-ton smelter is on the ground, but the day for the working of such small units is long past in the Southwest. Though sulphide in small quantity has been found in the lower workings, practically all the ore extracted is oxide or carbonate in character, carrying gold values to some extent.

BRITONS BUILD MILL.

From Yuma county comes report of the plans of an English company to put up a 400-ton mill in the King of Arizona district, to be supplied with power by an electric plant on the Colorado River. It is stated that the works projected will be able to handle gold ore at a profit, if the values contained are $3 a ton or better. The power plant is to develop 4000 horse power, and a part of the scheme is the digging of about a dozen wells near Kofa to secure an adequate water supply.

Three miles east of Mohawk station, in Yuma county, George W. Norton and the Mathis brothers have found very high-grade silver in a shaft being sunk on what had been considered a copper mine.

COPPER QUEEN BUSY.

An additional furnace and another converter have been put in operation in the Copper Queen works at Douglas, necessitating an increase of 15 per cent. in the smelter force employed. Seven furnaces are now being kept hot.

During December, 5600 feet of development work was done in the Copper Queen mines at Bisbee, mainly on six great drifts, which are to connect the Sacramento shaft with the other workings of the company, these drifts to be the main highways through which all ore will be taken, for hoisting to the surface of the Sacramento. This shaft now is down to the 1000-foot level.

At Cananea, 750 men are still at work in the mines and smelter of the Greene-Cananea Company, mainly employed on improvements, pending resumption of work on the former great scale. B. M. Pattison has resigned as superintendent of the Shattuck-Arizona and Denn-Arizona properties at Bisbee, and it is understood that he will be succeeded by S. A. Parnell, now in charge of mines in Sonora, who, for several years, was manager of the Calumet and Arizona mines in Bisbee, and of the Old Dominion at Globe.

TOMBSTONE PAY DAY.

Pay day at the Tombstone Consolidated Mines Company materialized with checks instead of coin, but the local bank paid half the checks in cash. The company's miners were laid off three days last week while a general overhauling of engines and boilers was in progress at the big shaft. Still further additions are being made to the company's immense pumping plant.

SASCO SMELTER DELAYED.

Owing to the non-arrival of several pieces of machinery, the new smelter of the Imperial Copper Company at Sasco was not blown in during the week, though Frank M. Murphy and a number of other prominent stockholders came down from Prescott to be present at the ceremony. The starting of the plant will be a matter of only a few days, however. The initial units of the smelter comprise one 400-ton water-jacket furnace, and converter equipment more than sufficient for the output of matte. For the present, the ore production will be maintained at about 400 tons a day, though it is expected within a few months to install still another furnace, which will partially be fed by custom ores, affording a handy market for many rich copper prospects in the vicinity of Silver Bell.

PATAGONIA SMELTER PROJECT.

It has been announced with some degree of definiteness that a 1000-ton smelter will be erected this year on the property of the Mansfield Mining Company, near Patagonia. The property of the Cochise Consolidated Copper Company in Paradise district seems to have passed permanently into the hands of Madison F. Larkin, representing capitalists of Scranton, Pa., mainly connected with the International Correspondence Schools, the transfer being through trustee's sale, in default of payment of a debt of $21,500. C. B. James and the Hegan Mercantile Company of Pittsburgh, have judgments against the company for, respectively, $6000 and $12,893.

IRATE STOCKHOLDERS.

One hundred stockholders at Douglas in the Arizona Mining & Development Company are making war medicine over the sale of the company's property arranged by President Overlock and associates to C. B. Bell and F. F. Douglas, for a consideration of $200,000. The property is known as the Los Angeles mine and is situated near Nacozari, Sonora. The protesting stockholders claim that the property is well worth $1,000,000, and state that they will seek to block the sale by all means in their power.

IRON CAP'S STRIKE.

A permanent ore body has been struck at 450 feet in a drift of the Iron Cap mine of the National Mining & Exploration Company, near Globe, whereon operations have been in progress for about a year, seeking to strike two inclined veins of much promise. A large hoisting plant is on the road for the Miami Copper Company, the Lewisohn corporation which lately bought property near Globe. In the same neighborhood preparations are being made for resumption of work at the mines and concentrator of the Inspiration Company.

The Old Dominion Company at Globe, paid off on the 15th of January in checks, but it is stated that this would be the last pay day wherein paper will be issued. Other mines of the district had coin on hand to meet the emergency.

CLIFTON TROUBLES SETTLED.

All labor troubles at Clifton have been settled and the furnaces of the Arizona Copper Company are working full time. Only one of the company's concentrating mills is idle. The Standard Copper Company, which has mines above Clifton, is making regular shipments to the Detroit smelter at Morenci. The Gold Plate Development and Reduction Company is preparing to build a concentrating mill near Clifton.

Capt. William McDermott, superintendent of the Twin Buttes Company, has stated that prospecting will be started at once on the property near Tucson, by means of a diamond drill placed on the 400-foot level.

A gasoline hoist has been placed on the Leatherwood property near Tucson, a mine understood to be controlled by Col. Epes Randolph.

Mrs. Claude Swanson, wife of the Governor of Virginia greeted him. "I am sorry to hear that you have been ill, admiral," said she.

IN THE SKY.

METEORS SOLVE SPHINX RIDDLE.

Results of Scientific Study of Upper Air Currents.

Remarkable Experiments by Prof. C. C. Trowbridge.

Two-Mile-a-Minute Winds Sixty-five Miles High.

BY JOHN ELFRETH WATKINS.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13.—While meteorologists have been diligently attacking the same problem with kites and balloons, Prof. C. C. Trowbridge of the Phoenix Physical Laboratory, Columbia University, has been investigating the mysterious currents of the upper air by means of a systematic study of meteors.

Heavenly Visitors.
Seen by Prof. Trowbridge.

These earthward travelers from other worlds appear higher in our atmosphere than do any other visible objects. Prof. Trowbridge has located them as high as sixty-five miles. Lately the great nations of the world coöperated in a vast cloud survey, purposed to snatch from the heavens the secrets of the upper air currents. The highest midsummer clouds were computed to venture as high as thirty miles, but satisfactory measurements of the motions of clouds generally could be made only below eight miles.

Next meteorologists announced great feats with kites, which were to snatch from the skies the answer to the sphinx riddle of the upper air currents. But the limit to which kites can be raised has been found to be only about four miles. Now "pilot balloons" are being sent aloft on this same errand, bearing with them meteorological apparatus ingeniously devised. Although these little gas bags have floated as high as fifteen miles, the usual limit for their successful operation is below twelve miles. Until Prof. Trowbridge set to work studying meteors for this purpose there was but one notable instance when scientists got any hint of the directions of air currents at greater heights than these investigated by the aid of balloons, kites and clouds. This was when the Japanese volcano Krakatoa hurled its tons of dust into the heavens. By watching how this dust drifted meteorologists got some vague notions as to currents twenty-five and perhaps thirty miles above the surface of earth. From phenomena thus observed it was estimated that twenty-five miles above the equator there was in our upper atmosphere a current rushing over toward the west at the velocity of seventy to eighty miles an hour. This current was detected by the progressive change in the color of the sun as affected by the volcanic dust viewed by different astronomers stationed around the earth. The sun appeared bluish wherever it was partially screened by the thin cloud of volcanic dust suspended in the atmosphere.

HIGH AS 476 SINGER BUILDINGS.

But carrying the study sixty-five miles up means a vast extension of the field—means three times the range of observation by the aid of the volcanic dust phenomena; eight times that possible with balloons; sixteen times that possible with kites. It is a vast height when we stop to think of it.

Cut the earth's crust in a narrow, straight strip between Wilmington and Baltimore, and bend this vertically so that the Wilmington end is straight up in the air above Baltimore, and you about have it. Or, pile up 476 Singer buildings one on top of another, and the tower of the topmost will reach the vast heights whose air currents are being studied by Prof. Strowbridge. Sixty-five miles is a height beyond what meteorologists not long ago considered to be the limit of our atmosphere. Computations based upon the duration of twilight placed this limit at forty-five.

At only a few miles from the surface of the earth our atmosphere, of course, becomes too attenuated to support life. In their highest balloon flights some six miles up, men have had to breathe bottled oxygen in order to keep alive.

SURER WEATHER FORECAST.

The motions and conditions of this aërial ocean, now known to extend so far above our heads, play a most important part in the determination of our weather and climate. This is why such bold attempts are being made to explore it by kite and balloon, or to study it by watching the motions of clouds. Coming weather events cast their shadows before them in the upper heights of earth's atmosphere envelope. The more information meteorologists can glean about conditions at these great heights the more accurately can they make their weather prophecies. The weather bureau now alters its forecasts according to the latest news from the heavens brought down by its pilot balloons, or even its kites.

"But observation of meteors is," says Prof. Trowbridge, "the only means by which the presence, as well as the direction and velocity of atmospheric currents at very great altitudes above the surface of the earth, can be determined. There has been little, if any, systematic work done in this direction heretofore."

Now, we cannot see meteors glow until they encounter our atmosphere, whose friction gives them their fire, the long enduring things, or "trains," which they leave after them in the skies are self-luminous clouds. Their region he terms the "meteor-train zone," which commences forty-five miles above the earth and extends twenty miles farther up, to the sixty-five-mile altitude mentioned.

The height at which they could be viewed longest was found to be about fifty-five miles. The density of the atmosphere at this altitude appears to be most favorable for both their formation and long duration.

DAYLIGHT METEORS.

Some were observed in daylight and in twilight. Then they appear like thin streaks of smoke, illuminated by the light of the sun, but according to measurements these daylight meteor-trains occur lower than those visible at night, as low as twenty-five miles and seldom above fifty.

The greatest speed noted was 125 miles per hour for a night meteor-train, which sped over New England at an altitude of over sixty miles. Another shot through the sky, fifty-four miles above England at the rate of 122 miles per hour. We say "sped" and "shot," but in reality they were merely drifting with the terrific upper air currents. Thus, not only is the velocity of earth's upper currents of thin air found to be as high as 125 miles per hour—over two miles per minute—but the direction of these currents may be ascertained.

That there is a general eastward drift of the air at great altitudes over the northern hemisphere has generally been supposed for some time. But Prof. Trowbridge finds that while there is a drift predominating toward the east, it may be in any direction at altitudes from fifty to sixty-five miles up. This is so over northern United States and England, and perhaps over the entire north temperate zone. This discovery that air currents may rush in any direction at these great altitudes is an important fact bearing on the circulation of our atmosphere. It is a curious fact that none of the night meteor trains showed a westward drift, while nearly all those seen at daylight were going westward—opposite to the predominant direction of the night trains. This westward drift of the day trains—which were the lower—took place in most cases probably below fifty miles. Thus these observations give almost conclusive evidence that the upper atmosphere is composed of currents of different velocities, one above the other. In atmospheric zones from five to ten miles deep adjacent currents are usually in different directions; but in some cases there will be, in one zone, almost a calm, directly above or below which there will be a current of considerable velocity.

ZIGZAG METEOR TRAINS.

In these meteor trains there are sometimes several bends, which give them the appearance of "M's" or "N's" in the sky, their straight lines being miles in extent. These curious zigzags, according to Prof. Trowbridge, result from variations in the velocity or direction of air currents in the different altitudes covered by the trains. In other words, in such instances, a meteor train has crossed a number of superimposed strata of air, moving in different directions, with various velocities. He thinks it probable that up to sixty miles there are gradients of pressure and hence unstable conditions such as accompany storms near the surface of the earth. Positions of the continents and oceans below seem to govern the predominating directions of even the upper drifts. Passing northward through the north temperate zone, the predominating upper currents appear to be first northward, then northeastward and finally southeastward, when latitude fifty degrees to sixty degrees is reached.

VISIBLE FORTY-FOUR MINUTES.

The most remarkable meteor train taken into account by Prof. Trowbridge remained visible for forty-four minutes. It was thirty miles long, a mile wide and occupied a zone between forty-nine and fifty-nine miles above the earth. At first it was bayonet shaped, and, although very distinct, stars could be seen through it. Four minutes later it was stretched out nearly horizontal, but with right end hooked up and left end similarly bent down. Later it spread out into a straight, horizontal line, tapering at the ends. This mysterious body after thus sluggishly unbending in space for three-quarters of an hour gradually faded from view.

Downward movements of meteor trains are due to falling air currents rather than to gravity, in the professor's opinion. Gravity seems not to affect them. In fact, only one of long duration has been noted to move downward at all. Some astronomers regard these bodies as made up of fine meteoric dust, but Prof. Trowbridge says that it is safe to regard them as clouds of gas or vapor whose positions and shapes change with the drift of the upper air. Those seen at night are far too bright to be due to reflected light. Hence he regards them as self-luminous, or shining by their own light, as is indicated also by their spectrum.

That they are due to gas phosphorescence he thinks most likely. He is engaged upon experiments to determine if they are due to the same conditions as the "afterglow" produced in a vacuum tube by electric discharges. He suggests a systematic survey of meteor trains by observatories where nightly watches should be kept during the seasons of meteoric showers. Wherever there are two observatories separated by a good base line such forms can be measured by triangulation. A small telescope for noting the drift among the stars would, he says, be the only instrument required.

Subdued His Mother's Voice.

The successful merchant invited his parents to visit him in New York City. They came gladly and on the following Sabbath were escorted to a fashionable church in Fifth avenue. Some of the hymns were familiar. In their rendition the visiting pair contributed heavily, with the credit for volume in favor of the father. Although not always in correct time and sometimes in discord, yet the joy of this good couple leaped forth in joyous praise, and they did not see the glowering looks of near by worshipers or the beetlike face of their devoted son.

"Father," explained the merchant that afternoon while his mother was taking her accustomed nap, "in our churches the congregations do very little singing. It is left entirely to the choir."

"I know, my boy," said the old man as he lovingly placed a hand on his son's shoulder, "that it was very embarrassing to you this morning, but if I hadn't sung as loudly as I did the people would have heard your mother."—[New York Press.

music," he said to himself, but he said it very sourly none the less.

Now, could you have put a cool head upon Dick's shoulders—an article of furniture not commonly found across the Irish Channel, and unprovided, it would seem, by the gentle lady of Moreton Fell whom he had called mother—could you have done this you would have held a gallant soul to the spot that he might have heard the words of little Kitty's song and, perhaps, have derived some comfort from them.

As it was, he did nothing of the kind, but fell to pacing the graveled path as full of thoughts of war as ever the Malooney boys had been upon the morning of a fair.

What right had Kitty to be among such fellows? True, he himself had often sung a catch with them when he wore King George's coat, and had the right to go in debt for it. Every bit a man, he could grant no such privilege to Kitty. She was but 19, and should have known better. Logic forbade him, at the same time, to ask by what right he posed as arbiter elegans in her case. Was he her acknowledged lover—the outcast, the exile who had had his uniform stripped from his back? Devil a bit of it! Had he written to her from France? Not a line, upon his honor! Had he news of her—asked for news? He was ashamed to remember how rarely he had heard or asked it. And yet no sooner had he come to England than the mention of her name could send him riding from Chester like a Muscovite, turning aside on the most foolish of pretexts and pacing this hard and stony path like any criminal in a courtyard at Newgate. A mad visit—he had known it from the first.

And should he ride on without a word? Should he tell her the news or keep it back? There might be trouble enough among those hot-headed fellows, fresh from the table, he would swear, and not unwilling to return to it—trouble enough if he came in among them and asked if any remembered Capt. Dick. He knew not what to do. Far down the road he heard the strains of Barry's flute.

And, as the clear heaven above him bore witness, no man could have mistaken those for the plaint of any nightingale.

CHAPTER II.

WHAT HAPPENED AT ANTHONY DULCIMORE'S HOUSE.

There are two long and narrow rooms upon the left-hand side of the porch as you enter the manor at Sherbourn, and it was in the second of these that Kitty Dulcimore related in song the story of the First Royal Dragoons, whose motto, as all the world knows, is taken from the Latin and signifies, "let us be judged by our deeds," or "Spectemur agendo," as the schoolmasters would have it.

Granted that it would have been more than ungracious to have put such a fine precept to the proof upon such an occasion, had you judged His Majesty's Dragoons out of their own mouths this night you would have formed but a poor opinion of them.

Perhaps in the end your better judgment would have excused them and you would have remembered their march three months ago from London to Derby after the Bonnie Prince Charlie; how thence they had been sent to Warwick to keep order in the western counties—and now, after three of the dullest months that such fine fellows could remember, they were to return tomorrow to London and the South.

For their commander, the most noble, the most exalted, the most persevering blackguard in the three kingdoms, Frederick Lord Harborne, of noble memory, there were honors awaiting and to spare.

Some said that German George had made him Governor of Windsor Castle; others named him for an earldom. Some would tell you aside that a less agreeable climate and one made much of by the parsons would suit him better, but that honor would receive him on the threshold no man doubted. And this was the more extraordinary when we remember how little he had done; figuring with merit neither in the North nor in the Midlands; hunting out but few Jacobites for all his pains and returning with so few trophies of the politically slain that the pamphleteers already had made merry over it. For this the regiment cared nothing at all. They were returning to London—what else mattered!

And so, I say, it would have been a cruel business to judge them out of the mouths of their motto-loving forefathers. Why, such a standard would have paralyzed the half of them. Spectemur agendo! Was not Major, the Marquis of Repton, as fine a fellow as Nottinghamshire could show you, already nodding by the window seat, as well primed with good liquor as a doctor with bad Latin? And look at the most noble one in the first of the rooms, Frederick, my Lord of Harborne, the colonel of the First, hatchet-faced and sour—a damning hectic cheek to accuse him and a glassy look in his roving eye. Spectemur agendo, be sure, is no good to such as these, whatever it might do for the younger men. They would much sooner be judged tomorrow morning.

But we are forgetting Kitty, and Kitty, as we most solemnly bear witness, will not suffer herself to be long forgotten, whatever the circumstances. Is she not a Celt of the Celts, and does she not possess more than a Celtic vivacity? It is true that she has been long in England—so long that she has almost forgotten old Anthony Dulcimore's estates in County Down and the bigoted Cromwellism by which her forefathers obtained them. But even German George's soldiers cannot rob her of that priceless birthright, the determination never to be serious when she can be merry, and always to be merry when she should be serious.

All the traditions of Sherbourn record the story of Kitty's merriment upon that memorable occasion. Her immediate cavaliers were, we find, no others than the redoubtable and inseparable comrades, Capt. Rupert and Capt. Beddoe—generally known, as "the twins"—fierce-mouthed warriors both, but in Kitty's presence as gentle as cooing doves. For her sake had they (to some reasonable extent) spared themselves the liquor; for her sake they stood upon either side of a crazy chair, while Kitty, mounted thereupon, recounted in verse a true account of the circumstances under which the Royal Dragoons had come to Warwick. And this is the measure of it—in imitation, as it would appear, neither of the sonnets of William Shakespeare, nor of the thunderous eloquence of Master Milton—but merely of a soldier's catch and the rol-de-tol-lol which then accompanied the same:

The sojers came to Avonside,
  All on a rainy morning.
They hunted for Charlie far and wide,
  All on a rainy morning.
And the sergeant, he says, "What I see
Of the beautiful girls in this fair country,
'Tis shoulder arms, my boys," says he,
  All on a rainy morning.

Kitty sang sotto voce, the Marquis keeping time with his head; the poet Whitehead with his feet. Evidently there was no great desire upon the part of this amiable company that the lilting refrain should be overheard by the colonel—the most noble one—in the adjoining room, nor by old Mrs. Dulcimore, Kitty's mother, whose tongue would have shamed the prophet Jeremiah. So it came about that both song and applause were duly measured and even the poet's rhapsodies were but the mutterings of a whisper.

"A positive divinity," said he; "a shining light of song in a morass of silence."

But Capt. Rupert, foolishly enough, and desiring another verse, said, quite inanely:

"Gentlemen, pray silence for Miss Dulcimore!"

"Silence for the Queen of Song!" Whitehead repeated after him.

"Song—song—song" — from many voices.

Little Ensign Willoughby, more timid than the others, now chimed in with his "hush."

"I believe the colonel has come back," he exclaimed in a solemn whisper.

Kitty was much alarmed at this.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, "if the great man were to see me now!"

It was a sympathetic utterance and the men about her understood it but too well. For three months had these fears been very real, if but rarely expressed. Kitty was but 19 years old, it is true, but no woman of thirty could have understood Frederick Viscount Harborne better.

"Oh, if the great man were to see me!"

"If he did," cried Rupert, very gallantly, "the light would blind him. Which is to say that he's been blind for a month, eh, Beddoe?"

The "twins" invariably appealed to each other when any point of controversy arose, and as invariably gave each other rude answers.

"I object to these childish remarks," exclaimed Capt. Beddoe upon this occasion, to which Rupert retorted:

"As a child yourself, you ought to know."

"That is very personal, Rupert."

"Please to set a good example, Beddoe."

And so on and so on, while from his corner Maj. Repton, still nodding his head, although the music had long ceased, clamored incoherently for another verse.

"I would sooner listen to the east wind in a cellar than to you two at an argument," he exclaimed, blandly. "Hold your tongues, and let Miss Kitty sing to us."

"But I only know thirty-nine verses," rejoined Kitty sweetly.

"In which case, my dear girl, we'll sing-'em-all-twice," said the Marquis at a breath.

"How far this alarming programme would have been carried out, or what would have been the natural end of the dispute between the amiable Beddoe and the equally amiable Rupert, this history is not permitted to tell. We may hazard much, but the plain truth is just this, that Mrs. Dulcimore herself, a very Antiope, Queen of the Amazons, as Hepton called her, entered the room at the moment, and away went all their plans like leaves before the blast. The first shot fired at Dettingen had not produced a greater hush. Even the major fell dumb, merely screwing up his eyes to ascertain, if that might be, whether one lady or two had intruded so inauspiciously.

Mrs. Dulcimore, be it said, paid little regard, to that which was going on about her. She had caught the hatchet-faced colonel by the lapel of his coat, and great were her loquacious opportunities. He, tortured as Prometheus on the rock, wished her where good manners forbade him to say. He had been thanking her for the hospitality shown to some of his officers during the regiment's enforced stay at Warwick, and graciously enough he did it, we must admit.

"My dear lady," he would say, "it had to be sometime—we could not stay here forever, and your hospitality would have known no bounds."

"No hospitality of mine, be sure of it," she retorted, aflame with the fury of her speech. "My husband says, 'We must have the officers at his house,' and who was I to contradict my husband? Ah, Lord Harborne, if ye knew what anxieties Mr. Dulcimore gives me—with him apologizing to every houghty-toughty man he meets, his running after the friends of this great person and the other, and bringing them to me house whether I want them or no—eh, I'd be no worse off a widow, and better perhaps."

The great man heaved a profound sigh—his eyes were turned toward the place where Kitty stood; he spoke almost as one in a dream.

"Courage, dear lady," he said, "your desires may yet be gratified."

Antiope did not hear him. The blood of speech fired her tongue and she raced on like a hurricane.

"And my dear daughter Kitty to marry. There's a responsibility for you. Now, would ye think to look at her that she's the blood of Irish kings in her veins? Yet 'tis true, as all the country knows. The great Brian Boru, he was her father many times removed. Ye'd never think it, no, but there it is—and such a responsibility I cannot sleep at night for it. Ah, what a wife she'd make for a rich man, English nobleman, one that the King delights to honor and our dear Church to smile upon. You've never looked at Kitty as I look at her, Lord Harborne. Ah, who'd be thinking that we spent two hundred pounds upon her at a school in London—two hundred pounds as I'm a living woman."

Harborne knew not what to say. Somewhere behind his steely eyes a grin was lurking. He had known many cities and many men—but that an old woman, this she cat of Sherbourn as he would call her playfully, should talk to him of marriage—at his time of life, too—occurred to him to be as fine a thing as ever William Wycherly had conceived or Mistress Peg had done for the delight of the groundlings.

"My dear lady," he stammered, "would you spoil such a native flower of innocence in a hot-house?"

"Ah, but my dear lord, what is woman born to if not to love and marriage? And ye see 'tis our hope——"

"I beg your pardon," exclaimed the Colonel, a happy expression suddenly crossing his sour face, "but do not I hear your husband's voice?"

He had raised his voice purposelessly and silence fell again upon the room. Certainly there was some one in the hall and he had something to say—in a meek voice, but an earnest one. The company pricked its ears, its excitement undisguised, its expectation considerable. As for old Mrs. Dulcimore, she could hardly contain herself.

"'Tis Mr. Dulcimore, surely," cried she, "and bringing news from Chester or he's an ijiot."

But Kitty said:

"News from Chester! Oh, how glorious!"

And at this the company looked glum enough, and my Lord Harborne in particular wore so black a brow that even the lamps must blink at it. Kitty did not care two-pence for that. Why should she? Had it not been rumored that the steeplechase at Chester might be won by Sir Richard Escombe's horse, Wild Rose? If Dick had entered the brute she knew he could not lose. That was where the shoe pinched. A pretty thing, said the soldiers, if a dishonored traitor might race a horse and rob honest men of their money. They were still thinking about it when old Anthony Dulcimore entered the room and at once confessed the truth.

"Lord Harborne, gentlemen," he began, "I must offer you my apologies; pray, pray do not disturb yourselves—Marquis, Captain, be at your ease."

"We are, I assure you," replied the Marquis, who could not have stood upon his legs for a hundred; "quite at our ease, Mr. Dulcimore."

"Did you ever hear such a man?" Mrs. Dulcimore chirped in, "and all the company waiting to hear who won the race at Chester yesterday."

"My dear—I apologize—riding in this very moment—having been unable to get the news at Warwick, what should happen to me but that I meet an Irishman upon the road and says he, 'Glory be to God, Wild Rose won it, and the man who rode her was Sir Richard Escombe, no other, though I be put to the torture for saying it.'"

Here was a hot shot to fire in among such a party. Had you told the soldiers that Dick was up the chimney waiting for them to pull him down you could not have astonished them more. Escombe in England—with a price upon his head! Escombe riding before the company at Chester, just as though nothing had happened these three months past. Impossible and preposterous! They would not hear it! Kitty alone found eloquence to greet an occasion so amazing. Never was a more joyous voice heard at Sherbourn.

"Captain Dick," she cried, leaping down from her throne, "I knew it—Lord Harborne—my wager—this instant, sir—this instant!"

His lordship bowed low.

"I will lay my offering at your feet," cried he.

"But I don't wear gloves on my feet at all—and ye see, 'twas Dick's horse that I told ye would be winning—Captain Dick, Captain Dick——"

"Kitty, Kitty!" cried Mrs. Dulcimore, "to be speaking like this of a man who is no better than a highwayman! Has the girl lost her senses?"

Harborne shrugged his shoulders—a French touch and prettily ironical.

"The enthusiasms of youth are delightful," said he, sotto voce. "I love to see them rise and wither. Be advised by me, madam. Name this man for a scoundrel and she will make of him a hero—but name him for a hero—a bon entender, and the scoundrel will soon be at hand."

"Ye speak truth, my lord," said the old lady, "and yet 'tis difficult to tell Kitty as much. If Sir Richard Escombe indeed is come to England, then God help us all."

"If he has come to England," rejoined Harborne, dryly, "and will also oblige me by riding into Warwick, then I will undertake to place him in forty-eight hours where even Mrs. Dulcimore will be sorry for him."

The news had greatly excited him—so much we must admit. A shrewd head perceived the possibilities very clearly. He would have given half his fortune to have laid this man Escombe by the heels. Had not the fellow publicly thrashed him on the Mall? His nerves twitched at the memory. His sagacity reminded him that theer was no folly so outrageous that Richard Escombe might not be guilty of.

"I must ride over to my quarters," he said a few minutes later; "I must hear the news for myself. Maj. Repton will preside in my absence—for I should wish your husband to be with me, Mrs. Dulcimore. This may suit us both very well. My dear lady—it might be a night of good fortune surpassing our hopes."

And so indeed it proved to be—but that you shall hear in the chapter to come.

Portraits and Problems.

ut of the flood of novels, it seems though every year fewer and fewer ise themselves above the level of mediocrity. The dead level can be ided in several ways—by writing a story which attains epheral popularity, by writing one which appears to ssive years of readers, to name methods whose results are vastly to analyze than their means. E. F. Benson some years ago produced "Dodo," a fine example of the now he has written "Sheaves," an example of the other.

"Sheaves" is a novel to be thankful for, but why one should be thankful is somewhat hard to say. It is a novel with a problem, but as the author neatly begs the question by allowing his heroine to die before the comes for her to find the answer the problem, it can hardly be called factory in this respect. As a matter fact, this is a novel which comes to being a succession of wonderfully drawn portraits rather than a novel. Yet this statement is unjust for there is displayed an insight character and a fine sympathy life which goes far beyond the of a verbal portrait gallery of contemporary English life.

Yet it is the portraits which linger in the memory. The chief actors carefully and smoothly drawn, somewhat as though Mr. Benson were composing a large picture, which the main persons were done or charcoal. But it is the persons of the story—the marginal sketches—which stand out. the elaboration and care of figures, these little portraits, though done in dry point, have a and verve which are astonishing. There is Canon Alington, a of the Church of England, and worse than narrow, because he believes himself to be broad and liberal. book to explain the erratic conduct of Countess Montignoso. Frau Kremer is intensely interested in clothes and furniture, and has a sadly conventional feeling for the beauties of nature, but she has also a good eye for human character and its eccentricities. We learn that besides her fine linen, the Countess has many dresses, and wears at least five every day before dinner. According to Frau Kremer, the Countess also bathes so often that her complexion suffers, although she has most wonderful toes and can wiggle every one of them. Frau Kremer does not approve of the habits of the Countess. Her bedroom is everybody's thoroughfare, and she cracks risque jokes with her servants, over whom no supervision is exercised. On her mental side, the Countess is also peculiar. Frau Kremer noticed a prayer book on the table de nuit, but on investigation discovered that the black binding, with its conspicuous gold cross, covered a copy of Goethe's "Faust." The Countess is extraordinarily insensible to physical pain, amazingly naive, incapable of resistance to any sudden emotion, has a vast perception of feminine nature, but none of male nature, has imperturbable good humor, and is, Frau Kremer fears, psychically defective.

As for the 4-year-old Duchess with the name like a new real estate subdivision, she knows that she is the gage of battle, and makes good use of her knowledge. She is neurotic, selfish and egoistic, has no conception of colors, and wants to kick every dog she sees—in spite of which Frau Kremer finds her lovable and teachable.

Light as a Feather.

MY LADY CAPRICE. By Jeffrey Farnol. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. (C. C. Parker. Price $1.50.)

This is a story for the idle hour, very prettily bound, boxed and embellished. Charlotte Weber Ditzler has made some charming illustrations for it in color, and Theodore B. Hapgood has given it page decorations. The hero and heroine of the story, if these loosely strung episodes can be called a story, are of that talking and spooning variety invented more than a quarter of a century ago by the Duchess. At that remote period they used to bicker, quarrel, and make love in the present tense only. They have now been promoted to the past tense, but with no gain in common sense.

"My Lady Caprice," in all her various flimsy disguises that never yet hid her identity, has been worn threadbare many times over by English authors anxious to make an honest penny in the easiest way possible to a "literary person." For all that, she will doubtless smile seductively at you from the cover of many other books on the first day of next December. She is not to be frozen out by supercilious book reviews, for the Christmas buyer adores her.

Rhymes but not Poetry.

IN OLD SCHOOL DAYS. By Will Carleton. Moffat, Yard & Co., New York. (Price $1.60.)

The make-up of this holiday book is artistic and attractive. There is an extremely pretty girl, the creation of J. Montgomery Flagg, on the cover, and Mr. Montgomery also supplies all the full-page pictures inside the covers. Every page has a charming floral decoration in pale green ink.

All this effort toward beauty was made to bolster up and render marketable a string of decidedly tame verses from the pen of Will Carleton, author of the famed "Over the Hills to the Poor House." Mr. Carleton himself apparently made no effort whatever, or else he is a much worse poet than the present reviewer gave him credit for being. He maunders on and on, through many platitudes and banalities, never for a moment striking a true or sincere note.

There are a hundred well-worn rhymes in Mr. Carleton's "In Old School Days," but hardly a line of genuine poetry.

Ancestors and Cookery.

COLONIAL RECIPES. By Maude A. Bomberger. The Neale Publishing Company, New York. (Price $1.25.)

One would hardly expect to find pride of ancestry and treasures of the kitchen combined in one volume, but such is the case in the present book. Miss Bomberger has prepared this book in the spirit of a genealogistic epicure, glimpses of stately manor houses and legends of famous beauties being mixed with the aroma of juleps and jellies. The recipes are given in odd manner, catalogued after the names of the great houses where they have been handed down since the time of the Carrolls of Carrolton, the Pacas, Dallams, Winstons, Byrds, Marshalls and all the great families of Maryland and Virginia. Betty Martin, in whose fame there is still repeated in the South a couplet about her inability to choose her husband, is represented here by a recipe handed down to the fifth Betty in direct female descent. Martha Washington is the author of one, the first item of which is twenty eggs, and the last a half pint of wine and some French brandy. This recipe is for "rich black cake," and "five and a half hours will bake it," is the assurance from pre-Revolutionary times, when people had leisure.

Lightly Delightful.

GOTTY AND THE GUV'NER. By Arthur E. Copping. Mitchell Kennerley, New York. (Price $1.50.)

This is a book for lazy afternoons, to be read in the shade with the companionship of a pipe, and if it can be compassed, a devoted dog who does not object to having his ears pulled reflectively. It is a calm and sympathetic story of mild adventure along the coast of England in a shrimping boat. Gotty is a skipper with "a four-cornered beard on a two-cornered chin," and the Guv'nor is an unsophisticated landsman, whom Gotty blandishes into buying a shrimping bawley, as the craft is called in English waters.

Gotty is natural and delightful, good-natured, calm and reflective on matters of life and weather, and has a succession of mates of whom in varying season he "has enough of." The varying mates, the adventures of fishing in summer weather, the unsophistication of the owner, the smell of salt water and winds, make up this satisfying, sweet-savored chronicle of small but joyous happenings of a summer's outing.

ANNIVERSARY NUMBER.

Wonderful Compilation of Figures and Facts in 1908 World Almanac, the Twenty-fifth Issue.

The World Almanac and Encyclopedia for 1908, the twenty-fifth anniversary number of that well-known reference book, has just been issued. This year it is much larger, more complete and comprehensive than ever before, comprising 1000 pages and giving about 15,000 facts and figures which may be depended upon as being absolutely accurate and right up to the last minute of 1907. It is a veritable library of universal knowledge between two covers.

The World Almanac is in use in the public schools of Greater New York and has been adopted by nearly all the normal schools and hundreds of public high and grammar schools throughout the country. It is certainly a book that should be in every library and in every home.

The Fleshly School.

A. W. Pinero has submitted his ideas of "The Fleshly School of Fiction" to the London Bookman, in which he says: "I don't read much fiction nowadays, but I have made it my business to glance at some novels belonging to the fleshly school. One of these, written by a lady and put forward boldly as the work of the greatest living English novelist, would in respect of its composition reflect small credit upon a kitchen maid. As to certain details of the story, few kitchen maids, I trust, could be so depraved as to conceive them. Such productions are in my opinion most pernicious. They owe their vogue, which is unquestionable, to publishers without conscience and reviewers without honesty or without brains."

Read Detective Stories.

"Do you suppose it is generally known," recently said one of the leading booksellers of the country, "that the greatest readers of detective stories are lawyers and doctors? Why the two are associated I cannot say, nor, for that matter, why it should be true of either one, but that is the fact. Perhaps it is not so remarkable in the case of the lawyer, whose clientage must often involve detective problems, but the doctor must have reasons of his own. The probability is that neither one is looking for stimulus, but for relaxation of the rare sort that wakes you up instead of putting you to sleep. A good detective story starts the mind darting after something—some mysterious trouble—like a magnetic ball. The best of it is that it's somebody else's trouble and not yours—nor your client's, either, nor your patient's—in fact, it isn't anybody's trouble. It is just a neat invention of the mind."

NEWS AND NOTES OF FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. will publish this month "My Lady of Cleve," a novel by Percy J. Hartley. There will be a frontispiece in full-color by Harrison Fisher with several other illustrations in two colors.

Mrs. Philip de Crespigny, the author of "The Spanish Prisoner," is planning a new book, the scene of which is laid in Italy at the time of the Borgias. Mrs. De Crespigny divides her time between writing and painting and has exhibited water colors in many of the London galleries.

"The Appearances of Our Lord After the Passion," by Prof. H. B. Swete, to be published soon, is "a simple narrative of the appearances of the risen Lord based on a study of the documents," which will be interesting to psychic students, as well as to scholars interested in the New Testament.

"The Mother of the Man," by Eden Phillpotts, author of "The Children of the Mist," etc., and "Lord of the World," by Robert Hugh Benson, author of "The Light Invisible," etc., are two novels on the spring list of Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co.

While in "Joseph Vance" Mr. De Morgan treated of London in the 50's, in "Somehow Good" to appear in February, he is decidedly up-to-date, setting the wheels of his main plot in motion by "an electrocution"—which is not quite what the reader will expect from this designation, but a strange happening in the Twopenny Tube.

Among the spring novels is "The Loadstone," by Will Lillibridge, author of "Ben Blair." Dr. Lillibridge is a Dakota man, born and bred in that country. He has been farmer, rancher and cattleman. Even now, busy as he is with his profession and literary work, he has a mania for being out of doors.

A new book by Josephine Daskam Bacon is to be a feature of the month. It has been entitled "Ten to Seventeen," further explained by the phrase, "A Boarding School Diary." The narrative is devised to read like a growing girl's intensely artless confidings about herself, the other girls in the school, and various grown-ups who belong within its borderland.

A new work in process of preparation for boys is called "The Boys' Book of Steamships," and is writetn by J. R. Howden, author of "The Boys' Book of Locomotives." It discusses simply the great problems with which the naval architect and engine builder are always grappling and gives a summary of the history of navigation, and an account of the great shipping companies on the four oceans.

Moffatt, Yard & Co. will publish at once "Through Italy With the Poets." It has been compiled by Robert Haven Schauffler, and includes the best poetry about Italy, from Homer and Pindar to Arthur Symons and William Vaughan Moody. A considerable part of it is newly translated for the purpose of this book.

Two of George Eliot's books—"Silas Marner" and "Romola"—have just been heissued with illustrations of the scenes of the novel. The illustrations for the latter are arranged by Dr. Guido Biagi of the Laurentian Library in Florence, and many of them are specially prepared for this edition. Dr. Biagi, who provides an introduction and notes to "Romola," is an enthusiastic admirer of the book, but he admits that Romola herself is not an Italian, but an English Puritan.

Messrs. Henry Holt & Co. are issuing at once in their American Nature Series, a popular, one-volume work, "Fishes" by President David Starr Jordan of Leland Stanford University, which contains virtually all the non-technical material from the author's larger work in two volumes, "A Guide to the Study of Fishes." Despite the relative absence of technical material, it is expected this work will be of value to students of ichthyology, as well as to general readers. There are nearly 700 illustrations, eighteen of them colored.

Whether as novelist or interpreter of social conditions, H. G. Wells is unfailingly interesting. The title of his new book, "New Worlds for Old," which is to appear in a few weeks, suggests that he is here discussing the evolution which is going on in society, and the changes which he expects to take place in the near future. The book is actually a statement of the aims and beliefs of the Socialists, and in the author's own words seeks to "define the principles upon which a Socialist believes the reconstruction of society should go."

A volume of Russian memoirs by Prince Serge Dmitriyevich Urussov, one-time Governor of Bessarabia, now retired, will be one of the more important publications of the month. It is said to contain information totally unprecedented concerning the Slavic régime of government, especially the organized methods of bloodshed against the Jews. While the material is sensational, the attitude of Urussov is not revolutionary, but conservative, so far as is consistent with Russian patriotism. The book will be introduced by the Harpers within the next fortnight.

PEOPLE AND THINGS OF LITERARY NOTE.

Novels have not often inspired music, but Robert W. Chambers's society novel, "The Younger Set," has led one composer, Paul Kaiser, to write a waltz and name it after the book, "The Younger Set Waltz."

"The Lady of the Decoration," rated by The Bookman from carefully-gathered figures as the best-selling book in 1907, exhausted seventeen editions in the twelve months just passed, and has been sent to press for the twenty-fifth printing.

May Robson, having made a success in the stage version of Anne Warner's "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," the author is said to be making arrangements for putting her original character, "Susan Clegg," behind the footlights.

With February comes the first centenary of Chambers's Journal. It is the oldest periodical except one now published in England, and its founding, February 4, 1832, takes us back to Sir Walter Scott, who died at Abbotsford in the autumn of that year. In all the years it has never changed its cover, but appears still in the old familiar dress.

The record of new books published in England in the year 1907 is appalling or encouraging, according to the point of view taken. They numbered 9914, or 1311 more than in 1906. New editions and reprints account for 2213. There was a slight decrease in fiction, the new novels numbering 1862. Religion and philosophy increased 213, the law 145, history and biography 232, and poetry 69. There was also a large increase in books on the arts and sciences.

A series of articles on "The Immortality of the Soul" is running in the Hibbert Journal (issued in this country by Sherman, French & Co., Boston.) Prof. Royce contributed to a recent issue, and is now followed, in the January issue, by the noted scientist, Sir Oliver Lodge, who will conclude his contribution in the next issue, and will then be succeeded in the same series by Prof. Eucken of Jena.

To promote the study of Shakespeare's works in Hungary the Kisfaludy Society has appointed a committee of distinguished literary men who will revise and arrange the republication of existing Hungarian translations of the dramas and publish an annual somewhat similar to the Shakespeare Jahrbuch. The committee are arranging a series of five lectures on Shakespearean subjects and a bibliography of Hungarian Shakespeareana is being compiled.

Diabolo, like all other crazes, is founding its own literature. The first book devoted to the new game gives a complete description of the method of playing it and of the many ingenious tricks that can be carried out with the sport. The special chapter on the various tricks which are practised in France and on the Continent generally gives full directions for the playing of diabolo on the tennis court. In speaking of the history of the game the author says it probably originated in China some thousands of years ago.

At the request of the late Dr. Watson's family, Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll is preparing a memoir of the famous author of "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush." Dr. Nicoll is very desirous of obtaining the use of any letters that may be in the possession of American friends of Dr. Watson, and asks that such letters be sent to Dr. Watson's publishers, Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. Letters thus loaned will not be sent to England, but will be immediately copied and carefully returned to owners who shall kindly loan them.

"Apparently it is hazardous for any writer—even Mark Twain—who is humorous, not to be. Not long ago the Harpers published a little story by Mark Twain called "A Horse's Tale," which involved very delicate humor in the telling, but involved also as a climax a sudden and startling rush of pathos centering upon a child. For this the London Spectator finds it impossible to forgive him. "He [Mark Twain] has no right," accuses the critic, "to make an abrupt transition to the great emotions of life." Whether the writer limits his edict to this story, or whether he intends to cut Mark Twain off forever from the great emotions of life, is indefinite.

Readers of Putnam Weale's earlier books will see a peculiar significance in the title of his forthcoming work, "The Coming Struggle in the East." It will be recalled that his last book was entitled "The Truce in the East and Its Aftermath." The titles themselves indicate that Mr. Weale believes the Russo-Japanese peace to have been a patched-up, temporary affair which settled none of the problems antecedent to the war itself. He believes also that in the struggle which he predicts America has a vital interest, and his new book, it is said, will deal extensively with America's position in the matter. Doubtless readers in this country will find much that is worth noting in the opinions of the man who is generally held to be the best-informed English writer on Far Eastern subjects.

The great Russian basso, Chialiapine, who is the sensation of the Manhattan Opera this season, tells of his early friendship for Maxim Gorky, whose novel "Mother" was written in this country. Somewhat as the illustrator, C. D. Gibson, and the novelist, Robert W. Chambers, took their first drawings together to an editor and came away, Chambers with an acceptance, Gibson with a rejection, so the Russian novelist, Gorky, and the basso, Chialiapine, went to the same theater long ago, for a position in the chorus. Chialiapine was sent home. Gorky got the position. Chialiapine was a cobbler's apprentice across the street from the bakery where Gorky worked. The fact that two such artists should rise from such lowliness proves the truth of Gorky's claim that no man is ever too low to rise to the heights if his chance comes, and his inspiration.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

The trustees of Princeton University announce a decided improvement in the financial condition of the institution. The total receipts for the years 1906-1907 were $592,037.75; total disbursements, $563,910.64. With last year's balance of $8710.26 and gifts of cash, real estate, bonds, etc., for the endowment account, amounting to $795,735.82, the net balance to the university for the year is $862,573.19.

The trustees of Wesley College have accepted the endowment of $10,000 for the Hazlett lectureship. The purpose of this fund is to bring each year some noted lecturer for the benefit of the students of the institution and others who wish to attend. J. M. Sturtevant of Grand Forks, N. D., presented to the college the deed to a half section of land in Cavalier county, with the request that the income or receipts from sale be used to support the artists' recital of the conservatory of music. In this way some of the best musicians in the country will be brought to Grand Forks. The equity in the land is $4000, of which $500 is applied on a previous subscription by Mr. Sturtevant.

The Minneapolis Board of Education has secured a favorable decision from the court regarding its right to adopt and enforce anti-fraternity rules. Injunction proceedings were brought by the parents of a pupil who was refused graduation because he had ignored the anti-fraternity rules adopted by the board. After a hearing the right of the board to adopt such rules was upheld.

Chinese students educated in America have taken precedence over those educated in Europe and in Japan, according to advices received at the State Department from American Consul-General Bergholz, at Canton, China. At a recent government examination at Peking to test the ability of the students who had been sent abroad for education, forty-two students were examined, twenty-four of whom had pursued their studies in Japan, fourteen in the United States and four in Belgium. Three from Japan failed, and one from America, but of the thirty-eight passed, only seven secured the doctor's degree, and five of these were educated in America. Of the sixteen highest in rank, America had ten, the West taking the honors both in the number of students and in rank obtained in the examination. Nine of the thirteen successful Americans were educated on the Pacific Coast.

The educational authorities of Berlin have finally made the study of English compulsory in the public schools, though other great German towns have had such a course for years. The Kaiser favored such a change in the course of study eight years ago.

The board of education of the United Kingdom, sitting at London, has decided to pay more attention to physical needs of the public school pupils this year than ever before. In all schools medical inspection is to be established, and an effort is to be made to supply pure milk. This movement has been hastened by the discovery of deterioration in the British youth offered for army service.

A course in photography has been established in the Ethical Culture School at New York, and is found to interest many of the pupils who have little talent with pencil or brush or tool. It is believed that in the mastering of the technique a quality of accuracy is developed as valuable as that attained in tool work. But beyond this comes the effort to develop the student's appreciation of the great world of art. The child finds this course helpful because "it is involved in the actual doing of things the results of which are useful and a delight to others.

The Third Greatest Library.

It will, doubtless, be interesting news to many patriotic citizens, says Harper's Weekly, that the contents of the Library of Congress at Washington for the year just ended, classes it as the third largest library in the world. It contains 1,433,848 books and pamphlets and some 9000 other articles. Its net gain in miscellaneous books and pamphlets during the year was 54,604. The total expenditures for the maintenance of the library for the year amounted to $576,000. Eighty-five thousand dollars of this amount was offset by receipts for copyrights, fees, etc. In addition to the above expenditure, $205,000 was expended for printing and binding.

BITS OF VERSE.

Easy to Drift.

Easy to drift to the open sea,
The tides are eager and swift and strong,
And whistling and free are the rushing winds—
But, oh, to get back is hard and long.

Easy as told in Arabian tale,
To free from his jar the evil sprite,
Till he rises like smoke to stupendous size—
But, oh, nevermore, can we prison him tight.

Easy as told in an English tale,
To fashion a Frankenstein body and soul,
And breathe in his bosom a breath of life—
But, oh, we create what we cannot control.

Easy to drift to the sea of doubt,
Easy to hurt what we cannot heal,
Easy to rouse what we cannot soothe,
Easy to speak what we do not feel,
Easy to show what we ought to conceal,
Easy to think that fancy is fate,
And, oh, the wisdom that comes too late!

Beyond Today.

If we could see beyond today,
As God can see;
If all the clouds should roll away,
The shadows flee,
O'er present griefs we would not fret,
Each sorrow we would soon forget,
For many joys are waiting yet
For you and me.

If we could know beyond today,
As God doth know,
Why dearest treasures pass away
And tears must flow,
And why the darkness leads to light,
Why dreary paths will soon grow bright!
Some day life's wrongs will be made right;
Faith tells us so.

If we could see, if we could know;
We often say;
But God in love a veil doth throw
Across our way;
We cannot see what lies before,
And so we cling to Him the more;
He leads us till this life is o'er;
Trust and obey.

PROGRESS.

ACTIVE WORKERS AMONG WOMEN.

IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENTS IN THE MINING REGIONS.

A Chauffeur's Position in Berlin Is not the Most Pleasant Occupation for a Woman, Because of Jealousy and the Attacks of Street Urchins Who Invade the Car.

Dr. Harriet Mitchell is reported to have brought about many important improvements in Irondale, Mich., near the Calumet mines. The town, which has a population of some 2700, was crowded into four or five streets on the edge of a swamp and entirely without drainage when Dr. Mitchell went there to practice. The natural result of this situation was a great deal of sickness and a high death rate.

Dr. Mitchell's first step was to interview the landlords, and after much arguing she succeeded in convincing them that it would be cheaper and less troublesome to put in a system of surface drainage than to be sued for maintaining a nuisance. Next she induced the town officials to establish a recreation center in which there will be a field house, a gymnasium, baths, swimming pool, reading rooms and a lecture hall.

With the best intentions she engaged the only available public hall in the town and opened a sewing school for the purpose of teaching the Italian women how to make their children's and husbands' clothes. The women responded to her invitation to attend this sewing school gladly, but when their husbands found that it was to be conducted over a drinking saloon they forbade their wives going. This has forced Dr. Mitchell to postpone her sewing school until the recreation center is completed.

The first election to be held under this law in New Orleans was to decide on a special tax levy for an improved drainage and pure water system. Miss Kate M. Gordon, president of the Women's Sewerage and Drainage League, collected the proxies of about 300 timid women and voted them herself. The improvements were carried, and the Business Men's League of New Orleans presented a gold medal to Miss Gordon in recognition of her good work for the city.

Frau Von Papp, the only woman in Germany with a license to run a public autocar, is not having an easy time in carrying on her new vocation. Her masculine rivals recently made a protest against her carrying passengers, declaring that she was incompetent to drive her car alone. As proof of this accusation they pointed out that she was always accompanied by a man who sat on the driver's seat at her side.

The authorities replied that the male attendant was allowed her as a protection against the assaults of young Berlin, not because of her lack of skill. It seems that whenever Frau Von Papp's car stopped on the street the urchins of Berlin were in the habit of crowding around it, opening the carriage door, climbing in and tumbling over the cushions. The town authorities decided that she needed an assistant to protect her from the rabble until young Berlin became accustomed to seeing a woman run a public car through the streets of the city.

The parliamentary vote has been granted to Russian women provided they cast their ballots by proxy. The only State of the American Union that gives women the proxy vote is Louisiana. The constitutional convention of that State in 1898 granted taxpaying women a vote on questions of local taxation, and gave them the choice of casting it themselves or by proxy. It has been found that, as a rule, the women prefer to cast their vote themselves.

In the last few months several French vineyards have been turned into rose gardens. The perfume factories pay $600 a kilogramme for pure essence of roses, and the demand exceeds the supply.

One French vineyard owner is now in this country, and it is said that he intends to grow gardenias and has recently purchased the receipt for making the extract from these flowers from Miss Ida Norrel, the southern woman who, after many experiments a year or two ago, discovered the process. In the south the gardenia or Cape jessamine, as it is called by the native southerner, grows so readily and blossoms in such profusion as to be a nuisance. In many localities it is part of the daily programme of a household for the smaller children on leaving the breakfast table to take a pair of scissors and a basket and, going out into the yard, to clip off all blossoms of the Cape jessamine that opened the night before.

Having left only the buds and half blown flowers the little people carry their basket off to a sufficient distance from the house and empty it. The perfume from an ordinary size bush in full bloom is just a little too much of a good thing, while from a hedge it is well nigh unbearable.

The public school teachers of Buffalo are to receive equal pay for equal work without regard to sex—in other words the salaries of the women teachers will be raised to the standard of those of the men.

The last office to be created for women in New Zealand is that of dairy inspector. There are now 540,000 dairy cows in New Zealand, producing more than 52,000,000 pounds of butter a year, besides 500 private dairies and eighty-nine cheese factories. The department of agriculture appointed women inspectors to visit the dairies and factories and give instruction and advice to the wives and daughters of the dairymen.

The latest recruit to the 707 women now studying in the University of Berlin is Miss Li Tsu Zung, the youthful daughter of a physician of Shanghai. She has the distinction of being the first Oriental woman to enter the university and her admittance was secured by special recommendation from the Chinese Ambassador.

She is described as 17, with pleasant manners and deep black hair, and thoroughly Chinese in type. She dresses as a European and speaks German fairly well. She proposes to devote her attention largely to English and German literature.

Act Now.

Act now—don't wait for chance or fate
To bring the prize;
Seize now the rope that's held by Hope,
And realize.

Climb high—don't stop; there's room on top
Where eagles fly;
Above the mass and doubting class
Great honors lie.

Don't cringe—don't flinch, should fortune pinch,
And all seem lost;
With might and main, try,try again,
At any cost.

Fight on; don't yield life's battlefield
To friend or foe;
Press to the front, receive the brunt,
And strike the blow.

Be brave and true, in all you do;
Hold honor high.
Be sure you're right, then force the fight,
And win or die.

The Ever Ready Drummer.

A State Senator of New York says he was riding in the smoking-car on a little one-track road in the northern part of the State two weeks ago, and in the seat in front of him sat a jewelry drummer. He was one of those wide-awake, never-let-any-one-get-the-better-of-him style of men. Presently the train stopped to take on water, and the conductor neglected to send back a flag-man. A limited express, running at the rate of ten miles an hour, came along and bumped the rear end of the first train. The drummer was lifted from his seat and pitched, head first, against the seat ahead. His silk hat was jammed clear down over his ears. He picked himself up and settled back in his seat. No bones had been broken. Then he pulled off his hat, drew a long breath, and, straightening up, said: "Hully gee! Well, they didn't get by us anyway!"

PLANS and POLICY

California's Great Furniture House

It is not generally known that the structure occupied by Brent's is practically two separate buildings—the front one, with 55,000 square feet of floor space now devoted to sales purposes, the rear one with 60,000 square feet, used as a warehouse.

Our purpose is to tear out partitions, and throw this huge building into one great salesroom, making 115,000 square feet to accommodate our retail business.

The rear structure has been packed from floors to ceilings with crated furniture. Naturally it is necessary to SELL OUT THIS STOCK before the building can be remodeled.

Many changes are already apparent to the visitor at Brent's. Our great main floor, once occupied by small wares, is now largely devoted to individual pieces. Stoves and house furnishing goods will be removed to basement. The entire store will be reconstructed.

There never was a sale so genuine, or prices so low, or goods so desirable.

NERVE CULTURE AND TREATMENT OF all diseases, without drugs. By Prof. Geo. T. Weaver, with "University and Home of Applied Sciences," at East Hollywood.
NERVE CULTURE consists of instruction and drill, in classes or privately, for the feeding, stimulating and vitalizing of the nerve centers, on strictly scientific basis. Some of the results of this culture are the conservation of the life fluid, the acquisition of selfmastery, of both the internal and external life forces, securing perfect health, extending life and preventing senility. It also stimulates the intellectual faculties and sensitizing the psychic forces.
ETHERIC-VIBRATION treatment is a positive etheric force, expelling all diseases by harmonizing the cellular structure.
For further information, address PROF. WEAVER, at 2664 Holly ave., Los Angeles (East Hollywood.) 'Phone Home 29025. 19

THE ACKNOWLEDGED ADEPT AND RECOGNIZED AUTHORITY OF HINDOO PHILOSOPHY AND OCCULT MYSTERIES, MAKES A REMARKABLE STATEMENT, "YOUR GREATEST WISH CAN BE REALIZED—YOU WOULD NOT DESIRE A THING IF YOU WERE NOT CAPABLE OF ATTAINING IT."

I KNOW HOW TO CONTROL AND USE THAT POWER FOR YOUR SUCCESS AND MINE. IF YOU WISH TO SUCCEED IN ANY BUSINESS UNDERTAKING CONSULT ME. I can put you on the right road. If you desire to win in love or be reunited with one from whom some trouble or estrangement separates you. I CAN AND WILL HELP YOU TO GAIN THE DESIRE OF YOUR HEART. Are you tired of being poor and living a "from hand-to-mouth" existence? If so, COME TO ME AND I WILL SHOW YOU A BETTER WAY. Life is not half so much of a mystery as some people would have you believe. If you had studied more into nature's laws and learned the lessons there revealed you would know better WHY SOME PEOPLE SUCCEED AND OTHERS FAIL. There is a good reason, just the same as THERE IS A REASON why water will run down hill more easily than it will run up hill. I CAN EXPLAIN THAT REASON to you. I AM SUCCESSFUL MYSELF. I do not make this claim in the spirit of a braggart or egotist, but to enable you to appreciate what I can do for you. Low fee 50 cents.

THERE ARE SO-CALLED SEERS WHO MAKE GREAT CLAIMS OF WHAT THEY CAN DO FOR YOU WHEN UPON INVESTIGATION THEIR SURROUNDINGS AND EVERY ACTION WOULD CONVINCE ANY SENSIBLE PERSON THAT THEY ARE INCAPABLE OF HELPING THEMSELVES. THERE ARE ALSO COUNTERFEIT DOLLARS, IMITATIONS OF THE GENUINE. THERE ARE GOOD DOCTORS AND BAD ONES AND A FEW HONEST LAWYERS. JUST SO WITH PSYCHICS; THERE ARE A FEW GENUINE AND A GREAT MANY IMITATIONS. "JUDGE ME BY MY WORK." MY EXTENSIVE PATRONAGE AND GREAT SUCCESS ARE THE ENVY OF ALL COMPETITORS. I AM NEVER IDLE. MY MOTTO IS, "WORK AND WIN." I HELP MY PATRONS TO SUCCEED, ATTAINING THEIR VARIOUS AMBITIONS. THAT IS WHY I HAVE SO MANY OF THEM AND WHY EACH ONE RECOMMENDS ME TO THEIR FRIENDS. LOW FEE 50 CENTS.

The All-Wise Creator did not endow you with high ideas, noble inspirations, desire for happiness and return for that great love craving within your heart without at the same time placing within your reach the means of attaining these desires. If you are in trouble of any kind or not satisfied with your condition in life, come to me and I will make this clear to you. I have helped others. I CAN HELP YOU. Positively NO CHARGE if I fail to TELL YOUR NAME IN FULL, your occupation, what you called for, anything you wish to know. NO FEE IN ADVANCE AND YOU PAY NOTHING UNLESS PERFECTLY SATISFIED. PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE, 205½ S. SPRING ST., near Third.
THE CELEBRATED RELIABLE PALMIST AND ASTROLOGER.

A resident of Los Angeles for 24 years, and whose work is known throughout this entire land, having made a life study of PALMISTRY AND ASTROLOGY, has convinced hundreds of the best intellects and persons in all walks of life that his remarkable readings and PREDICTIONS FOR FUTURE EVENTS in their lives are unparalleled.

THE PALM shows diseases, love, marriage, divorce, deaths, money, investments, changes, talents, travels, etc., etc., and many other things which cannot be mentioned here.

WITH EACH PALM READING THERE IS ALSO AN ASTROLOGICAL READING.

PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of the profession, having read more celebrated people than any other reader. His readings, too, must in no wise be classed with those of any other reader now operating in this part of the country, and his skilled work has no comparison with theirs whatsoever.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK says: "I was greatly surprised to find how many of your warnings were well founded, and having been prepared for the same, I was not taken unawares. YOUR WARNING regarding an oncoming illness also PROVED A FACT, as not more than ten days later I was at home with a severe attack of la grippe. YOUR READING WAS MOST MARVELOUS."

PAPINTA, actress, writes and says: "Everything has turned out just as you predicted when reading my hand and horoscope. YOU ARE WONDERFUL, and I cannot express myself of what I think about your WONDERFUL TRUE READINGS."

DR. ALEX. J. M'IVOR-TYNDALL says: "Your work along the lines of Astrology and Palmistry is highly spoken of on all sides."

FREDERICK WARDE says: "Your reading was most satisfactory. Your knowledge and skill in palmistry is REMARKABLE and gave me a much more exalted idea of that science than I have hitherto entertained."

LOUIS JAMES, actor, says: "I wish to say that your reading was ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY." PAUL GILMORE, actor, says: "I want to express to you my keen appreciation of your reading. It is by far the most scientific I have ever had." JULIET CROSBY, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Prof. Althouse also read Admiral Schley, Senator Clark, ex-Gov. Pardee, David Starr Jordan, Gen. Chaffee, Baron Rothschild, Joaquin Miller, Ysaye, Sousa, Edison, Capt. Hobson, Creatore, Caruso, Josef Hofman, Huntington, Susan B. Anthony, Nance O'Neil, Lillian Nordica, Calve, Julia Marlowe, Modjeska, Sembrich, Gadski, Jefferson, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Mlle. de Lussan, Fritzi Scheff, Florence Roberts, Charles B. Hanford, Isabel Irving and hundreds of others. These names of NOTED people are merely given because they are PUBLIC persons. It indicates the class of people being read by PROF. ALTHOUSE, together with hundreds of the very best people of Los Angeles—WITH WHOM ALL HIS BUSINESS IS STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL IN EVERY PARTICULAR.

Intelligent, HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED—those capable of appreciating the superior qualities of a fine reader.

ASTROLOGY AND THE HOROSCOPE.

PROF. ALTHOUSE is also an experienced practitioner in the science of MODERN ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The HOROSCOPE IS DECIDEDLY A GUIDE IN LIFE, showing remarkable things when properly cast for YOU INDIVIDUALLY, from the position of the planets at YOUR BIRTH. It indicates the condition of health, or disease; tells all about love—whom to marry and when—describing the marriage partner; shows deaths, divorce; tells about children, speculation, the best time to invest or to push affairs, and when to hold on to what has been gained; your talents; your environment; when and where to travel; what to seek and what to avoid; when one will be in danger, of illness, accidents, death, losses, troubles; also of your good periods coming—giving dates of these events for the future; IN FACT, TELLS EVERYTHING ABOUT ONE'S SELF WORTH KNOWING, being in truth one of the best investments the world offers. YOUR HOROSCOPE is also a key to the character of OTHERS, and in this respect can be of the utmost use to you.

SCIENTIFIC PREDICTIONS ON ALL QUESTIONS OF LIFE, for the present, and future events up to the close of life—made by these sciences—with most complete primary and secondary directions (arcs, etc.)—through the trained judgment of PROF. ALTHOUSE—will stagger the senses. BEWARE, HOWEVER, OF UNRELIABLE READERS.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S wonderful proficiency in hand reading and casting of horoscopes has brought him a large and successful practice. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances.

PERSONAL—

MRS. MASSON,

the noted palmist of London, Eng., can be consulted at 221 S. SPRING ST. (Suite 17.)
by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS, AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper, can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in every-day life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill-luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.

Farming Lands.

TO LET—
You can secure land in the Seventh Home Extension Colony in the rich Kern Island district, on a small cash payment, which is less than rent. If you don't like the land at the end of 3 years you can sell it back to us and receive all of your money back, and thereby have secured the use of this land for three years without any rent or cost. You can't afford to rent in the face of this offer from the largest farm home organization in the United States.

Fourteen hundred acres of this 7000-acre Kern Island tract are planted to alfalfa. The canals are finished throughout the entire colony.

It is ready for your plow, your hoe and your harvest.

This land is only 7 miles from the city of Bakersfield.

Come right down to this office or write us for literature.

AN ESTABLISHED FACT.
A good piece of land under an irrigation ditch is the best employer that you ever worked for.

It is the best business opportunity in California.

All city men cannot farm successfully at the start, but we have something so rich and so easily handled, that we are in position to make you this offer;

Take 10, 20 or 40 acres of this land in our Seventh Home Extension Colony, in the Kern Island district, plant it this spring and harvest the crops, and do this two or three years. If you can't make a success of it, or do not double or triple your money, bring it back to this organization and we will refund you all of your money.

All you have to do is to build a temporary home building and go to work. If you should turn the land back to us at end of three years, we will pay you for your improvements or allow you to move them off. In this way you get the land for three years without rent and without cost; unless in the meantime you sell it for three times what you pay for it, or keep it for a home. It is only 7 miles south of the city of Bakersfield, a town of 10,000 inhabitants.

FOR SALE—THERE IS A NEW SEED AND Poultry-Supply store in town. Not the largest or most elegant, but sufficiently equipped to meet your needs and the things sold there are good; they must be or we can't hope for your steady patronage and that is what we are after. The seeds produce the results claimed for them and we will make a specialty during the next few months of baby chicks. Healthy, vigorous youngsters this week, at ten cents each. The Glendale Brooder is being demonstrated. It has a splendid record and you should examine it. Call around and see if we don't make your visit one of profit to you. Let us prove ourselves of value to your pocketbook.

RAILROAD RECORD.

RATE DECISION IS RENDERED.

Commerce Commission Decides Rope Cable Case.

Important Finding of Body Is Announced.

Long and Short Haul Clause Is Involved.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—One of the most important decisions rendered by the Interstate Commerce Commission for many months, was that handed down today by Commissioner Clark, in the case of the Boviard Supply Company against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad and other carriers.

The decision involves a discussion of the commission's views respecting the long and short haul clause of the Interstate act, and in the course of the opinion the commission states why it cannot always approve of a lower rate for a shorter haul than for a longer one in the same territory.

In the present case the complainant ships rope cable from San Francisco to Independence, Kan., on which it is charged 75 cents per 100 pounds, whereas the rate on such rope cables from San Francisco to Mississippi River common points and Chicago common points is only 60 cents a hundred pounds. The commission decided that in the circumstances the rate was not unjust nor prejudicial to the complainant. In the course of the decision the commission announced the following important finding to shippers and carriers throughout the country:

"Erroneous application of an unlawful rate is not evidence that a higher lawful rate thereon is unreasonable.

"A rate to one point that does not permit of disadvantageous competition from a point beyond enjoying a lower rate does not create unreasonable prejudice as to the one or give undue preference to the other.

"The commission views with disfavor the maintenance of a lower rate for a longer haul than for a shorter one included within the longer, and the circumstances and conditions obtaining at the more distant point which are relied upon to justify it must not only be clearly shown to be substantially dissimilar from those prevailing at the nearer point, but also to clearly exercise a potent or controlling influence in making the lower rate.

"If the influence of competition between points of production in commodities, between carriers and in rates prevailing at the farther distant point, but not at the nearer one, controls the establishment of a lower rate to the former, it will constitute such dissimilarity of circumstances as will justify the lower rate for the longer haul.

"Competition in commodities alone at the nearer point will not make the circumstances there substantially similar to those at the farther point where the other competitive influences and conditions also prevail.

"Dissimilar circumstances which justify under section 4 a greater charge for a shorter haul than for a longer haul, will also prevent such rate from constituting an illegal preference or advantage under section 3.

"Upon discovery that shipments have, through mistake, been moved at an unlawful rate, the carrier should forthwith demand and the shipper forthwith pay the difference between such unlawful rate and the legal rate applicable thereto."

MANY CARS IDLE.

Salt Lake Has no Excuse for Coal Famine, as It Had This Time Last Year.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SALT LAKE CITY (Utah) Jan. 18.—One year ago this city was threatened with a coal famine, because the railroads lacked cars to haul the fuel.

Today, according to the Tribune, 500 freight cars are standing idle in the yards of the Oregon Short Line. Freight cars to the number of 1500 have been retired from service on the Harriman lines within the past forty days, making a decrease of 10 per cent. in the active car equipment of the system. Twenty locomotives stand in the roundhouses cold.

Contrasted with an insatiable demand for all kinds of labor last winter, the Short Line has laid off 3000 trainmen and workmen since October 1. The Rio Grande Western has let out 175 men in the local shops, but has not yet called in any of its rolling stock.

The railroad men say the merchants are not buying goods, that this is the principal cause for the falling off of traffic and the suspension of trains.

RAILROADS MUST DIG UP.

Securities Amounting to Several Hundred Million Dollars Will Mature in Next Three Years.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Announcement Thursday of the sale of $5,000,0000 one-year 6 per cent. Consolidated Gas notes, presumably to take up a $5,000,000 one-year 6 per cent. loan maturing August 1 next, raises an interesting question as to what will be done by other companies similarly situated.

In February the Delaware and Hudson and the Missouri Pacific each have $6,000,000 short-term notes to meet, and at varying periods throughout this year, 1909 and 1910, many companies have both bonds and notes maturing. Will these obligations be canceled or renewed? That the question is one of uppermost interest at the present time may be seen from the following table, showing the securities maturing during the next three years:

	1908.	1909.	1910.
Railway bonds—
Total	$ 29,737,000	$ 49,823,000	$125,012,000
Railway short-term notes—

Railway equipment notes—

Industrial company bonds—

Industrial company notes—
Total	35,300,000	40,694,000	25,500,000

SMALL HOPE FOR SUCCESS.

California Contestants of Will of Mrs. Lydia Bradley Receive Little Encouragement.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

PEORIA (Ill.) Jan. 18.—The legal department of the estate of Mrs. Lydia Bradley, the millionaire philanthropist, expressed surprise today at the dispatch from Stockton, Cal., stating that an effort would be made on the part of the three nieces to break the will of the deceased.

The will is to be probated next Monday, and the trustees have been instructed to provide for all legal heirs according to her wishes. O. J. Bailey, Mrs. Bradley's attorney, said today: "I cannot see what the Stockton people can hope to get from contesting the will. Mrs. Bradley was of sound and vigorous mind when she made the statement. Moreover, the will itself affects the disposition of only a minor part of the property, the rest having been in possession of the Bradley institution for years. There are perhaps fifty or sixty distant relatives of Mrs. Bradley scattered through the country, and the total amount of the estate as it now stands, divided among these people, would leave a very small share to each, even should so remote a contingency as the breaking of the will arise."

The contestants are Mrs. H. W. Griffith, Mrs. J. D. McDougall and Mrs. Mary B. Percival of Stockton, Cal.

The body of Mrs. Bradley was laid to rest in the local cemetery this afternoon. For two hours during the morning the body lay in state, and hundreds viewed the remains.

PROHIBITION.

FIGHT ON RUM REACHES SENATE.

TILLMAN URGES BRINGING QUESTION BEFORE CONGRESS.

Prohibition Measures Create Unusual Interest in Upper House and Representatives Appear Before Committee and Arguments Will Be Heard Next Saturday.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—The Senate Committee on the Judiciary today took up the various prohibition measures befort it and heard Senator Tillman on his bill regulating the importation of liquor into one State from another.

Mr. Tillman admitted there was no doubt as to the right of Congress to regulate the receipt of liquor from outside the States by individuals for their own use. This he considered the only doubtful point connected with the question. He begged the committee not to delay in reporting the bill.

"Get it into the Senate," he urged, "and let the Senate deal with it."

Asked to discuss the wisdom of the measure, he declined, saying that "any student of human affairs will tell you that whiskey is the most potent as well as the most prominent cause of crime and misery in this country."

He believes it necessary to evoke the power of the Federal government to perfect the regulation of the traffic in States which already have acted in that direction.

In reporting the German-American alliance, Representative Barthold of Missouri advocated unfavorable action by the committee on any of the resolutions relating to the liquor subject.

He said that the alliance had a membership in thirty-six States and that the German-Americans were not in favor of government interference in the question of prohibition in any way.

John W. Yerkes, former Commissioner of International Revenue, expressed disapproval of a law withdrawing Federal liquor licenses in prohibition States on the ground that it puts the States in the position of invoking Federal law to cause their own laws to take effect.

Senator Dolliver hoped the committee would be able to reach some favorable conclusion on the bills of that nature before it. Arguments will be heard Saturday next.

COL. GOETHALS TESTIFIES.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—Col. Goethals, chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission, today resumed his testimnoy before the Senate Canal Commission. He detailed the structure of the various dams and locks, giving it as his opinion that all of them, and especially the big project at Gatun, were going to be absolutely safe and capable of use in passing the largest vessels in the world through the canal. Col. Goethals said that he considered 110 feet a sufficient width for the canal locks. The hearings will be resumed on Wednesday next.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 18.—J. N. Leger, Minister from Hayti, had a long talk with Assistant Secretary Bacon today in regard to the Haytian revolutionary movement. He said a reasonable delay would be granted before the bombardment of the ports of Gonaives and St. Marc, now occupied by the insurgents, which the government has threatened. Mr. Leger says the bombardment will be directed against the positions occupied by the insurgents, and not necessarily against the town.

SETTLED.

POMONA GETS PREP MEET.

Only One Interscholastic Contest Each Year.

Colleges to Entertain Teams in Order Annually.

U.S.C. to Get Next Meet and Then Occidental.

Pomona was awarded the interscholastic track meet for this year, at the meeting of the Track Committee of the Academic Athletic Union, with representatives of Pomona, U.S.C. and Occidental, at the Chamber of Commerce yesterday morning. There will be but one Southern California interscholastic meet each year, and each college will get the meet in its turn. In 1909 the meet will go to U.S.C., and in 1910 to Occidental.

The conference between prep school and college athletic authorities began at 10 o'clock, and it was not until after 12 o'clock that an agreement was reached between Coach Holmes of U.S.C. and Dr. Sumner of Pomona, who disputed the right to holding the first meet. When the meeting adjourned, these contending representatives had agreed, with W. A. Fiske of Occidental, to abide by any decision of the Track Committee of the Academic Athletic Union.

Accordingly, the members of this committee, L. M. Barker of Orange and P. W. Kauffman of Pomona, appointing O. S. Lowsley as a third member of the committee, decided in favor of Pomona for the present year, with U.S.C. and Occidental to get the meet in succeeding years.

The Academic Union representatives, when the meeting opened, informed the college delegates that it had become necessary to limit the southern interscholastic track meets to one each season, instead of three, as desired by the colleges. The college which secured the meet was to act as a host only, and the union was to control the eligibility of athletes, it was explained.

The limitation of the meets was deemed necessary, said Barker, because the colleges were showing a disposition to scramble for the prep athletes, and all wished to entertain them at meets for the purpose of inducing them to enter their own college. Thus the preps were being forced into a schedule which was too heavy for them, and some action was deemed necessary.

Pomona, through her representatives, Dr. Sumner and Claude Braden, demanded that the first meet under the new arrangement be held at Claremont, because this college began the college invitation meets in Southern California, four years ago.

U.S.C. asked that the matter be decided by lot, and Coach Holmes refused to consider any other method of settlement, alleging that he had been instructed by President Bovard to hold out for settlement by drawing lots. As a result of a consultation with the U.S.C. president by telephone, it was learned that he was willing to abide by any action the meeting should take, and the way was left open for a settlement.

The Track Committee of the union then arranged the schedule of prep school interscholastic sports, so that Pomona is to have the big track meet this year. Baseball and tennis go to U.S.C. and girls' and boys' basketball to Occidental. Next year the track meets will be held at U.S.C.; baseball and tennis at Occidental, girls' and boys' basketball at Pomona. Track at Occidental, baseball and tennis at Pomona, and basketball at U.S.C. is the third-year schedule.

WORKING OUT.

VETERANS RETURN TO THROOP TEAM.

THOMPSON FROM NEW YORK HAS BEEN SECURED AS COACH.

Practice Began Last Monday and the Squad Looks Good—Few Men Expect to Try for the Distance Events, but the Dashes Have Some Good Material.

Throop expects to make a big showing in track this season, as a great bunch of veterans has returned for the squad, and a first-class coach has been secured. A. L. Thompson of the New York Athletic Club, who is passing the winter in Pasadena, will act as coach. Thompson is an all-around athlete, member of the club rowing eight, and played on the basketball team which won the championship of the East last year. He is said to be thoroughly versed in all the track and field events.

The Throop squad began work last Monday, with about twenty men, including the new material.

Throop will be strongest in the field events. In the sprints and distances material is not plentiful, and men will have to be developed from runners whose ability is as yet largely unknown.

For the dashes, Salisbury, formerly of Harvard School, probably is the best man for the hundred-yard event. His time is 10 2-5. Bailey will enter all three of the dashes, and should show up well in the 100, 220 and 440. Slaven, a member of the football team, will also try the sprints. He did not run last year, but is a fast man, with a quick start, and should be a point winner for the school. Warren Smith is the remaining man for the short distances, and he may develop into a point winner with a little coaching.

Hurdlers are Risdon, who is rated as being fairly fast, Harris, formerly of L. A. High, who will do the low sticks, and Hall.

In the distance there are very few on the squad who expect to train. Wood, who was out last year, but did not make any great showing, is expected to develop into a good miler, and Coach Thompson will get other men in line for the half and the mile runs.

The pole vault will be taken care of by Davis, who goes over ten feet, and does 5 feet, 7 inches in the high jump. Hendrick is good for twenty feet in the broad, and will be Throop's best man in the weights.

Hendrick throws the hammer 150 feet, and has a mark of 43 feet, 6 inches in the shot put. Allen, last year, set a mark of 135 feet in the hammer, and 42 in the shot. Sid Allen, who entered Throop from Belmont last fall, is also a weight man, but his records are not known.

The Throop track has been covered with a new dirt surface, and rolled, and is now in good shape for the season. An attempt was made to get cinders, but these could not be had this side of Nevada, and their transportation here involved too great an expense to warrant their use.

SCANDAL IS PROMISED.

High Officers in German Army Are Charged With Serious Offenses and Inquiry Is Proceeding.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Investigation has been begun of charges against high army officers similar to those imputed by Editor Maximillian Harden to Count Von Moltke.

Although the inquiry has been going on several days it has been conducted with so much secrecy that it was not even suspected until today that it was in progress.

What officers are on the grill are as yet unknown, although gossip has it that their prominence would make the revelation of their names a national sensation.

Kokomo Woman Gives Fortune

To Help Women Who Suffer.

In the past few years Mrs. Cora B. Miller has spent $125,000.00 in giving medical treatment to afflicted women.

Some time ago we announced in the columns of this paper that she would send free treatment to every woman who suffered from female diseases or piles.

More than a million women have accepted this generous offer, and as Mrs Miller is still receiving requests from thousands of women from all parts of the world, who have not yet used the remedy, she has decided to continue the offer for a while longer, at least.

This is the simple, mild and harmless preparation that has cured so many women in the privacy of their own homes after doctors and other remedies failed.

It is especially prepared for the speedy and permanent cure of leucorrhoea or whitish discharges, ulceration, displacements or falling of the womb, profuse, scanty or painful periods, uterine or ovarian tumors or growths; also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness and piles from any cause, or no matter how long standing.

Every woman sufferer, unable to find relief, who will write Mrs. Miller now, without delay, will receive by mail free of charge, a 50-box of this simple home remedy, also a book with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer and how they can easily cure themselves at home without the aid of a physician.

Don't suffer another day, but write at once to Mrs. Cora B. Miller, box 9608, Kokomo, Indiana.

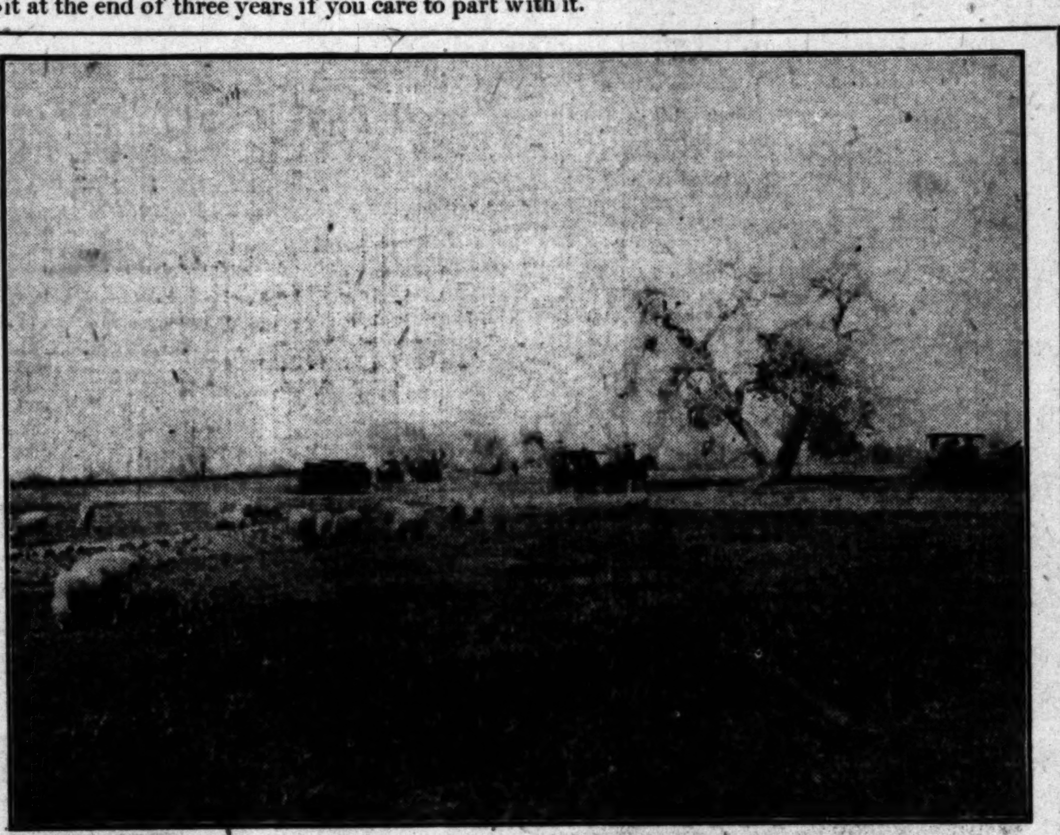
$25 Acre

Land Across the Road Is $150

7000 Acres to Be Immediately Taken Up By 700 Members of Our 7th Home Extension Colony

You can secure this land on this price basis, and use it for three years, at the end of which time you can turn it back to the Association at what you paid for it, and thereby have three years' use or rental, without any cost to you.

We make this proposition because the population we put upon the land will more than double the land values, and we will be very glad to get it at the end of three years if you care to part with it.



Alfalfa Pasture In Our Seventh Colony

This picture was taken in about the center of the seventh colony lands and gives a very fair idea of what the tract is like. Water is there in abundance. This land is not a desert. It is not wild or untamed ground—it is rich sediment soil and lies on a railroad within a few miles of Bakersfield. It has been leveled and checked, having been cultivated to alfalfa. Some portions are highly cultivated, with trees and varied crops.

You cannot even afford to RENT land in the face of this offer.

The Home Extension Association and the Committee have decided upon this land as the in California for their purposes, and a few will be allowed for additional members to join the club. Each member secures his own individual acres—the only co-operation between members being in the purchase and allotment of the land and water rights.

What Others Think of This Land

What Congressman Smith says: "The Kern lands are fully proven to production of stone grapes, dairying, etc., and the Mountain View Woodstock portions are the very cream of the district."—S. C. Smith.

"The committee has chosen as fine land as found in the county."—H. R. Peacock, President ersfield Board of Trade.

"That is the kind of land we want to see We, here in Bakersfield, know what that rich soil out, and how regularly it turns out its dividends owners who only half work it. It is land that can help to finance and upon which success tain."—G. J. Planz, representing Bakersfield institutions.

"The finest and best land of its type that has under my notice in the whole State of California Prof. D. T. Fowler, formerly of the Agricultural partment of the State University.

DON'T think that $25 an acre is too cheap for good land--the best land of its type the kind you want. This price is not due to any undesirability of the land, but the Home Extension Plan, which secures wholesale instead of retail prices for members. This is exactly the same as the lands across the road, which were sold at retail at $125 and $150 an acre. Do you want to join with these 700 other families who are going to build a town and a thriving community in a locality where there is a market for everything you can produce and where the land is already for the plow and the season's crops?

in building operations throw a larger or of people connected building trades out of employ- out of business. None of with the work in any be so busy as during the last The question will naturally arise, "What will be best for those who are out of business or out of employment to do?" Those engaged in the building trades are always migratory to a greater or less degree. Building may not be so brisk in one city as is another, and especially the artisans move about from one place to another according to where employment is most likely to be secured. In the present instance, it will be well for all to consider the question very carefuly before making a move. A glance at the building returns for the month of December for the whole United States will show that building operations fell off 25 per cent., as compared with the corresponding month in 1906. In some instances the shrinkage was as great as in Los Angeles, a little over 50 per cent., and out of the whole list of large cities there were less than half a dozen which showed an increase and in these instances they were cities where building was so slack a year ago that to show an improvement did not require the doing of much business. There is going to be nothing singular in the case of Los Angeles, if our building operations should be cut quite in two as compared with 1906, or if we should experience a contraction of fully 25 per cent. as compared with 1907. There is another consideration to be looked at carefully. Los Angeles is in the midst of a very rapidly-growing and progressive stretch of country. There are south of the Tehachepi Mountains a large number of cities of considerable size, and in every one of these there is quite remarkable activity in the building line. These outside cities show much less tendency to contracting their building operations than this metropolis.

What of San Francisco?

Undoubtedly a great many eyes will be turned toward San Francisco as a place likely to furnish abundant employment for an increased number of those engaged in the building trades. It is very true that there is great activity prevailing at the present time. The destruction of property was put at $300,000,000 when the earthquake was followed by the great fire. We must consider that perhaps quite 50 per cent. of this was in the shape of merchandise and machinery in factories. Another large amount represented furniture in residences and business houses. The figures are not conveniently at hand but probably the actual loss in buildings did not overpass greatly $100,000,000. Since the rebuilding of the city was undertaken with such remarkable courage on the part of the people, up to about six weeks ago the building inspector of San Francisco had issued permits for building amounting to $80,000,000. To get a proper conception of what that means we may compare it with the figures for the city of Los Angeles for a period of seventeen years, a time during which the city grew from a primitive pueblo to the magnificent metropolis of today. In these seventeen years the permits issued by the building department at the City Hall have amounted to $112,000,000. Those familiar enough with the topography of San Francisco to see it in their mind's eye will easily recall the great flat lying between Kearney street and the bay, Telegraph Hill on the north and Rincon Hill on the south. Here was the great wholesale section of the city and here also a good deal of the manufacturing was done. Many office buildings were found in this area and nearly all the banks. It will be easily recalled that this portion of the city, while containing a large number of very handsome and magnificent buildings, was for the most part covered with rookeries and shacks dating back as far as old vigilante days. These structures were many of them only one story and multitudes of them only two. The new San Francisco contains in this area a great many times more fine buildings than did the old. There are no one-story rookeries to speak of anywhere in this territory. There are not a great multitude of two-story structures. There is a multitude of buildings of three, four, five and up to ten stories. Is it not manifest that the effect of this new building will be to over-build San Francisco for business and office purposes? The population is no greater than before the fire, nor is the business greatly increased. These facts are sure to impress themselves on the property-holders of the city, and there will be probably a very prompt halt called in the erection of new business structures. The money received from the insurance companies has done a great deal of this building. These sums are now approaching exhaustion. The cost of building in San Francisco is very much greater than in any part of Southern California, so costly, in fact, that it makes the obtaining of money on real estate alone for building purposes exceedingly difficult. It seems manifest that this excessive cost of building, this difficulty about procuring money and the fact that the city is already probably over-built must check further building at once and seriously.

—o—

Our Hopes Here.

There are good reasons for us in Los Angeles to hope that the growth of the city will be but little interrupted by anything likely to take place in the country. Advices from every quarter are all in harmony, to the effect that money is plentiful again and is likely to be very cheap. The crops are selling and bringing good prices. The factories are resuming operations and the general prosperity of the country will not be very greatly interfered with. The number of eyes in all parts of North America turned to Southern California as the land where people would spend their days after retirement from business is not one pair less today. On the contrary, it is a great deal larger than at any previous time. Money will not be excessively dear here, and the cost of building is perhaps as low as anywhere in the United States. With a constant inflow of new population, with moderately cheap money and very low expense in building, there does not seem any good reason to look for disturbing stagnation in building operations.

The Cost of Living.

There is another consideration for mechanics and laboring people to keep steadily in mind. For those with but comparatively small income, one can live in this delightful climate at much less expense than in any dissimilar climate. If one is out of employment for awhile, there is no urgent necessity of living near the center of the city. By going out into the suburbs one can find a modest little cottage which will do for an emergency at a very low rental. The saving in fuel, in heavy clothing and numerous other ways will enable a family to get along here better on a small amount than anywhere else. Still another consideration to keep in mind is that our wage-earning population is much smaller in proportion to the whole body of the people than elsewhere. In the large cities of the East, with their congested population, the number of unemployed will be excessive, and the struggle for employment intense. It appears as if these facts would suggest to those who find themselves temporarily out of employment not to rush hastily away somewhere else to look for a job. Of course, if a mechanic, with or without a family, has friends somewhere else who assure him that employment awaits him at some point, when he finds it not obtainable here, that is entirely another matter.

If Los Angeles County had Corcoran's water supply, every acre of agricultural land in it acres in the Corcoran district overlie would be worth $5000. Thousands of a rich vein of odorless natural gas. Many Corcoran ranchers, at a cost of $200, have developed gas for light, heat and power on their own property. It sounds like a fairy tale to state that Corcoran ranchers get the purest water and also natural gas for heating, lighting and power, all from the same well—but the writer saw this very unusual condition with his own eyes on his recent trip to Corcoran. One of these natural gas wells has been flowing continuously for the past 17 years.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended for improvements in the Corcoran district. The town itself is built on substantial and modern lines. Fine pressed brick business buildings line both sides of the principal streets. The Santa Fe Company has erected a $25,000 Mission style reinforced concrete depot. Churches, a fine hotel, a school, a prosperous bank and a money making creamery add a metropolitan air to the new community. Plans are now under way for the erection of a Masonic Temple building. New homes and business houses are springing up on all sides. The writer predicts a brilliant future for this wealth-producing district. Land values are naturally soaring higher as development goes on. However, excellent land close to the town and railroad can now be secured from $25 per acre upwards.

The Security Land & Loan Company, with offices at 357 South Spring street, will run a special excursion with chartered Pullman (at reduced rates) to Corcoran on Wednesday, January 22nd. Only a limited number of people can be accommodated.

Reservations may be made upon application at the above office.

IN WESTLAKE DISTRICT.

Beautiful Beacon-street Home Sold for Twelve Thousand Five Hundred Dollars.

The J. P. Vawter Company reports the sale for L. L. Bowen of his home at No. 832 Beacon street to Lester L. Robinson, for $12,500.

The lot is 50x150 feet to a twenty-foot alley, and is improved with a ten-room modern dwelling. This is one of the most attractive places in the section, the first story being finished in solid cabinet golden oak. The second story contains five commodious bedrooms and a bathroom. The house has hardwood floors throughout, and is heated by furnace. The exterior front plan is an exceptionally pleasing one, being embellished with solid Temecula gray granite, which gives it a very handsome and substantial appearance. The lot is planted with rare shrubs and flowers, adding materially to the general beauty of the place.

Mr. Robinson made the purchase for a permanent home, and will take possession about February 1.

EASTERN IDEAS.

APARTMENTS IN MUCH DEMAND.

ARRIVALS FROM THE EAST WANT THEM.

Owners Meeting Application for Such Buildings Rapidly, and Section Is Developing—Additions to Present Structures and Construction of Houses Going on.

The building of apartment-houses in the section west of Hill street to accommodate the growing population of the city continues steadily. Buildings are being finished nearly every week, while in several cases large additions are being completed. The demand for modern flats, and more particularly modern apartments, continues very steady, and rents are fairly high, so that this form of building presents an enticing prospect to those seeking income return, rather than speculative increase. Property in the section designated, that is, west of Hill as far as Beaudry, and even farther west, and lying between First and Seventh streets, and extending to beyond Ninth street, will always be valuable, and in demand for such class of buildings, as the city is continually growing, and the class of people demanding such accommodations is increasing with each trainload of newcomers.

On the northwest corner of Second and Beaudry avenue, C. E. Mooney has just completed a three-story plaster mission-style building of thirty-seven rooms, which are divided into two and three-room suites. There are twelve baths in connection, and three large reception rooms. Each apartment is reached by a private vestibule. The latest devices have been installed, such as disappearing beds, etc. F. M. Tyler is the architect. The building was constructed by the Eagle Rock Company, and cost $14,000.

The managers of the Hotel Key West found the demand for apartments so great that a $21,000 brick addition has been made. There are thirty-six rooms, in addition to baths and buffet kitchens and large closets. Every modern device has been installed in the building, which was designed by A. L. Haley, Inc.

George W. Walker and I. N. Huntsberger are the owners of a three-story brick building being erected on the north side of Seventh street, betwen Olive street and Grand avenue. This occupies a lot 75½x110 feet. There are four store rooms on the ground floor, while the two upper floors are laid out in apartments. There are forty-one rooms on the second floor, and forty-two on the third. There are four private and four public baths on each floor. Steam heat and electric lights and telephones are included. The two upper floors have been leased for five years for a total of $2875. It will be named the Holyrood. The cost will be nearly $25,000.

VALUABLE CORNER BOUGHT.

Property at Toberman and West Washington Streets Brings Twenty-eight Thousand Dollars.

George H. Rector has sold to James Qysin, through the agency of F. J. Steele & Co., the southwest corner of Toberman and West Washington streets, lot 142x142 feet, for $28,000. This was bought as an investment, and may be improved within the year with a modern four or five-story apartment building.

Almera D. Folger has sold to Eleanore Morgan the property at No. 2125 West Twenty-ninth street, consisting of a two-story, six-room, mission-style house. The lot is 50x135 feet, and the price was $4750. F. J. Steele & Co. were the agents.

F. O. Engstrom has sold to George H. Rector the property at No. 1414 East Eighth street, for $5000, through the same agency. The property consists of a lot, 50x121 feet, improved with a six-room cottage.

W. E. Wilke has sold the property at No. 1256 East Thirty-fifth street, improved with a six-room house, for $1975. The lot is 50x135 feet. The buyer is Delea E. Cameron. The same firm managed the deal.

WILL BUILD APARTMENTS.

T. L. O'Brien & Co. report the exchange of equity of $1150 in the property at No. 237 East Twenty-fourth street, valued at $5000, for a 165-acre ranch at Imperial, with Victor Gustafson. The cottage now on the property on Twenty-fourth street will be removed and a three-story frame apartment-house erected.

OIL IS KING

A NEW COMPANY ABOUT TO ORGANIZE

A few conservative business men of Los Angeles are preparing to organize an oil company to develop 160 acres of land located in the very heart of a proven oil field, where numerous wells surrounding are at the present time producing from 100 to 400 barrels of oil per day. Pipe line adjoins corner of land.

A few additional parties with ready cash to make an investment of not less than $1250 are desired.

Full information given and a personal visit to the oil district invited. Only a few more subscribers necessary to fill the list of this inside offer, where $1250 put in will probably return $10 for each $1 invested. It is positively, we believe, the best offering to make "money" earn money in Southern California today.

Remember, that notwithstanding the money stringency, the price of oil is continually ADVANCING, while the production of this staple article throughout the world is continually DIMINISHING.

SEVENTH
EXTENSION COLONY.

These Kern Island lands are only $25 an acre and fully endorsed by the Kern County Board of Trade. They are open for subscription only until February 8th.

These lands have canals all finished and are ready for the plow. Of the 7000 acres over 1400 are planted to alfalfa (extra for the improvements.)

These lands have our endorsement to this effect:

"If at the end of two or three years you do not like these lands or are not able to sell them for double what they cost you, we will return all of your money paid on the lands, and thereby you have the free use of these lands for two or three years without cost to you."

You cannot afford to even rent land in the face of this offer.

The time is coming, yes, it has come, when it is every man's duty to own a piece of Mother Earth. This land will not give you immunity from labor but it will give you employment for all the days of your life with riches and abundance therewith.

We have planted land and unplanted land. Land with canal water and land on which you can put your own pumping plant.

Some of this colony tract is fit for the inexperienced man to go upon it without the loss of a day's wages. It will immediately give back returns if you buy the planted land.

Remember our offer of your money back and the consequent free use of the land.

Remember the endorsement of Congressman Smith of the Southern California district, also the endorsement of the Kern County Board of Trade. Then if you fail to investigate what this means it is your own fault and not ours.

You ought to have one of the farm homes. The day is rapidly passing when they may be secured.

Call for literature, or write. And better still, come down and hear our free stereopticon lecture every evening, at eight o'clock.

FOR SALE—
AN ESTABLISHED FACT.
A good piece of land under an irrigation ditch is the best employer that you ever worked for.
It is the best business opportunity in California.
All city men cannot farm successfully at the start, but we have something so rich and so easily handled, that we are in position to make you this offer:
Take 10, 20 or 40 acres of this land in our Seventh Home Extension Colony, in the Kern Island district, plant it this spring and harvest the crops, and do this two or three years. If you can't make a success of it, or do not double or triple your money, bring it back to this organization and we will refund you all of your money.
All you have to do is to build a temporary home building and go to work. If you should turn the land back to us at end of three years, we will pay you for your improvements or allow you to move them off. In this way you get the land for three years without rent and without cost; unless in the meantime you sell it for three times what you pay for it, or keep it for a home. It is only 7 miles south of the city of Bakersfield, a town of 19,000 inhabitants.
Come down at once as this offer closes soon. Or write for literature. CALIFORNIA HOME EXTENSION ASSOCIATION, Chamber of Commerce Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal. 19

We believe all of the above stocks will sell higher very soon, some of them will double in price. There are reasons for our opinions on these stocks and we think they are good ones. Call and see us and talk the market over. We are brokers, not promoters and our only interest is that of our clients.

We are members of the Los Angeles-Nevada Stock Exchange and have a representative on the San Francisco exchange with whom we are in constant communication by wire. Our telegraphic service is the best and it is for the use of our clients. We buy or sell wherever the best prices can be obtained and our clients are kept in constant touch with the other markets on the stocks in which they are interested.

A specialty is made of out of town accounts and we have customers in all parts of Southern California, Arizona and Nevada whose business is done as satisfactorily as would be the case were the client actually in the board room.

There are still upon our lists some bank stocks at very attractive prices. With normal conditions rapidly being resumed these securities will seek higher levels.

NOW IS THE TIME TO BUY STOCK IN the SEARCHLIGHT COPPER-GOLD MINING COMPANY.

We are right in line for something big.
We have a limited allotment of stock at 12½ cents a share. Put your order in before the price goes higher. The next report that comes from the superintendent on the property may send the stock up.

MISSES THE CHILDREN.

THE OLD HOME GETS LONELY.

WHEN DAUGHTER WEDS UPLAND RANCHER SELLS.

Famous Orange Grove Disposed of for Forty Thousand Dollars and Within Few Minutes of Transaction an Advance of Ten Thousand Is Offered.

UPLAND, Jan. 18.—The famous I. W. Lord ranch, located at Ioamosa, six miles to the northeast of this city, and consisting of sixty acres, has been sold to Joseph Dederichs of Los Angeles, for $40,000. There are forty acres of oranges, and the balance is in deciduous fruits.

The ranch, both as to location and value for bearing, is considered one of the finest in this locality. Mr. and Mrs. Lord have resided on it for twenty-two years. Their family has gradually dispersed, however, and recently the daughter who remained at home was married to Mr. Vandergrift, of Pasadena, and Mr. Lord decided to leave the ranch. He received $17,500 cash, and residence property and lots on Occidental boulevard, Los Angeles, valued at $22,500.

Just after closing this deal, Mr. Lord, upon reaching home, was called over the long-distance telephone by a party at Pasadena, who offered him $50,000 cash for the ranch. He does not seem grieved over this apparent loss of $10,000, stating, jocularly, that he is of a generous disposition, and "does not want it all."

DECLARES DIVIDEND.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Cucamonga First National Bank, held on Tuesday, J. M. Elliott and E. H. Barmore, of Los Angeles, were reëlected directors, as was also F. V. Lucas of Cucamonga. Dr. E. W. Reid was chosen vice-president, to succeed Charles Thorpe, resigned. O. H. Stanton was reëlected president, and the directors are, in addition to those above named, Mr. Stanton and Dr. Reid. Three thousand dollars was added to the surplus, bringing it up to $5000. At 6 per cent. per annum dividend was declared.

ELECT OFFICERS.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Upland, held early this week, the old officers and directors were chosen for another year. They are: H. E. Bartlett, president; Charles D. Adams, vice-president; A. E. Huntington, cashier; C. T. McCulloch, assistant cashier; directors, H. E. Bartlett, Charles D. Adams, C. T. McCulloch, A. E. Huntington and George Chaffey, the latter gentleman of Los Angeles.

WANTS GAS FRANCHISE.

Robert Weiss of Upland has applied to the Board of Trustees for a franchise to build and conduct a gas plant here, and the board will advertise for bids.

REWARD COMES TO OPERATOR.

REMEMBERED IN WILL OF CHICAGO BANKER.

Iowa Keyman Who, Nearly Twenty Years Ago, Saved the Lives of Woman and Child, Is to Receive $10,000 from Estate of Their Husband and Father.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DES MOINES (Iowa) Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] W. E. Gearhart of Madrid, Iowa, telegraph operator, 50 years of age and working on a small salary, is to receive $10,000 from the estate of the late C. C. Thompson, a Chicago banker and real estate man.

Gearhart, while in the employ of the Chicago Great Western at Melbourne in 1889, saved Mrs. Thompson and her daughter from being run over and killed by a freight train. Gearhart sustained serious injury but the incident had been well nigh forgotten when the notice of the bequest came to him.

The accident took place in front of the Chicago Great Western depot at Melbourne, in 1889. Gearhart was the operator and he had received a death message for Mrs. Thompson, who was on board a train passing through the town. She left the train and was standing in the middle of the track reading the telegram. In the noise and confusion she did not see a freight train backing down upon her and her child.

Gearhart sprang out and threw her from the track and caught a firm hold on the child's clothing and pulled her out of danger.

WHITTIER.

SPORTS IN QUAKERDOM ARE LOOKING BRIGHT.

SINCE the opening of college, January 6, the track athletes of Whittier have been busy. Coach Thompson has turned the basketball team over to Assistant Coach Ratcliffe, and has been devoting his entire time to the track men.

The Quakers are seen to be very strong in the long distance runs, fairly strong in the sprints, hurdles and jumps, but lamentably weak in the weight events and the pole vault.

With the return of Capt. Marshburn to college just before the close of college for the Christmas recess, the stock of the Quakers rose materially. Marshburn did the 440 last year in 55 seconds, winning the event in the U.S.C. dual meet, and was the best man in college in the shot-put. He is expected to do better this year in both events, but aside from his own individual performances, he is a hard worker for the good of the team as a whole, and his presence on the field is a great inspiration to the other men.

Of the other members of last year's team, Mills, the crack miler, is in a class himself. He has not been playing basketball this year, so has had a long rest since the cross-country run with U.S.C., and is now starting light work, so he is expected to do better than he did last year.

White, the two-miler, is also getting into shape gradually. His fine work in the cross-country run, has placed added confidence in him and he is expected to run the two miles in close to ten minutes. He has plenty of endurance, and a sprint on the last 220 that will beat nearly any one in Southern California. His main trouble is in not being able to get enough speed into the first mile. However, Coach Thompson will work him with Mills in the mile in an endeavor to increase his speed.

Holton, another of last year's team, is expected to make a good showing this year. He tried several events last year, before trying the 440, which he did in 56 seconds. He was unable to compete in most of the meets on account of sickness. He will devote himself entirely to the 440 this year, and Coach Thompson expects him to do 53 seconds or better.

Beeson, the crack little catcher of the baseball team, did not do any track work last year, but came out for the cross-country run last fall only a night or two before the try-out, and proved to be the Quakers' third best man, staying with White and Mills till the last 220, when they left him a few yards in the rear. He will try for the two-mile run this spring, and is expected to make a good running mate for White. Of the new men in college this year, in the distance events, Branscome is probably the best. He would undoubtedly have made a position on the cross-country team if he had not been taken ill a few days before the try-out. He came to college with a reputation as a long-distance runner, but he has a great burst of speed, and Coach Thompson thinks he will probably be of more value in the 880 or the mile than in the longer run, so he will be given a thorough try-out in these events.

In the sprints the Quakers are counting on Wade, the crack little quarter of the football team as a sure point winner. He has a prep-school record of 10 2-5 seconds in the century run, and has done the 220 in beter than 23 seconds. He is also very good in the 440, and will probably be used in the relay. Wilder is another almost sure winner in the sprints. He, too, has a prep record of 10 2-5 in the hundred. However, he has greater endurance than Wade, and will probably specialize in the 440.

A star of the first magnitude in the hurdles is Renneker, the crack football end. He has also been seen in action in baseball and also shows that he is even better there than in football and track. He has not yet run a full flight over the hurdles, but his form is very good, and he has plenty of speed.

In the jumps the Quakers will have Wells for both the broad and high. He has done over 20 feet in the broad and 5 ft. 4 in. in the high. He is heavier this year than before, so is not expected to do much better in the high, but with coaching should supass his former record in the long jump. Another new man in the high jump is "Shorty" Clark. He has the typical build of a high jumper, and is expected to make good. He has never done over 5 ft. 4 in. but has never had any coaching. Feeler, who did 20 feet last year in the broad jump, is expected to better his performance this year.

In the shot put the Quakers will have Captain Marshburn, Feeler, White and Boyle. Marshburn has the best record of any of these men, having done 38 feet, but Feeler is getting the form far better this year than he did last and is expected to throw the weight close to 40 feet. Boyle and White have each done about 36 feet, and it is thought they will do better.

In the hammer throw will be found Wells, Feeler and Boyle. As yet none of these men has mastered more than the single turn, so the prospects do not look very bright.

The pole vault looks worse than the hammer throw, with Williams, who has never done over ten feet, and is not expected to do much better. Pierson, a freshman from Alhambra High, and while he has not gone over 9ft., 6in. as yet, he has fair form and may develop into a point winner before the end of the season.

In the relay, the Quakers will have a pretty fair quartette in Wade, Wilder, Holton and Capt. Harshburn.

The first meet with an outside team will be with the local High School on Friday, January 29, and after that a meet will be held every week till the conference meet on March 21.

The Quakers will have the hardest schedule of any of the southern colleges, with the possible exception of U.S.C., having dual meets with Pomona, Occidental and U.S.C. and the conference meet.

LOW SCORES BY GOLF PLAYERS.

ROUND ROBIN TOURNEY STARTS OFF SATISFACTORILY.

Jevne Defeats Lines from Scratch in Close Contest by Covering the Course in Better Than the Bogey Mark—Matches Will Be Continued This Afternoon.

In the first day of play in the handicap round robin golf tournament at the Los Angeles Country Club, yesterday, J. Jevne and S. C. Lines played one of the best games that has been seen on the links for months. Jevne and Lines played in the scratch class, Jevne winning by the score of 3 up and 2 to play, after a game which belonged to either man until almost the last hole was reached.

Jevne covered the course in seventy-four strokes, or four under bogey, and Lines equaled bogey. Recently he set a mark of seventy-two over the course, but today could not approach that score.

The play brought out over thirty golfers, and resulted in many of the matches being completed very promptly. Another large delegation will be out today, and it is expected that several matches in the second round will be played off.

The results yesterday were:

Scratch—Jevne beat Lines, 3 up and 2 to play.

Six handicaps—Coffin beat Robinson, 1 up; Parsons beat Haule, 4 up and 3 to play.

Ten handicap—Hughes beat Steckel, 3 up and 2 to play; Parker beat Eikenheimer 2 up; Crutcher beat Kirkpatrick, by default.

Twelve handicap—Henderson beat Bradford, 6 up and 5 to play; Church beat Holterhoff, 2 up and 1 to play; Conger beat Frost, 2 up.

Sixteen handicap—Seeman beat Graff, 4 up and 3 to play.

Eighteen handicap—Long beat Aiken, 4 up and 3 to play; Gilbert beat Elliott, 4 up and 3 to play.

HARBOR PROTECTION.

Lieut.-Col. Abbot of Corps of Engineers Inquires Into Fortification of San Pedro.

Lieut.-Col. F. V. Abbot, Corps of Engineers, U.S.A., in charge of the military division in the office of the Chief of Engineers at Washington, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday morning, and, in company with Capt. Amos A. Fries, went at once to San Pedro, where he familiarized himself with the situation as to fortifications. The unprotected condition of San Pedro harbor, it is expected, is to have immediate attention from the War Department, and Col. Abbot, through whose hands such matters pass in the routine, came here to get an intimate knowledge of the situation. Naturally, he declined to discuss the matter. With Capt. Fries he left last night for San Diego.

Col. Abbot, in his tour of duty in connection with fortifications, lately visited the Philippines and Hawaii and more recently has been in the Puget Sound country.

THREE TIMES, BUT NOT OUT.

Despondent Shoemaker Repeatedly Turns on Gas, but Neighbor as Often Revives Him.

L. Berkowitz, a shoemaker, whose shop is at No. 922 Temple street, made three attempts yesterday to commit suicide by inhaling gas. Each time he was foiled by H. E. Presky of No. 935 Temple street. Berkowitz was arrested last night, and will be examined as to his sanity.

For several weeks he has been despondent because his wife refused to come to America, although he sent her $400 several months ago. She wrote that she had decided to stay in Russia.

The shoemaker has been drinking heavily for some time, Presky says, and declared several times that he was going to kill himself. About noon yesterday he closed his shop and turned on the gas. He was unconscious when discovered by Presky, who carried him out into the fresh air. He made a similar attempt to kill himself about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and again at 8 o'clock last night.

OPERATION SUCCESSFUL.

A cablegram was received from Manila yesterday announcing that Mrs. George Hamilton, wife of Capt. Hamilton of the Ninth Infantry, and daughter of Lieut.-Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, U.S.A. (retired,) late commander of the United States army had successfully sustained an operation for appendicitis. Her present condition is favorable for a speedy recovery, which is a great relief to her many friends in Los Angeles. It was hoped that Mrs. Hamilton could be brought to the United States for the operation, but complications necessitated immediate action.

The Greatest Stride in Railroad Operation Since the Advent of the Westinghouse Air Brake

The Simmen Automatic Railway Signal System

With Shops at Los Angeles

Presents an Unusual Opportunity to Investors Who Appreciate an Invention of World-Wide Use in a Field Where $50,000,000 Is Annually Spent Every Train on the Division in Full Sight All the Time.

The Simmen Automatic Railway Signal Company is equipping with its system, on one of the great transcontinental lines, a block of 38 miles in the vicinity of Los Angeles. This will be the first practical and conclusive demonstration of this invention, and all who have examined the working model share the belief that the world will soon witness an absolute revolution in the method of dispatching, controlling and safeguarding the movement of railway trains.

The invention itself is the result of a life-study by P. J. Simmen, C. E., for many years in the engineering department of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and for five years chief engineer on one of the largest electric railway systems in America.

By a simple mechanical electrical device, automatically operated by a system of ordinary wires, a record sheet affording a birdseye view of the entire road or division, with the location and speed of every train is before the eyes of the dispatcher every hour of the day and night. From his post at his desk the dispatcher has instant communication with every engineer on the line, and can, at the approach of danger in any form, flash a red signal to the engineer in his cab, 100 miles away, or, if the danger be imminent, apply the air and stop the train regardless of the engineer himself.

These are only a few of the accomplishments of the Simmen system. Obstacles on the track, wild cars, misplaced switches, trains running without orders, and all of the many dangers that beset a train are reported automatically—and in time to avert fatalities. There can be no collisions. The human hands and the human faculties, subject to mistake or incapacity, are superseded by a system of electric exactitude as unfailing as the stars.

Call or Send for Our Booklet and Consider the Offer Made

Send us the appended coupon and learn more of this invention. Consider that the Simmen system costs about one-seventh of the cost of the most efficient block and train order system now in use, and that it succeeds where others fail. Consider that it saves the railways millions and millions in the cost of operation; that it avoids wrecks and collisions also, with all of the damage suits entailed.

While financially able to meet ordinary demands upon its small plant, the company, realizing the importance so often urged by sincere friends familiar with the value of the invention and alive to the magnitude of the demand which must follow this first practical demonstration of it, has decided to sell AT ONCE 20,000 shares of its stock for means to place its plant in a position to fill large orders. So many opportunities of doubtful merit are advertised that the company hesitated long before taking this method, but the need for immediate expansion is so urgent, the proofs of reliability so unquestionable, the field so large and unoccupied, and the profits so sure and gratifying, that it is felt the offer will be quickly grasped by a class and character of investors who appreciate the unusual opportunity it presents.

PAR VALUE OF THE SHARES IS $1.00 EACH.

THE SELLING PRICE IS $5.00 EACH, IN BLOCKS OF 25, constituting an invention of extraordinary earning power.

In the best judgment of the gentlemen composing the company, no more than the 20,000 shares announced will be sold at any price or at any time, that amount being considered ample for the requirements of the extensions contemplated.

FAR-REACHING.

WHOLE VALLEY IS INTERESTED.

OFFICE DECISION MAY END SPECULATION.

Think Large Holdings Divided and That General Development Will Be Thereby Cases Referred to One Entry Is Allowed.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CENTRO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] From one end of the Imperial Valley to the other, much interest has been aroused over the recent decision of the United States Commissioner pertaining to desert land entries. If it holds—and it may be reversed by a ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States—it will affect many of the large holdings. This may prove a benefit to the valley, as choice land would be divided into smaller holdings, and thus get out of the hands of those who hold it as a speculation and who are retarding general development.

The decision of the commissioner follows the referring to him by Gen. Prescott of Los Angeles cases where there had been repeated assignments of desert entries by the original entrymen to persons who had used their rights to file at some previous time on parcels of land of less than the government allows them to claim. After reviewing the cases, Fred Bennett, Assistant Commissioner, states:

"Though Carroll and Gillespie seem qualified to receive their respective assignments under the former rulings of this office, it is now held that a person who makes a desert entry or received an assignment thereby exhausts his rights under the law and becomes disqualified to make another entry or receive an assignment of another entry, notwithstanding the fact that the combined area of such entry may not exceed 320 acres.

"I am of the opinion that to permit Carroll and Gillespie to obtain all the lands which they say have been assigned to them would be enabling them to do indirectly what the law does not permit them to do directly."

It is stipulated that these men may select which of the entries they wish to hold, and that, should they not take action, all the assignments will be canceled without further notice.

AHOY!

NEWPORT HAS HARBOR DAY.

LEGISLATORS AND OTHER GUESTS EXPLORE THE BAY.

Visit by Legislative Committee Develops Fact That State Is Not Ready to Launch Improvement Effort, but Members Are

Orange County put its harbor at Newport on view yesterday, and many of its leading people entertained members of the State Legislature and about one hundred other guests. There were launch rides over the waters and a banquet at the Hotel, where the beauties of the spot were extolled and hopes expressed of a development in the future that will make the landlocked harbor a port of commercial importance.

Joined in the invitations issued by the Chambers of Commerce of Long Beach and Santa Ana, the Committee on Harbors appointed by the Legislature was to visit the harbor. It was to interest these Legislators and possibly to enlist State support that the entertainment was planned. Senator Wright of San Diego, Senator Wolfe of San Francisco, Assemblymen Johnson of and Leeds of Los Angeles, members of the committee, went with the party. Other members of the Legislature who went along included Senator of Pasadena, Carter of Los Angeles and Anderson of Santa Ana, Assemblymen Cogswell, Stanton of Los Angeles county, Estudillo of Riverside, and Bishop of Santa Ana.

The party went in a special train of cars that left the Pacific Electric station at 9 o'clock and up to the last minute it was expected that Capt. A. Fries, Corps of Engineers, would go along.

For a distance of several miles from the wharf where the launches were boarded at Balboa, the party explored along the high banks and into the preserves that now are a bone of contention between State wardens and owners. On the way the excursionists passed a boat in which Deputy Warden was posted, on the lookout for poachers. In their further tour of the bay, some of the launches went out into the entrance to the harbor.

Wilson, president of the Newport Beach Chamber of Commerce, presided at the banquet and introduced of Newport, who gave the address of welcome. E. J. Louis of Santa Ana was toastmaster, and the speakers included Byron Oliver, Rev. Harper, Assemblyman Clyde, Assemblyman Estudillo, Senator Wright, E. Rubino, James Irvine and Easton.

All the speakers painted the beauties of the place in varied tints. Senator Wright got down to the question of what the State might do for the harbor. He started out by saying that if the United States government would spend as much money at Newport as it has at San Pedro, the former would have a harbor rivaling that at San Diego.

The Senator said it is not within the province of the Legislative Committee to take up the matter of jetties for improving the entrance to the harbor. It would do anything possible to aid in getting Federal support, he added, for the present, but the State is concerned only in building wharves and docks on public lands at the different harbors already developed. This bay, he said, was not in the province of his committee, but he expressed the appreciation of the members for the entertainment afforded. After the Federal government had made a way for the entrance of vessels into the harbor, he said, the State would be in a position to aid in the building of wharves and docks.

SUGAR FACTORY NOW PROPOSED.

CAPITALISTS READY TO SPEND MILLION IN ENTERPRISE.

Expert Talks to El Centro Ranchers About Scheme and Arouses Enthusiasm—Conditional on Annual Planting of Eight Thousand Acres to Beets.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

EL CENTRO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Ranchers of this vicinity were addressed tonight by W. T. Hayhurst, the sugar expert of Los Angeles, on the feasibility of growing sugar beets extensively in the Imperial Valley, and the establishment of a large sugar factory here. Much enthusiasm was aroused, and experiments will be begun at once to ascertain what results can be attained by planting beets at various seasons of the year.

It is Hayhurst's belief that in this valley the vegetable can be grown so as to keep a factory in operation constantly. He says that he has had wide experience in the sugar-beet sections of California, Colorado and Nebraska, but nowhere discovered such favorable conditions as exist here.

The expert claims to represent capitalists, whose names are withheld, but who are ready to put a million or more dollars into a sugar factory if the ranchers will sign contracts to plant at least 8000 acres of beets annually for five years.

Hayhurst said that while beet-sugar products are of first importance, the factory, if established, would handle cane and sorghum products on a large scale, and that there would be developed an important industry in canning and preserving with syrups.

CELERY SHIPMENTS LIGHTER.

Florida Crop Appears in Eastern Markets Earlier Than in Most Seasons.

WINTERSBURG, Jan. 18.—Representatives of the California Vegetable Union, through whose agency the product of the Celery Growers' Association has been marketed during the past five years, met with the directors of the association to consider the matter of a new contract, continuing the present arrangement for another term. Though no definite action was taken by the directors, it is expected that, with a few modifications, the present plan will be continued. When the new contract is arranged, it will be submitted to a vote of the members of the association for approval. For several reasons, recent shipments of celery have been lighter than for a month previous. The Florida crop is making its appearance in the eastern market considerably earlier than in former years, and, with its advantage in transportation distance, becomes a serious factor in the difficulties which California growers have met this season.

Members of Celery Camp, Modern Woodmen of America, have adopted appropriate resolutions of respect for the memory of the late J. T. Shaffer, who was one of its charter members and a prominent citizen of the community.

R. L. Draper has developed a fine flowing well on his ranch near Wintersburg. It is a ten-inch well, and 681 feet deep. The water has a slight tincture of sulphur. The well is considered a bonanza by its owner.

Howard Ward, formerly a resident of this vicinity, has returned here from Alhambra, and will have charge of the Home telephone exchange at Smeltzer.

A buggy and harness stolen recently from Ward Stambaugh of Santa Ana were found by Sheriff Lacy yesterday near Sunset Beach, where the property had been abandoned. A robe taken at the same time was missing, but otherwise the property was not damaged.

HE'S BRYAN'S NEIGHBOR.

A. F. Bloomer, whose home is in York, Neb., fifty miles from Lincoln, is sojourning here for a few weeks, as he usually does each winter. Mr. Bloomer thinks the Taft boom is the only one that will come to anything. Speaking of Bryan, presuming he will carry the Democratic banner, Mr. Bloomer said: "He cannot carry his ward or precinct. How are you going to elect a man President whose neighbors will not vote for him?" Mr. Bloomer is on his way to Australia, but says he will be back here by the time Admiral Evans anchors the fleet off this coast.

Deciduous Fruits raised on the Chino Ranch—Apricots, Peaches, Apples, Plums—Walnuts.

CROP OF 1907—Deciduous Fruits: acreage, 700; average yield per acre, 3 tons; estimated value $84,000. Acreage under cultivation in 1908 greatly increased.

Chino Ranch

32 Miles From Los Angeles

Fruit Growing Brings Big Returns at Chino

Chino Ranch lands are especially adapted to raising Deciduous fruits. The fruit develops perfectly. An immediate market is at hand. Adequate prices are the rule. While plenty of water is available on the ranch, no irrigation is necessary in the development of deciduous fruits. The secret lies in the nature of the Chino soil. It is all soil—and there is a natural sub-irrigation throughout, which feeds the roots of the trees sufficiently. Chino apricots bring from $45 to $50 a ton; peaches from $35 to $55 a ton; apples bring from 1 1-2c to 3 1-2c a pound; Satsuma plums about $80 a ton. One Chino rancher received $2800 last year from 25 acres of peaches. These were marketed at a cannery within two miles of his ranch. His net return on this crop was almost $2500. Another Chino rancher made big money last year in apples. He has a seven-acre tract and the trees were in full bearing, producing a very heavy crop, for which he found a home market. If you are interested in fruit growing let us take you out and show you just what is being done in this line at Chino. It will prove a revelation.

We have a fine exhibit of fruits grown on the Chino Ranch at our office.

Come in and see it.

Rich Land at Moderate Prices, on Easy Terms

Chino Lands are perfectly adapted to growing many other products besides deciduous fruits. Ranchers are netting big returns from Alfalfa, Sugar Beets, Potatoes, Oranges, Onions, Chili Peppers, Sweet Potatoes—from Eggs and Poultry and from General Truck Farming.

The Ranch is only 32 miles from Los Angeles, surrounded by thriving towns and cities. An immediate market at top prices is available for all that can be raised. The land has been thoroughly exploited—no "experiments" at Chino—no failures.

The town of Chino is a modern town—with good schools, churches, stores, telephones—the comforts and conveniences of modern living—no "pioneering"—your family and children can have the advantages that go with a settled community.

The Ranch is abundantly watered. The Company owns large water rights, reservoirs and a pipe system. Ownership of this water holding is vested in ranch owners at Chino, as they buy their lands. We have prepared a pamphlet, which explains the water situation in detail. Ask for it.

Chino Land is sold in ten-acre tracts and in multiples of ten acres. You can buy it with water delivered in cement pipes for $200 an acre—one share of water stock goes with every acre you buy. Or you can buy other Chino Lands—just as good, but not under irrigation—for $100 to $150 an acre. These are in the Chino Artesian Belt, where water can be had in plenty and no well was ever known to fail. Terms on all Chino Tracts are one-fourth cash, balance in one, two, three and four years at six per cent. interest.

About $75,000 worth of Chino Lands have been sold in small tracts during the last sixty days. Present buyers are people who intend actually making their homes on the Ranch. Fully three-fourths of the acreage sold will be improved with buildings and orchards this coming Spring. We still have some 10,000 acres of fine, level land, some of which is especially adapted to Walnuts and deciduous fruits. Orchards of this kind are being developed by many Chino Ranchers—for immediate profits can be made by raising Alfalfa, Potatoes and many other crops between the rows of trees, while the latter are maturing. Come in and talk with us.

DOWN WITH MEN CRY THE WOMEN.

THEY TALK TOO MUCH, IS SURPRISING CONTENTION.

Eight Thousand of Fair Sex, Being Members of Illinois Clubs, Decide to Shut Out Males, Complaining That They Monopolize Discussions and Choose Dry Subjects.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] More than 8000 women, members of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, demanded today that men be excluded hereafter from all the federation's meetings.

The 8000 spoke through the presidents of the women's clubs of the First Congressional district, who, with one or two exceptions, declared themselves against precedents established by the federation.

After considerable discussion, the presidents announced that either the men would have to walk out at future meetings or they themselves would.

The meeting was held in the parlors of the Grand Pacific Hotel and was called especially to protest against what was called the "machine" government of the federation.

It was declared that although the federation was supposed to be composed of women, 28,000 Illinoisans being members, at every annual session gifted women speakers were kept in the background while men consumed the time in speaking on uninteresting subjects.

"Why, at the last meeting of the federation," said Mrs. John F. Thompson, president of the Social Economics Club, "there were eleven men on the programme. There were hundreds of women, gifted and talented, who had to sit back and listen for hours while these men talked.

"And the women were just dying to say something. What in the world do women have a federation for if they're going to bring men in? Don't men get enough chances to talk?"

Mrs. Thompson said the attitude of the federation's government was more like that of a "political machine" than anything else.

Mrs. George Watkins, president of the State Federation, was present, and agreed with the other club representatives on almost every point.

The bill in the Illinois Legislature to put a representative of the women's clubs on the educational commission was indorsed by the meeting.

MONROVIA
MAC INTYRE

Exceptional Opening for a Hotel

For several years Monrovia has had an increasing need for a new and much larger hotel. The opening of the Santa Anita race track has increased this need to a point where Monrovia offers by far the greatest opportunity in California. The actual demand for accommodations would fill a 100-room hotel for five months, without taking into consideration the extra demand that would develop.

Monrovia is undoubtedly the most beautifully located city in Southern California. Its view, climate, shade trees, orange groves, pure water, excellent car connections with Los Angeles, make it the ideal home for both retired and active business men.

Every convenience of a large city—gas, water, electricity, telephones, stores, banks, clubs, library, schools, churches.

BEAUTY SPOT.

FORMAL GARDEN IS SHOW PLACE.

WESTCHESTER PLACE HOME HAS IDEAL SURROUNDINGS.

Terraced Hill Furnishes Many Opportunities to Landscape Gardener. Pergolas, and Succession of Small Lakes Add Beauty to Robert Marsh Place—Many Costly Bronzes.

The handsome and extensive gardens surrounding the Robert Marsh residence on Westchester Place are among the most beautiful in Los Angeles. One group of pictures on this page today shows views of the strikingly-beautiful grounds.

The house stands in a plot 360x385 feet, and faces south and east. To the north the land slopes, a rather sharp curve of the hill being broken by several sets of terraces, grass-grown, and set with trees and shrubs. Immediately adjoining the house on the north is a large pergola, roofed with trellis work, which is supported by brick pillars and corner walls, and which makes a delightful retreat on a hot day. Delicate ferns are cultivated under the pergola, which is lighted with numerous electric bulbs, and is decorated with a number of old Japanese bronzes. A small water basin adjoins the pergola on the north, the overflow of which falls into another pond on the next level of the terraces. From the farther side of this pool another pergola rises, shown in the illustration, from which can be had a magnificent view of the countryside to the northwest and east. Below is another pool, really a small lake, which also is shown in the photograph.

There are several fountains, and goldfish dart about in the sunflected waterhole. The water also can be illuminated at night by electric bulbs. All these ponds are floored and walled with cement, and edged with brick work. Artistic brick walls, steps and flooring, wherever there are paths, lend character to the place. The garden was laid out by the famous landscape artist, Frederick Eaton, who has one of the show places of California at Montecito, the beautiful suburb of Santa Barbara. It probably cost $50,000 as it stands.

Thomas Dugan has sold to George J. Cote a sixty-foot lot on Twenty-seventh street, 500 feet west of Figueroa street, for a consideration of $2600.

BUYS WALNUT GROVE.

Twenty-five Thousand Dollars Is the Price Paid by Colorado Man For Fine Property.

Judge G. Van Hoorebeke of Grand Junction, Colo., has purchased a fifty-two acre walnut grove near Whittier, for $25,000. The buyer was represented by Ramey Bros., and the grantor by Cate & Henderson.

This grove is well located, and is considered a good purchase. It is only a short distance from the Salt Lake Railroad, and is almost directly in line with the proposed electric short line from Los Angeles to Whittier, and also the proposed line from Pasadena to Long Beach. The water right belonging is said to be one of the best in Southern California. The purchaser will occupy the place with his family, and will make extensive improvements.

The same firms also report the sale of a seven-room bungalow at Ocean Park for $7500. The lot is 30x109 feet. Ramey Bros. have also sold to Jennie M. Conkling a lot on West Twenty-eighth street, near Western avenue, 50x133 feet, for $1400. The buyer will improve with a seven-room residence.

WANT CLOSE-IN PROPERTY.

Increasing Demand for High-Grade Residence Sites—Two House Sales in Forest Park.

Strong & Dickinson report an increasing demand for close-in residence property. Within the last few days this firm has sold for Walter Krug two two-story residences.

The house at No. 182 Virgil avenue was bought by A. F. Barnard for $6500. The lot is 50x150 feet. The property is one of the most desirable in the section and will be occupied by the buyer as a home. The other house is at No. 131 Virgil avenue, and was sold to a local investor for about the same consideration. The lot and improvements are similar in character.

A lot on the corner of Second and Virgil streets, in the Forest Park tract, 50x150 feet, was sold to Henry C. Klung for $1500. The buyer will improve at once with a story and a half residence.

The Anderson Mill Company has completed a two-story, eight-room residence at No. 151 Commonwealth avenue, in the Forest Park tract, and is now beginning work on an eight-room, colonial design house at No. 128 Commonwealth avenue. The lots are both 50x150 feet.

GROWING.

MORE PERMITS ARE ISSUED.

VALUATION GETTING LARGER WITH EACH WEEK.

Work Begun on Eighty-Thousand-Dollar Eshman Block on West Seventh Street—Building Materials Much Lower in Price, as Shown by Comparison of Averages.

Two hundred and ninety-five building permits were issued for the month, and have a valuation of $332,838. In the same period last year 278 permits were issued, with a value of $446,542. This is a gain of seventeen permits and a loss of $113,704. In the seven business days ending Friday, January 17, there were 141 permits issued, with a value of $184,763, the last six exceeding the total made by the first eight of the month by $36,688.

One permit for $80,000 was issued during last week, which helped to swell the total. This was for the Gerhard Eshman block on the northwest corner of West Seventh street and St. Vincent Place. This is a seven-story store and loft building of the class A type. Considerable delay in putting in the foundations has been experienced, but it is now probable that the contractors will be able to push the work.

An indication that the cost of ordinary building materials is considerably lower is apparent in the average cost of the class D, one-story frame buildings, 109 permits for which were issued, with a total valuation of only $97,105, or $890 for each job. This is compared with the average for the 251 class D structures, permits for which were taken out in January, 1907, of $1132 each. Following are the classified ward permits of the building department:

	No. of Permits	Val.
Class A, steel frame, one seven-story building	1	$ 80,000
Class C	9	45,062
Class D, 1 story	109	97,105

INQUIRY FOR SMALL TRACTS.

Sales in Monte Vista Exceed Fifteen Thousand Dollars—Demand for Somerset Acres.

Emil Firth states that the inquiry for small tracts is very good. He has sold in the Monte Vista tract fifty-two acres for a consideration of $15,683 to the following parties:

To Caroline Valentine, five and one-half acres on Palmetto avenue, north of Fifth avenue, for $1650. To M. S. Gunn, five and one-half acres, at the corner of Palmetto and Fifth avenue, for $1787.50. To W. J. Diehl, five acres, on Palmetto avenue, south of Fifth avenue, for $1375. To John Zaveallas, eleven acres, on the corner of Palm and Fifth avenue, for $3500. To Charles W. Hinton, five acres, on Fifth avenue, east of Central avenue, for $1250. To W. S. Crouch, five acres, on Fifth avenue, near Magnolia avenue, for $1875. To J. S. Aroner, five and one-half acres, on Palm avenue, south of State street, for $1671. To Margaret Mahin, five acres, at the corner of Palmetto avenue and Grand avenue, for $1625. To Walter A. Lewis, three lots in the Monte Vista townsite, for $450. To S. A. Lewis, the corner of State street and Central avenue, for $500. Mr. Lewis will at once erect a store on this property.

Monte Vista is within the city limits of Ontario, thirty-four miles from Los Angeles, and adjoins some of the best orange groves in the San Gabriel Valley. The Salt Lake and the Southern Pacific railroads pass the tract, and have a station on the property. Three large packing-houses are on the north line. The Monte Vista school is one block away, and the tract is one-half mile from the business center of Ontario.

Emil Firth also reports a large demand for Somerset Acres on the Santa Ana electric line. This tract contains 1000 acres, and is cut up into plots from one to ten acres in size.

MORE WORK IN SIGHT.

Market Building Planned for Third and San Pedro—Gymnasium and Playgrounds, Too.

Details of new work in the hands of the local architects and designers indicate a gratifying return to activity in the building line. The following items are taken from the Builder and Contractor:

Charles E. Shattuck, is preparing plans for an immense market building, to be erected on the east side of Central avenue, between Third and Fourth streets, for the Los Angeles Market Company. It will be of brick, two stories in height, and will have a frontage of 430 feet on Central avenue. The first floor will be subdivided into thirty-two market stores. There will be two thirty-two-foot driveways to permit ingress and egress to the rear portion of the structure. There will be six stairways leading to the second story, which is to be divided into offices, a restaurant, box factory and lofts for storage purposes. It will have pressed brick facing, plate glass front windows, composition roofing, asphaltum floor and toilet and laboratory to each store.

The Drama---Players, Playhouses, Gossip of the Stage.

TOPICS OF THE STAGE.

Had we followed our friend into the brilliant gayety of Maxim's or the aristocratic seclusion of Lemaire's, watched him upon the streets of Pesth or walked with him through the never-sleeping Unter den Linden—I think we would have found very much the same George Barnum. You couldn't change G. W. B. by a mere matter of surroundings. You would find him the same student of human nature whether he rested in Los Angeles or voyaged to an undiscovered country.

Mr. Barnum's theatrical observations in Europe are highly interesting, but not more so than his personal anecdotes.

I think Mr. Barnum, by a number of voyages across, is just beginning to know Europe thoroughly enough to be at home in every one of its famous cities, from Frankfort to Vienna. His latest trip was a study of theatrical conditions, and further, the causes of those conditions.

"Theatrical art in Europe," said he, the other day, "is resting upon a solid foundation, as far as the continent is concerned. The drama is taken seriously, and as a result of this plays are put on by actors, by men who know, instead of being hurled together in hap-hazard fashion.

"As far as productions are concerned, we beat them every day in the year. As far as intelligent acting is concerned—the formation of a dramatic whole—we seldom approach them.

"There is a strange dissimilarity of things in England and in the continental countries—Germany, for instance. I saw 'The Merry Widow' done in the latter country, without any particular production, and later in England, given upon an elaborate scale. Yet the German presentation was the most convincing one. The dramatic spirit of the thing got hold of you and gripped you tight. You rose to the situations—the whole audience rose.

"There is one passage in which Sonia drops her glove, and the Prince, picking it up, hands it to her across his arm. The scene is exquisitely subtle, and if done with grace is really an intense dramatic moment in the development of the play—a turning point of the plot.

"The Germans received this bit in a constrained and somewhat tense silence. The English people invariably laughed. And yet it wasn't because the Germans were profound or stolid; the dramatic value of the thing simply got by the British audience. The Germans, right down into the spirit of the play, were constantly putting themselves into the position of the actors. The Britons were taking the affair in their customary light way, and when it got profoundly serious, it became funny.

"The German stage at the present time seems to stand upon a sound basis. Schoenthau and Von Moser, collaborators, are the best farce writers in the Empire, and by this time are veritably adding to the gayety of nations.

"The German curtain, as a rule, rises at 7:30 o'clock in the evening, and the cafés begin to do business anywhere from 10 o'clock on. The German actor is a model of conscientious devotion to his profession, and sometimes carries his professionalism to absurd limits.

"I remember that I met a German actor of considerable dignity, and, as a matter of politeness, I invited him to take an early dinner with me; it was scarcely past the middle of the afternoon. 'I thank you,' he replied graciously, 'but I cannot; I play tonight.' So I went to see him play, expecting to behold a leading man appear; he was the servant, with three lines to speak.

"But as I've said, over there it's not a matter of largeness in assignment, for the German actors hold everything at a serious estimate. Whether you play heroes or slaveys, the end is the same, in the actor's mind.

"For the Paris productions they have a stage director, an assistant for this, another assistant for that, and so on, until it takes four or five men to put on a production. And yet these men don't get in one another's way; they have their special fields of work; each is responsible for his own division, and an expert in his line.

"On the German stages they have an inspector of costume and make-up. If your beard is not in the period it has to come off; if your hose has just a shade of incorrectness, you must change; if a woman wears light blue where dark blue would have been more appropriate, she cannot go on until the substitution is made.

"And in most of the continental theaters there are experienced men to make the actor up. That is not a work left to the raw and frequently bungling hands of the amateur.

"Nor can a man become an actor without a rudimentary training in the essentials of stage deportment. By that I do not mean a 'dramatic school' instruction, but a course in fencing, dancing and kindred subjects. A man must learn what to do with his feet, where to dispose his hands, how to stand and how to walk—all before he can get on the German stage to play the smallest part."

Mr. Barnum lit another cigarette, and looked out of the window.

"I wonder who it is in America who hands out that talk about the all-night gayety of Paris?" he remarked reflectively.

"With a party of American friends, I was turned out of Maxim's at 1 o'clock in the morning because they were shutting up the place. There are certain Bohemian resorts that do an all-night business, but to the casual wayfarer the French capital is everywhere slumbering the sleep of the just shortly past midnight.

"Berlin, on the other hand, never sleeps. Unter den Linden at 2 in the morning is almost as lively as in the early evening. There is a procession of pedestrians, the purring glide of motor cars, the rumble and rattle of heavier vehicles—all as though the day had scarcely ended, instead of standing at its beginning. And it's not revelry or dissipation, either; seems to be the ordinary course of events. Why, there are people in Berlin who get up and breakfast at 12:30 in the morning."

Mr. Barnum paused, and smiled a reminiscent, far-away smile.

"I'll never forget how lonesome I was one day in Paris, sitting with a cup of coffee on the sidewalk in front of a café. I was going down, down, down into the blue, when suddenly around the corner popped old man Crane (William H.) and George Ade. They sent a whoop into the sky that you could have heard for a square.' Mr. Barnum paused.

"Did you get glad right away?"

"Well—yes. In half an hour I had forgotten that I had ever been lonesome."

Mlle. Zelie de Lussan, Prima-Donna Soprano.

Mr. Barnum describing his dinner at Frederic Lemaire's would make an epicure hungry. If you read the magazines you must know Frederic Lemaire through them, at least. He is the "duck man," with his little café which holds scarcely a dozen tables, and his mysterious process of preparing pressed duck in a silver press which hasn't been equalled since the days when the epicures of the Neronian epoch slaughtered all the rare birds about Rome to get their tongues.

"I entertained six at Lemaire's one evening," said the actor, smacking his lips reminiscently, "and it cost me 525 francs, but it was worth it—and it was my only 'blow out' on the trip."

GOLDFADEN PASSES.

Shakespeare of the Ghetto Enters the Promised Land—Leaves Great Record.

The most interesting and important character in the literary and theatrical life of the Ghetto passed away when Abraham Goldfaden died yesterday morning, says a New York Sun of last week, at his home, No. 218 East Eleventh street. He was a poet, dramatist, philosopher, friend and intimate of Dr. Hertzel and Max Nordau, colaborer with Israel Zangwill in the Zionist movement, pensioner of Baron Rothschild. For the last three years Goldfaden had written steadily for the Yiddish theaters of this city, and it was in comedies of his that Bertha Kalish was playing on the Bowery when she was "discovered" and transplanted to Broadway.

Sixty-eight years ago Abraham Goldfaden was born at Constantine, Russia, of parents too poor to send him to a university, but while he worked as a child to do his part for the support of the family, he prepared himself for academic work, and later, still supporting himself, he was graduated from the University of Odessa.

His first literary work to bring him fame was a poem, "Progress," a strong appeal to his fellow Jews for a nationalizing movement long before the efforts of Zangwill and others in that direction attracted world-wide attention. Throughout all his other activities he continued his Zionist work; it was that which brought him Baron Rothschild as a patron, and his last words before he died were, "Ach, mein Gott, Zion!"

After his first important poem Goldfaden for a few years led a romantic life, writing songs and singing them to his improvised tunes as he tramped about many countries of Europe. A minstrel, but a minstrel with a deep motive, for he sang to his people of their former greatness as a nation and pictured to them the national greatness they could again attain if they would but return to Zion.

After he ceased wandering about in his minstrel life, Goldfaden took to play-writing, his first play to be produced being a comedy called "Schmendrik." This did not have a success, which encouraged his friends to hope for his career in dramatic literature, but he believed in himself and soon justified that belief.

He soon wrote a play in the form of a book for a light opera called "Salamith," which he was glad to sell to a Budapest manager for 30 gulden. The story is, and the Yiddish actors here believe it, that the purchaser of "Salamith" made 1,000,000 gulden out of the musical play, and it is certain that it has been translated for stage use into very many languages. Then he went to Paris to live and wrote many plays and poems and philosophical essays. His fame as a scholar and poet extended to Jewish colonies all over the world, and in many countries clubs were formed and named in his honor, where Jews met to read his poems and study his philosophy.

There are four theaters in New York devoted exclusively to Yiddish dramas—the Kalisch, People's, Grand and Thalia. Their patronage is large and constant. Magistrate Roesch, who has lived among or been officially related to the people of the Ghetto all his life, said to a Sun reporter recently: "A Jew who earns $12 a week spends $2 a week for the theater. New Yorkers outside the Ghetto do not know what an amusement-loving people those of the Ghetto are."

The four theaters named gave Goldfaden $20 a month, and he wrote for them. He had a technical knowledge of the stage and rehearsed his own plays, which were generally comedies of Yiddish home life, usually set back in time a century or two for the sake of costume.

THE LOCAL WEEK.

Edward M. Rose's political drama, "A Square Deal," will be the offering of the Burbank Theater stock company today. The piece is new to the Pacific Coast, but has a creditable record in the East.

The equipment has been prepared with especial attention to correct detail, and an effort will be made for a record production.

The cast is large, including the entire company and a large number of auxiliary players.

George W. Barnum will return to the Belasco stage tomorrow night, playing the central character in Augustus Thomas's dramatization of Charles Dana Gibson's series of drawings, "The Education of Mr. Pipp."

He will be supported by Eleanor Carey, as the wife and mother, and by Misses Katherine Emmett and Florence Smythe, as the two daughters.

"Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," George M. Cohan's musical exuberance, will be seen at the Mason Operahouse for the entire coming week.

Scott Welch returns in the principal role, and a production of general effectiveness is assured by the management.

"Dolly Varden" will be presented at the Los Angeles Theater today, by Healy's opera company. It's September production will be remembered.

Daphne Pollard will be the Dolly, and Frank Bertrand the Lord Gayspark, the remainder of the cast being practically the same as at the last presentation here.

"The Holy City," last season's unprecedented financial success at the Auditorium, will be revived tomorrow night in all its spectacular details, and with Florence Stone again in the role of Mary Magdalene.

There will be an entire change of programme at the Orpheum tomorrow night, with the exception of Mlle. Zelie de Lussan, who will remain, offering, however, an entirely new list of musical numbers.

Lillian Burkhart and her company will return from the north, presenting "The Santa Claus Lady," a pretty little sketch. Gallagher and Barrett have a travesty on the military drama, entitled "The Battle of Too-Soon." The Three Keatons, including diminutive Buster, a comedian not at all unknown to fame, have a lively comedy act. Ralph Johnstone has an allegedly sensational bicycle act. The juggling McBanns, promised last week, will be seen in a club-manipulating turn.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer," dramatized from the popular novel of that name, will be seen today at the Grand Operahouse.

The story is that of a young Boston lawyer and a blind girl, whose gentle love story has numerous episodes.

The play was last seen here at the Mason Operahouse.

A green parrot and an auctioneer provide the fun in "A Costly Present," the Fischer offering for the coming week. Several new song numbers will be heard, and a number of parodies by the company's new comedian, Al Dashington.

MEAL-TICKET.

YOHE ENTICES NEW "ANGEL."

SAN FRANCISCO MAN NOW HER FOLLOWER.

Candidate for Heart's Third Empire Said to Have Lavished Money and Jewels on Her, and May Be Preparing for a New "Starring Tour" of the Actress.

In the person of a San Francisco millionaire, whose name has figured conspicuously in the public prints within the last few months, May Yohe, whose matrimonial adventures and misfits made her an international figure, has acquired another angel.

The Call is responsible for the story.

Though time and an unkind fate have dimmed the former glamour and fascination of this actress, she showed while in San Francisco that she still possessed the qualities which drew Lord Hope and later Capt. Putnam Bradlee Strong to her.

When the aristocrat and the New Yorker abandoned her, May Yohe's angels flew to other stars.

The shadow of her former self, May Yohe struggled alone with no one to care for her but her press agent. "Angels" refused to see in her a good investment, and May came back to San Francisco as the head liner in a "ten-twent-thirt" production.

Attracted by the pathetic tale of woe, hashed up by the press agent, the local millionaire became interested, then curious, and finally would not rest until he met her. He had but little difficulty. May flew to him with a gurgle of delight, and in the prospect of future fat years made herself so agreeable that the millionaire pointed at his automobile and hinted at a ride.

It took May just thirty seconds to get on her hat. The millionaire smiled, May beamed, and the press agent prayed that the two might be arrested for fast driving, with consequent publicity. But they were not.

A few hours later the auto dashed up Van Ness avenue, and came to a stop at Shreve's jewelry store. May and her new angel alighted, and an hour later the former radiated with $3000 worth of diamonds on her person, for which the millionaire had passed over his check.

This was but the beginning, and arrangements are being made whereby May Yohe will, next season, blossom forth in something like her old style—maybe.

Dramagraphs.

Charles Klein is spending the winter in Egypt.

D'Annunzio's "Nave" has been produced in Rome.

Martha Morton has two new plays under way, both for prominent stars.

Cecil and William C. DeMille have named their new play for Cyril Scott "The Trail."

Anton Hekking, the German 'cellist, is touring Belgium and France as a member of the Wurmser-Boucherit-Hekking Trio.

Clyde Fitch's play "The Truth" has been played in Budapest—the first play by an American author to be played in the Hungarian language.

Louis Lipsky and Hermann Bernstein are at work on a new play for Louie Mann, which William A. Brady will produce in the spring.

Henry Bernstein's new work "La Fondre" will be seen here shortly, the American rights having been secured by Charles Frohman.

Gaston Devores's success "La Sacrifice" will be given an American production by the Shuberts. It is on a successful run at the Theater Anlvine, Paris.

Frank Stayton's new play which he is to write for E. H. Sothern will probably not be seen until next season, owing to the distinguished actor's success in "Dundreary."

Charles Dalmorès, of the Manhattan, has signed a contract for three appearances in the Frankfort Opera in May. He will sing "Lohengrin" in German and "Samson" and "Don José" in French.

Stephen Phillips has made a big success abroad by his latest work, a dramatization of Sir Walter Scott's "The Bride of Lammermoor." Martin Harvey has given it a great scenic production.

The Lancers, produced at Daly's Theater, New York, proves to be an adaptation of a German farce, "Peace and War." The late Augustin Daly used the same source for material for "The Passing Regiment."

Joe Weber has been receiving suggestions for a title for his burlesque of "The Merry Widow," and has favored "The Merry Kiddo" for the new show. The name was selected by a young lad, who says the Prince is the real character of the piece.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Kubelik is about the only musician of modern times who occupies the place of absolute romance that the idealist always assigns—imaginatively—to the artist.

Here is a slender, pale youth who has accumulated a fortune, acquired a castle and a vast estate, married a noblewoman whom he loves and who truly loves him, and has become a gentle sort of feudal lord, with a great retinue of subjects.

It is la Boheme for most music folk. Kubelik is just exception enough to prove the rule.

Kubelik is very much of a man outside his music. He has completely mastered several languages, one of these being a tongue so alien as the English, and is reputed to have a masterful head in business matters.

He recently wrote some extensive autobiographic notes in English. some excerpts of which are reproduced here, without alteration: "Into my life has been crowded, I think, far more than falls to the average man in his first twenty-seven years. Most of this experience has come to me in the past nine years, or since my graduation from the Prague conservatory.

"One of my most blessed memories is the modest little cottage in which I was born at Michle, near Prague, and the small market garden in which my sainted father worked early and late to provide a living for his family, and the struggle which he made to educate his children properly. I often think, perhaps with tears in my eyes, of the rude violin my father made out of cigar boxes, and upon which he gave me my first and most valued music lessons.

"Like all Bohemian peasants, my father knew and loved good music. He could perform on several instruments, and to play, to read about and to discuss music was his greatest delight. He had great hopes for the future of all his children—hopes which his small income seemed little likely to bring true. I am happy to say that since becoming affluent I have been able to carry out many of his plans for the other children. One of my younger brothers is now in the Prague Conservatory.

"Music, it may be imagined, early became a passion with me. In truth, I cannot recall the time when it was not so. As all childish fancies roam far afield, I did have at the age of 8, indeed, an idea of being an explorer. My father had read much of the adventures of Livingstone and Stanley, and had told me such wonderful stories about them I was filled with the fire of discovery.

"At first I went to an ordinary school. I did not love my other lessons like music, but my teachers were satisfied, and I took prizes. For the lessons I always got first place, but for conduct—no, I was not first. One day the school director, who was also the singing master, asked me to play a violin accompaniment, for, although I was but 8 years old, people had already spoken of me as a 'wunderkind.' I gave some surprise by playing at once the accompaniment for two voices, and then the director bade me play a concerto by Berlioz. When I had finished he made a long speech to the school, and named me as the image to be followed. He was very kind. But my father did not wish me to play to audiences as a child, and I only did so two or three times.

"Whatever I was studying, the violin always helped me. At my school there were five classes through which pupils must pass before entering the higher, known as the Citizens' School, but on my father introducing me, I was allowed to go from the fourth clas into the Citizens'. The same favor was shown me at the Prague Conservatory, where I was admitted at 12, although the entrance age is 14. In those days I thought the woods and hills around Prague the largest in the world. Now they do not seem quite so large, but still very romantic. The little cottage where I was born is today the center of the electric light station, and the garden from which my father drew all his resources is covered with a plant which gives light to my neighbors. Even in my old home I never had any big ambition except to become a violinist, and from my seventh year I knew I would be one.

"It was in 1892 that I entered the Prague Conservatorium, and I left there in 1898, when I was 18 years old I found my six years were rather monotonous. During the last year my father was very ill, and he could hardly listen while I played to him. He died that year. It was very sad. He had believed in me always. He was my first teacher, and he died just before the public gave me the reward for which he had struggled.

"On my first tour, which began soon afterward, I was nearly killed in a railway collision. Beyond this averted accident, I was encouraged in every way. I felt driven forward, and have never looked back. Sometimes I have been very dissatisfied with myself, but never with my audiences, who were most kind and sympathetic. At the moment it seems to me that I have never been particularly impressed by the music of any one great master above another. I explore and love them all. When very young I liked modern music best, but now it is different, and every day I sway more toward classic music. It seems to come from heaven, and is truer, while the modern, if not of earth, is close to earthly things. It is more human.

"My father's death threw added responsibilities on my shoulders, but Budapest, where I made my first success, started me with a lighter heart. When I played in Vienna, Prague, Italy, Monte Carlo and during the last four years I have been most kindly received in every large city of Europe from Madrid to St. Petersburg, and also all over America. There the quickness and sympathy of the audiences were a great pleasure to me. I hope to visit still more distant shores, for I am planning to go to Australia.

"I am fortunate in meeting so many famous people. Dvorak, my own countryman, was the first great artist I ever met. He was certainly a great man, even in my youthful esteem, but I can't say I ever felt awed or dazzled by his presence to that extent which might reasonably be expected. But then you have a proverb about the comparatively small figure a prophet cuts in his own country. Still I think it was this great man's eccentricity which made me regard him in an intimate light. He was so odd that with others I laughed at his oddness, and very often I heard him criticised for his most unusual greeting to life-long friends of 'Who are you? I don't know you.'

"The Queen of Roumania, a most interesting critic and a most sympathetic one, wrote a fairy tale on my life and dedicated it to me. I am sorry I did not ask her for the story. The Roumanian Crown Princess has given me a picture on which she has written some excellent verses. The Queen of Italy and the King of Wurtemberg are among those I have been privileged to meet, but I think that my visit to the King's palace at Belgrade was perhaps the most exciting of my royal interviews.

"The late King Alexander gave a large concert party at which I was invited to play, and I well remember my great curiosity to see the unfortunate Queen Draga, who was new to the regal state. They were both most gracious, the young King gave me a decoration, and at the close of the concert I joined the royal party at supper. All the evening I had been feeling very ill, but at supper this feeling became so acute that I felt I must hasten to my hotel. As steadily as possible I left the room, and as it happened I encountered no one to whom I could offer any explanation of my sudden exit. I rushed to my apartment, and when I was well enough to think of anything outside of my unfortunate illness, I was filled with chagrin over my rude departure, and half-paralyzed, fearing that the next day the King would demand the return of the decoration he had so kindly bestowed. Meanwhile my absence had been noticed, and I learned later that my strange departure had caused considerable excitement. No one could give any explanation, and the King, fearing that some necessary ceremony or compliment had been neglected, summoned his chamberlain and questioned him closely as to the manner of my summons and reception, matters which were later explained to every one's satisfaction.

"Of all the honors tended me, none has impressed me so strongly as my reception by the late Pope Leo XIII. That was in March, 1901, and instead of the throne room, I was allowed to await his coming in His Holiness's private apartments. As the tall, slight figure, clad in white, entered, his brilliant dark eyes softened, and taking my hand, he embraced me. He called me by my first name and said, "Jan, my dear Jan, I know you.' He spoke in Italian, in a high and seemingly far away voice, and continued: 'Cardinal Vaszady asked for Knight Commandership of the Order of St. Gregory for you, but it seemed to me you were too young to merit such a distinction, and I put him off, but he says though young in years, you are in art a master, so I resolved to grant you this great decoration, with my best wishes for your continuation in the career you have started, to the honor of your country and your distinguished art.' On finding that I had not brought my violin he added: 'What a pity I cannot hear you. It would have been such a pleasure to me. Cardinal Parrochi, who heard Paganini, has been telling me how wonderful you are.' In closing the interview he gave me two rosaries inclosed in silver egg cases, and according me his blessing said: 'One for you and one for your mother whom they say you so love.'

"Soon after my marriage to the Countess Marianne Szaky-Czellum, we were both honored with an audience by the present Pope who gave me a large picture of himself on which he has inscribed a papal blessing. During my visits to Italy, I have also had the honor of receiving the personal congratulations of Mascagni and Leoncavallo.

"It was in my twentieth year that I first went to England, in May, 1900, and I have felt at home there ever since. I truly value the great compliment paid me by the Philharmonic Society, which gave me the Beethoven grand medal of honor and made me an honorary member. The reigning family have been most gracious to me, and I am proud to recall that I was the last artist to play to the late Queen Victoria, and the first to his present Majesty, King Edward. On the King's birthday celebration at Sandringham, I was presented to the German Emperor, who seemed to know a lot about violins and who asked me several questions regarding the American public. I have also played at Buckingham Palace and Marlborough House."

Ellis Club.

Especially effective numbers have been arranged in a programme of great promise for the Ellis Club concert, on Tuesday evening.

The piece-de-resistance will be Herman Mohr's "To the Genius of Music," a stirring male chorus, with a very beautiful soprano obligato, which will be sung by Mrs. Edmond S. Shank. Other numbers are John Hyatt Brewer's "Grim Winter, So Bold;" Wickenhauser's "Night Long;" Protherhou's "To Me Thou Art a Flower," and Chadwick's "The Boy and the Owl."

Delicately suggestive of memorial is Sullivan's "The Long Day Closes."

Another soloist will be Miss Lalla Fagge, violinist, who has just returned from Europe.

"GENIUS" EFFORTS.

Amateur Emanations Hurled at the Music Masters by Obscure but Zealous Disciples.

The experience of Heinrich Conried with a composer who sent an opera to him and afterward sued him to get it back, is only a bit more surprising than that of most of the well-known musicians of the city, says last week's Musical America. Mr. Conried's contention is that he did not solicit the opera, but that it was sent on the composer's own initiative, and that he, the impresario, had imposed upon him, in addition to all his other cares, the duty of taking care of the score and seeing that it was returned safely.

The popular singers of the operahouses, the pianists and public performers of reputation are constantly receiving the unsolicited works of composers. The New York Sun has been investigating, and has ascertained that there is scarcely an artist of note who is not a sort of a target by post.

The works received may not be the scores of operas, but in a way they are as much trouble, for they are deposited in the offices of hotels, or sent by registered post in such numbers that to look after them is a nuisance.

Then the composers get back at the unfortunate artists to whom they are sent with all sorts of threats unless they are returned on time. Naturally, most of the piano compositions go to Paderewski while he is in this country, and the song writers send their works to Mme. Sembrich, who has already placed so many of their compositions on her programmes.

Paderewski received one day from a pianist in this city of whom he had heard through a friend the score of what purported to be a concerto for piano and orchestra.

It was a hefty package securely tied up and accompanied by a letter in which the composer begged the pianist to look through his work. M. Paderewski handed the package over to his secretary, intending to look over it when he had leisure.

When he opened the package he found to his astonishment that it contained nothing but blank composition paper. On the title page was the number of the concerto and its designation, with the composer's name, and after that sheets of blank paper.

The object of this trick was presumably to awaken interest for the pianist in M. Paderewski. The composer was posing as a neglected American composer and had no idea that a virtuoso so busy as the Polish pianist would ever come to the consideration of the package which pretended to contain the concerto. M. Paderewski returned the package to the composer without any comment.

Not long ago, Mme. Sembrich received in a registered mail package a piece of brown wrapping paper on which was scribbled in pencil what purported to be a song.

The words and msuic were there, and to a letter accompanying this composition were signed the names of two Italians with an address in The Bronx far over near the shores of the Sound. Written in very bad English was a request to let the senders have an immediate opinion as to the merits of the composition.

It was laid aside, and within a week came another letter in threatening terms demanding the immediate return of the brown wrapping paper composition. In two days more there came a threat of legal proceedings unless the song was returned. Finally the original letter containing the address was found and it was possible to send the song by a messenger to the Bronx composers.

Mme. Schumann-Heink is also the object of this artistic bombardment from the rising composer who is anxious to get a hearing for his work. She received among other compositions part of a prison scene from a new "Faust" by a young composer who did not consider that Gounod, Boito or Berlioz had properly put into musical form the drama of Goethe, and was prepared to give to the world an opera which should contain both parts of Goethe's work.

He sent to Mme. Schumann-Heink the score of the scene of Marguerite in prison, as he was most anxious to have the music sung by the famous contralto, the Goethe heroine being in his version a contralto and not a soprano. Mme. Schumann-Heink tried the music, and something in it appealed to her enough to make her say that she would sing it in concert if the composer would consent to shorten the scene.

As the excessive length of the scene was in large measure the result of repetition, it could really have been done with no damage to the musical content of the scene, and as the composer was unknown such an opportunity ought to have delighted his heart. He took quite another view of the matter, however, and bitterly resented the audacity of the singer in daring to criticize such an epoch-making composition as he considered his scene and aria to be.

"So you see," said the amiable Mme. Schumann-Heink, "that is what I got for trying to be good to a young composer."

Perugino's Madonna.

Do you know it? Either side a triptych
Stands an armed Archangel—as to guard her—
Glorious—with great wings, and shining armor;
In the middle panel, pure and tender,
Clasping close her hands, with adoration
(All the Mother's love—the Mortal's worship—
In their yearning, in their reverence painted,) Gazes Mary on the Child. A seraph
Holds Him, smiling at her knees; and, smiling,
Looks she down, with spirit humbly-happy,
Full—to heart's brim—of the Peace of Heaven.
Reverence mingles with the Mother's passion,
But no touch of sadness, or of doubting.
Far away a river runneth seaward
(Little now—like Truth—like Truth to widen,)
Leads the light across a blue dim country,
Under peaks—by forests—to the ocean:
Soft and warm, a pearly sky broods over
Where the three Winged-Ones, at the Father's footstool,
Sing the "peace and good will" song to mortals.

The Blue Drapery.
From a painting by John Hubbard Rich.

Pictures by Mr. Ray.

Among the pleasures of winter in Los Angeles—and by no means the least of them—are the one-man shows held in the various picture galleries. They are now arriving in flocks, and are keeping the art lover busy. Last week Carl Oscar Borg exhibited his latest California landscapes at the Woman's Club House this week Joseph Johnson Ray, Alice M. Dutton and John Hubbard Rich are exhibiting, the first two in our city, the last one in Pasadena.

Joseph Johnson Ray is a young illustrator who, coming from Philadelphia a year or two ago, has only within the last few months taken up painting. All the pictures he shows, and there are thirty-eight of them, were done since last June, proving that Mr. Ray's industry is at least as great as his courage.

The canvases exhibited in the Blanchard Gallery, from the 15th to the 29th of this month, are careful studies of nature by a man of strong individuality and absolute sincerity. Mr. Ray has endeavored to paint what he saw, and has passed by every other man's vision and method. The result is often hardness and crudity, of course, because the artist has not yet mastered the technique of brush and pigment. But for all that, I feel assured that, ultimately, after some years of this same careful and painstaking study, Mr. Ray will paint pictures which are as full of beauty and insouciance as they are of truth to nature.

Indeed, he already gives us, in the present exhibition, two or three canvases of much technical excellence and sterling artistic worth. The little picture called "A Gray Day," for instance, is an exquisite bit, tender in feeling and color, and handled with remarkable skill. A painter of years of experience might be proud to claim it as his own. It indicates what the young artist will do all the time, and even much better, when he once learns to control his materials. Today, his pigments are not his willing servants, but his relentless taskmasters.

Another good picture is "The Sand Dunes No. 1," with a fine play of color in the weeds and shrubs that grow here and there in the drifted sand, and with a sky and clouds that are well painted. "Looking Toward the Mesa" has also a beautifully dappled sky. Indeed, there are good points in almost all of Mr. Ray's canvases, especially in his skies, though they are often closely allied with some startlingly bad ones. His drawing is solid and firm—too firm, in fact. He must learn to forget his lines, he must see simple masses, colors, values.

His portraits, too, suffer from too much drawing. The artist has sought for lines and contours, instead of masses and planes, and as a result he has over-modeled. He should forget, for a time, that there are curves in nature, and see only the angles. Yet there is strong characterization in these various portraits of men and women, a genuine insight into the soul.

I, for one, shall look forward with much interest to Joseph Johnson Ray's next exhibition of pictures. Unless I have read all the signs wrongly, he will by that time have eliminated many or all of his present glaring faults as a painter. He is too much in earnest to be balked by difficulties, too honest to be satisfied with anything less than complete mastery of his medium. I may also add, his love of art and out-door nature is too strong to permit him to do anything but paint. I predict that some day his hand will obey, absolutely, the bidding of his spirit. On that day he will rank as one of the strongest and truest painters in our midst.

Mr. Rich's Exhibition.

An exhibition of pictures which will undoubtedly prove to be one of the strongest and most interesting of the winter, opened in the Green Gallery, No. 384 East Colorado street, Pasadena, last Monday, to continue till the 25th of this month. It comprises thirty-two canvases in oils from the brush of John Hubbard Rich, landscapes, portraits and genre pictures.

Mr. Rich, who arrived recently from Boston, has been made instructor in some of the painting classes of the Los Angeles School of Art and Design. He was awarded the Paige traveling scholarship by the Boston Art Museum, and many of the pictures he now shows were painted on this momentous trip of two years. He is a beautiful colorist and an able draughtsman, and his method of laying on paint is that of the advanced school of painters of today. His sense for harmony and tone is keen and exceedingly refined.

Among his portraits, most of which are, strictly speaking, artistic "arrangements" rather than portraits, one of the most charming is "The Blue Drapery," a graceful and pretty young woman in a flowered kimono, who sits in a pensive attitude, reading. The dark-green vase to the left makes a fine note of contrast in a picture that vibrates with atmosphere and is marvellously harmonious in its color scheme.

Other notable pictures in this collection, which I shall speak of at more length in next week's Art and Artists, are "Peasant Woman, Moret," "Yellow Light," "Girl at Window," "Lilacs," "The 'Cello," "Marche, Moret," "A Cup of Tea," "Moret," "The Dam, Moret," and "Court Yard, Moret."

ART NOTES.

The exhibition of pictures by Carl Oscar Borg, which closed at the Woman's Clubhouse this week, was an artistic triumph and also something of a financial success. A number of pictures were sold, among them being "On the Lonely Shore," an oil landscape, which was bought by the Friday Morning Club, whose members had so kindly given Mr. Borg the use of the exhibition rooms.

An interesting exhibition of the recent work of Martin J. Jackson will be held at the Steckel Gallery, beginning on the first day of February and continuing for two weeks. About twenty-five canvases will be shown, landscapes and marines in oils and water colors.

Mr. Mohler of the Arroyo Verde will hold an exhibition of about twenty-five water colors at the Baker Gallery, in South Pasadena, beginning January 22 and continuing for two weeks. He will also exhibit some of his oils at his Arroyo Verde studio in January, notice of date to be given later.

Charles Percy Austin has left Denver, and is now on his way to Northern Italy, where he will remain for a year or more. In all probability Hanson Puthuff will join him in the summer. Mr. Puthuff is now in Chicago.

C. P. Neilson, who is now painting and teaching in San Diego, was in Los Angeles last week

Places were marked with bouquets of bride roses, attached to which were plain cards with the guest's name in gold. These were tied to the back of the chair with large bows of red ribbon. A miniature photograph of Miss Holterhoff in an attractive frame, which the hostess brought from Italy for the occasion, was given to each guest, and Miss Holterhoff received a framed miniature of Mrs. Shaler. In compliment to Mr. and Mrs. William McCoy, who were married recently at Newton Center, Mass., Dr. and Mrs. J. C. McCoy of No. 17 Barnard Park, parents of the groom, entertained with a large and fashionable reception Friday evening. In the receiving line were Dr. and Mrs. Robert J. De Nubila Brothers' Orchestra furnished music during the evening. Thursday evening Dr. and Mrs. McCoy entertained with a similar affair in honor of their son and daughter-in-law. The house, which is a large, old-fashioned home, was made even more charming with bright blossoms and greenery. The whole lower floor was canopied with asparagus plumosis; in the hall great masses of poinsettias, red carnations and geraniums were used to advantage, while the lights were softened with red silk shades. The reception-room was fragrant with white blossoms. An arch of greenery was erected in one end, suspended from which was a true lovers' knot of Roman hyacinths, maiden-hair ferns and violets. The mantle was banked with the same flowers and greenery, and the lights were subdued with green shades. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy received beneath the arch and lovers' knot. Yellow was the prevailing color in the living-room, where yellow-shaded candles were used for lighting. Acacia and other yellow blossoms were combined in a most becoming decorative scheme. The dining-room, which is furnished in old mahogany, was done in pink. A Cluny lace cloth and a high-handed basket filled with pink roses ornamented the table. Quantities of day-break carnations also were used and old-fashioned candelabra, with pink candles, completed the effect. Mrs. McCoy wore her wedding gown of white messaline, lace-trimmed, and the hostess was attired in white lace over lavender.

Pasadena.

THE largest and most noteworthy social event of the past week was the reception given Friday afternoon by Mrs. Henry B. Smilax, pink roses and aurellia ornamented the living-room; the den was bright with red carnation and ivy, and the dining-room was exquisitely ornamented with quantities of white marguerites, Gloir Dijon roses and yellow narcissus. Mrs. Stehman was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Henry Miller of Redding, Pa. Among the other unbonneted women were Mmes. Norman Bridge, O. Daniels of Los Angeles; Malcolm J. McLeod, Holloway I. Stuart, Fred Brown, Charles A. Gardner, Clapp and Miss Cameron. The table in the dining-room was decorated with narcissus, and all the accessories were in pale yellow. Here Mmes. George Stimson, E. K. Macomber, Robert J. Burdette, James Swan and Clinton P. Morehouse presided in turn, and were assisted by Misses Kate Macomber, Gladys Gardner, Mabel Love and Madeline Barnes. Misses Muriel Laing, Louise Austin, Ophelia Stimson and Constance McClintock presided over the punch table. An orchestra furnished music during the reception hours, when 300 guests were entertained.

Fred Muller, formerly secretary-treasurer of the New Orleans Board of Trade, has been elected secretary of the Board of Trade of Portland, Or., and will assume his duties February 1. Mr. Muller was born in Germany thirty-four years ago, and has been a resident of New Orleans for the past fourteen years, coming to Portland only recently.

HUMANITARIANS.

THE MARCHIONESS OF MACMAHON has set a new fashion among the noble ladies of France. She has founded a dispensary for sick children and has enrolled under her banner as nurses ladies representing the fine flower of French aristocracy. It is necessary to emphasize this fact, for it is mainly because they do represent the royalist society of France that she has induced them to enter this service. Among her assistants are the Baroness of Pinsonniere, Mlle. Falcou, Baroness of Bouillerie, Mme. Bourniat and Mlle. Sabran-Ponteves. The technical details of the work are directed by Dr. Quinton, who has devised a new sort of therapeutics which may be roughly described as consisting of injections of sea water. Some of the results have been remarkable, the children most benefited being sufferers from gastro-enteric affections. The Duchess of Sutherland, who has studied the workings of the dispensary, says she shall found similar dispensaries in Edinburgh and other places in Great Britain.

ARTISTS.

PAUL BARTLETT, sculptor, George H. Leonard, W. F. Strunz Leo Mielziner, artists, have left Paris for the United States. Mr. Mielziner has developed an original form of portraitures. He executes drawings of his sitters in color, slightly emphasizing the peculiar features or characteristics in such a way that the resulting portrait becomes a droll and whimsical interpretation, a likeness touched with genial humor and without a particle of satire. Wh in America he will execute some portrait orders in Cincinnati.

Prof. Gustav Eberlein, one of the foremost German sculptors, has just arrived in New York. For the last seven years he has worked exclusively for Emperor William. While in this country he expects to make busts of President Roosevelt, J. P. Morgan, E. H. Harriman and other leading Americans.

INVENTORS.

D. W. HUGHES of St. Louis is credited by the Times-Democrat of that city with being the inventor of the first breech-loading cannon. Unfortunately, he never realized much from his invention. His letters patent were granted by the Confederate government, and he still has the original certificate. His breech-loading cannon, though of small size, were introduced to the public February 18, 1863, but the United States government never made any breech-loading guns until 1880 or 1882, and the only apparent difference in the guns of today from those of Mr. Hughes is that the modern ones have a screw instead of a lug. Concave metal discs which will expand by pressure are now used; but are said to be of no material advantage over the lug.

Franz Burger, a Fort Wayne inventor, has patented a new rotary combustion engine which is attracting attention in marine engineering. The engine is a turbine adapted to be run by air under pressure or a mixture of air and gas or other combustible fluid under pressure. He employs two similar turbines, one of which will act as a motor and the other as an air compressor, both connected to the same shaft. For navigation it becomes necessary to reverse the engine, and this is a great problem with steam turbines. In the new Franz Burger invention no double turbines are needed, and the machinery can be reversed with ease by shifting the operating sides. The inventor, Franz Burger, was born in Hanover, Germany, in 1848, and was educated in the Polytechnic School in Hanover, and served his apprenticeship in the locomotive works in Hanover before he went to Washington, D. C., in 1871 as a model maker. While in Washington in 1874 he invented his first gasoline engine, which is now a practical success

Thomas A. Edison is the greatest patentee in this country, having already taken out almost 1000 patents, and he shows no inclination to quit. Ask the Patent Office people who comes next to Edison and they will tell you that nobody is within hailing distance of the wizard. A good many men can count their patents by the score, and as some of them are much younger than Edison, they may beat him out in time. Up to the present, however, he deserves the title of the great American patentee.

CHURCHMEN.

REV. JOSEPH T. ROCHE, LL.D., pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church, of Nebraska City, Neb., who is expected to assume before long the duties of editor of the New World, official organ of the Chicago archdiocese, as successor to the late Rev. Thomas E. Judge, was born in Canada. He has become widely known in the Central West because of the activity in the Catholic church extension field. He is vice-president of the organization which carries on this work, and also is a member of the board of directors.

Dr. George Alexander, pastor of the University Place Presbyterian Church of New York, acting president of Union College, has declined the permanent presidency of the institution. He says he is too far on in life to hazard a step demanding the efforts of a younger and more active man.

Bishop Potter's friends are changing their minds about his ability as a real esate operator. They think now he is all right. Thirteen of the $85,000 houses which the estate of Alfred Corning Clark, whose widow the bishop married, built on the south side of Seventy-fourth street between Central Park West and Columbus avenue, in New York, are at last rented. For several years the bishop's friends among the real estate fraternity mournfully shook their heads every time they wandered through Seventy-fourth street and gazed on the long line of costly and imposing residences with "For Rent" signs sticking out of nearly all of them.

Rev. G. A. Miller of the Southern California Conference of the Methodist Church, will next month take charge of the Pacific agency of the American Bible Society at Portland. The new agency will take in California and Oregon.

Bishop Charles D. Williams of the Episcopal diocese of Michigan has opened a downtown office at Detroit. The churchman is not interested in ecclesiastical duties alone, and his office has already become the gathering place of men who seek to consult him on matters of civic import.

SAYS HE IS ONLY RUSSIAN POLITICAL REFUGEE.

Joueff Pouren and Wife, who is resisting extradition to Russia. The St. Petersburg authorities assert he is a dangerous criminal with four murders to his discredit.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Much alarmed, Lawyer John P. Murray of Coudert Bros., counsel of the Russian government, called at Commissioner Shields's office, accompanied by Karl Hoffmeister, the witness who testified last Wednesday in the examination of Jan Joueff Pouren, the alleged Russian murderer.

Mr. Murray exhibited a postal card threatening the witness with death. The postal, mailed at the Madison Square station at 11 o'clock last night, was addressed to Hoffmeister at his home, No. 433 East Sixty-eighth street. It read:

"Death to you! Away with the spy!"

There was no signature on the card. Hoffmeister, himself a Russian, and a native of the Baltic province, was called merely to identify the accused and to swear that he had known him months before while residing on East Sixty-ninth street.

Hoffmeister refused to say that Pouren was the same person pictured in the photograph which the Russian government sent here. The Russian government charges Pouren with an atrocious series of robberies, arsons and murders in Russia in the fall of 1906. He is now in the Tombs pending a hearing by Commissioner Shields.

Pouren declares he is merely a political refugee, whose return to Russia is being sought by underhand methods.

On the other hand, the agents of the government insist that Pouren is a dangerous criminal, and that he has at least four murders charged against him. He is a mild-mannered man, who gives his name as Martin Martinson. His wife, with whom he has been living at No. 326 East Forty-ninth street, was with him in court.

BEAUTIES.

MRS. GEORGE KEPPEL, the undisputed leader of England's smart set, has for ten years been at war with Queen Alexandra, though she has enjoyed the favor of King Edward during the whole time. Her brilliancy and beauty captivated the King when he was Prince of Wales, and his friendship has been constant, Mr. and Mrs. Keppel receiving from him frequent invitations to partake of the royal hospitality. But Alexandra's dislike of the dashing matron has aldays been well known. She never willingly extended Mrs. Keppel a favor. But the hatchet has been buried. All England is still talking of the reconciliation, which is so complete that the Queen's former enemy is now received at Sandringham as a welcome personal guest.

Miss Fannie Garrett, the beautiful eighteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Silas Garrett of Jasonville, Ind., has gone to Vienna, Austria, where she will wed Melisa Thespon, a native of Austria. Thespon came to this country two years ago and boarded at the Garrett home for about a year, leaving in December, 1906, for his native land. He fell in love with Miss Garrett, and the two corresponded after his departure. Mr. Garrett, however, told his daughter he did not wish her to write to Thespon, and as he saw no more letters he supposed the correspondence had ceased. Miss Garrett last Thursday went to Terre Haute to visit friends for a few days, so she told her parents. Yesterday her father received a letter from her postmarked New York City, stating that she was on her way to Vienna and that on her arrival there she and Thespon would be married.

OVER THE SEA.

LORD MIDLETON, who is certain to receive one of the most important portfolios in the next Unionist administration, and is, therefore, a visitor to be studied with interest, is responsible, even more than Lord Kitchener, for the sensational resignation of Lord Curzon of the viceroyalty of India. It is well known that while Lord Curzon had virtually settled his differences with Kitchener, he could not put up with the (to him) most offensive and arrogant manner in which his old chum and intimate friend, St. John Brodrick, had thought fit, in his capacity as Secretary of State for India, to adopt toward him in the controversy. In fact, it was the lack of suavity and of tact on the part of Brodrick that was the real cause of Curzon's resignation.

An opera composed by a priest is the novelty and innovation which is now interesting clerical and musical Italy. Don Fini of Turin, the "musical priest," as he is called, will very shortly give his opera, "Il Battista" ("The Baptist,") in Mantua, Venice and other towns.

Boyd Alexander, in his recent journeyings in Africa, encountered many strange adventures. In one faminestricken village young girls were offered to the party for food. Elsewhere the people, fleeing before him, threw down babies in the hope of staying their hunger, and so stopping the white men's advance.

That women no less than men can achieve success in the racing of horses is demonstrated by the Countess Elemer von Blaskovics of Hungary. This titled woman owns many race horses and has been exceedingly successful during the past season, winning over a hundred races.

George Macartney, the British Consul at Kashgar, in Chinese Turkestan, who is decorated with the Order of the Indian empire, is returning home to England from his post this month, via America, and it is to be hoped that no objections will be made to his landing at San Francisco, and that he may not be held up there as a Chinaman. For Mr. Macartney is of mixed parentage, his mother having been a Chinese lady of one of the great families of Nanking, and a cousin of Sir Li Ching Fong, the new envoy of the Chinese Emperor to the Court of St. James. Macartney did not only have a Chinese mother, but was likewise born in China, at Nanking, where his father the late Sir Halliday Macartney, who died as secretary and counselor of the Chinese Legation in London, was director of the imperial arsenal. Sir Halliday's Chinese wife was the daughter of one of the principal mandarins of Nanking, and retained her national religion, instead of becoming a convert to Christianity. She died after giving birth to a girl and to a boy, the present British Consul at Kashgar, and was buried at Nanking according to native rites, a beautiful pagoda marking her grave. The fact of George Macartney belonging, through his mother, to one of the best families in China naturally causes the Chinese dignitaries and natives in Chinese Turkestan to regard him with exceptional good will and respect. Moreover, it enables him to fathom the mysterious depths of the Chinese character to an extent altogether beyond any European or American who does not happen to be a half Chinaman himself. It is to him that the scientific world is indebted for the wonderful collection of Central Asian MSS. which bears his name. He is indeed one of the most able and remarkable of England's corps of civil servants in India and Central Asia, and will probably be knighted and converted into "Sir George" Macartney before he returns to his post at Kashgar.

Queen Louise of Denmark has forwarded 1000 kroner (about $300) to the Danish Consul in Philadelphia as her contribution to the building fund of St. Johanes's Danish Lutheran Church. This is the first time in Philadelphia where a Queen has been a subscriber to the building fund of a church. The Queen, who is a niece of the late King Oscar of Sweden, is regarded as the wealthiest Princess of Europe and is noted for the many charitable institutions which she supports, although she gives most of her donations from her private fortune in the name of her consort, King Frederick VIII of Denmark.

ACTIVE WOMEN.

MISS ROSE SCHLUETER of St. Louis, while traveling and studying in England six years ago, met Prince Ranji Smile, the third brother of the ruling Ameer of Baluchistan, India. After she returned to the United States he followed and gave himself up completely to the winning of the girl. He was successful, and a few months ago they were married. Besides becoming a member of the royal family, this American girl will have to adopt the style of dress, manners, customs and life of the women over whom she is princess. She will be presented at the royal court of the Ameer of Baluchistan in February.

Mrs. Herbert Parsons, wife of the Congressman and chairman of the New York County Committee, has made Washington gasp by a social innovation. Washington calls are a solemn ceremony, to be languidly undertaken from a soft-cushioned carriage and with a footman to run in and deliver cards when the caller feels too fatigued or bored to go through the forms in person. But always the caller—and the sex is always feminine—dons her very gladdest raiment, the sweeping, swishing, rustling kind. Mrs. Parsons has been making her calls on foot, clad in a cloth walking suit, with a short skirt, a soft felt hat with feathers and a shirt waist.

Missionary Sarah J. Bird says that learning inhabits the lowly New York Bowery as well as Morningside Heights. "I saw three men bending over a table in a lodging-house one night, and found they were translating the Iliad," she adds.

Miss Winifred Holt, chairman of the New York Association for the Blind, thinks that blind children should be taught in the public schools and should be required to attend school just as other children are. There could be rooms for the blind children just as there are for the other children. All that is needed after the first few years is the book with raised print, and then they could recite in the same classes with the seeing children of their grade.

Mrs. Frederick Nathan says that 27,000 women in New York support their husbands, and she would like to know why these women are not allowed to vote. She does not approve nor does she disapprove of a woman's supporting her husband, but she thinks that such a woman should have more to say in regard to the laws than the man who is supported. It is suggested that a good way to solve the difficulty would be simply to take the right of suffrage from the man who cannot support his wife and family.

Miss Ella G. Wilcox has been elected to the school board of Malden, Mass., on an independent ticket. The Malden Graded Teachers' Association had asked for an increase of their very small salaries and as the Republican candidate declared himself in opposition to the increase the teachers went out and got a candidate of their own. The club women joined them, and many of the most influential men of the town are said to have cast their votes for Miss Wilcox.

Mrs. Delia Thompson Lutes of Detroit has been chosen editor of the magazine American Motherhood to succeed Mrs. Mary Wood-Allan, who retires because of ill health. Mrs. Lutes, before her marriage, was a teacher in the Duffield school. As a writer of fiction she has contributed to various magazines for the past five years.

AUTHORS.

PROF. RICHARD G. MOULTON'S great enterprise of presenting the Old and New Testaments in modern literary form, under the general title of "The Modern Reader's Bible," has been completed, and the twenty-one separate booklets have been brought together in a single volume of 1733 pages, in which the Hebraic classics can for the first time be seen to be not inferior to those of Greece in literary beauty and bold imagination.

Rev. Dr. James McGovern of Lockport, Ill., is soon to publish a history of the archdiocese of Chicago, based upon personal knowledge and recollection. Dr. McGovern is the only survivor of the pioneer priests of Chicago, and is considered eminently qualified for the important task.

W. J. Rolfe, the Shakespearean scholar, who is now in his eightieth year, is at work on a volume of Shakespeare proverbs. It was in 1867 that Mr. Rolfe edited and brought out his first Shakespeare book, and from 1870 to 1883 he was working on and publishing the Complete Edition of Shakespeare in forty volumes.

ARMY AND NAVY MEN.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has appointed Gen. William C. Oats to succeed Col. Elliott as a commissioner to mark Confederate graves. Gen. Oates was former Governor of the State of Alabama, a colonel in the Confederate army, a brigadier-general in the Spanish War, and also a former member of the House of Representatives.

The retirement of Maj. W. A. Mercer, head of the Carlisle School, and an Indian service expert of much ability, was a distinct surprise to every one. The position is very much sought after by army officers, and although it requires a knowledge of the Indian and his ways, and is a big charge, it pays $1000 more the year than the salary of a major.

Capt. Harrison Gray Otis Colby, U. S.N., will reach the age limit on January 28 and will retire. When only a captain he was sent to Europe to bring the European squadron home, and, flying his senior officer's flag from Dewey's flagship, the Olympia, he piloted them successfully to the Caribbean, where the whole North Atlantic fleet was engaged in maneuvers.

Brig.-Gen. Winfield S. Edgerly has been relieved from the command of the Department of the Gulf, at Atlanta, Ga., and ordered to proceed to St. Paul, Minn., and assume command temporarily of the Department of Dakota during the absence of Maj.-Gen. Adolphus W. Greely. Gen. Edgerly's present assignment to the command of the Department of the Dakota, although announced as "temporary," is intended to be made permanent on the statutory retirement of Gen. Greely, March 27, next. Gen. Greely has been granted leave of absence until that date, and has practically ended his career as an officer in active service.

Lieut.-Col. William W. Gibson, Ordnance Department, has been ordered to assume command of the government arsenal at Watervliet, near Troy, N. Y., relieving Lieut.-Col. Ira McNutt, who has been placed in command of the Sandy Hook proving grounds.

Lieut.-Col. George Barnett of the U. S.M.C., who has been recently in command of the marine barracks at the navy yard, Washington, D. C., has been ordered to proceed at once to Peking, China, for duty in command of the legation guard at that capital, relieving Capt. Louis M. Gulick, U.S. M.C., who is ordered to return to the United States. Col. Barnett will sail from San Francisco January 30.

Rear-Admiral John P. Merrell, now president of the Naval War College, at Newport, has been assigned to additional duty as a member of the army and navy joint board, which is charged with the special duty of devising plans for the defense of the United States against foreign invasion. The detail of Admiral Merrell fills a vacancy on the board, caused by the recent detachment of Rear-Admiral Willard H. Brownson, United States Navy, retired, following his resignation as chief of the Bureau of Navigation.

Admiral Evans is described as just a trifle above the average height, pale as though his health were not all that it might be—perhaps because of the pain of that bad leg—pale blue eyes set wide apart, looking straight into you, as though to take the secrets from your heart; the kindly smile of a kindly man, set on lips that, if the need arose, could compress to two lines of steel; a hand big, warm, soft, that meets yours in a strong, firm clasp; a little limp on the bad leg; a voice low firm in tone, genial in intonation; a courtesy that is perfect and unfailing, a wit that can counter with men, or whisper compliments to women, while the blue eyes convince. That is "Fighting Bob."

"I am always better when I see you, madam," Admiral Evans replied, smiling.

The words were a trifle. It was the unaffected warmth of his manner, the impression he left upon the observer of slightly punctilious, somewhat old-fashioned courtesy, that expressed the gentleman and the man of culture.

"He isn't a sentimentalist. He has smashed more no-account rules than any other man who was ever at the head of our navy. He doesn't bother about precedent. One man can't do it all, of course. If he tried to do so, he'd get the name of being a reformer. But Admiral Evans has done more for the rank and file of the American navy than any man that ever breathed. It is due to him that the wonderful system of navy athletics has grown up. He has seen to it that the men are properly trained, and he encourages the various games and intervessel contests.

Lieut. Robert Holcomb, Jr., who has recently been selected by President Roosevelt as one of the social aides at the White House, is the champion rifle shot of the world, having won matches in the United States, England and Canada.

IN THE LIMELIGHT.

COL. A. H. M'CLURE, soldier and editor of Philadelphia, recently was tendered a complimentary dinner in celebration of his 80th birthday. Among those in attendance were Speaker Cannon and many members of the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress. Speaker Cannon was enthusiastically received by the diners. In his usual humorous vein he told Col. McClure that he hoped he might live to be 100 years old, and he (Cannon) would come back again as a boy of 90. In closing, Mr. Cannon said: "In all ages there are prophets of evil, but I venture to say that in this year 1908 this great republic will endure and continue to endure through the ability, the patriotism, the devotion and the sanity of a majority of its 90,000,000 people."

George J. Klein of Cleveland, O., has a deed that was made in the year 1357. It was written long before Christopher Columbus was born, and a century and a half before America was discovered. The deed is made out on parchment, and the writing is in old German text. The letters are nearly perfect, and the making must have involved a great amount of labor. The ink is somewhat faded on parts of the manuscript, but some of it is still quite black. Mr. Klein recently fell heir to the estate described in the deed, and he will shortly leave for Germany to claim it.

Justice Harlan of the Supreme Court, and 75 years old, recently said: "If every man would play nine holes of golf before breakfast every morning he would never need to worry about his health."

William Nelson Cromwell, the noted trust lawyer, is seldom seen in open court, yet his fees are said to be larger than those of any other lawyer in the United States. Mr. Cromwell is a man once seen, never forgotten. His hair and mustache are snow white, prematurely so, for he is scarcely over 50. He is of medium height, with surprising breadth of shoulders for his size. His principal diversion is music, and his home in New York holds the finest private pipe organ in America.

When Martin W. Littleton, one of the greatest lawyers in the country today, was a track walker in Texas, back in the '80s, the foreman of the railroad asked him if he expected to be a conductor some day. He replied that he never would be a conductor, but that expected to be a big lawyer in New York. He was born in a log cabin in Tennessee, and had never been in a schoolhouse up to the time he was 16, when he studied with an old German for eight months.

James Wood, fire chief of Paduch, Ky., has the distinction of being the largest fire chief in the United States. He tips the scales in the neighborhood of 350 pounds, and stands 6 feet and 1 inch high. When a fire alarm comes in at night, and he is in bed, Chief Wood is one of the first men down the pole, and he is not afraid to venture to the top of the highest building on a ladder. For twelve years he has been fire chief, and has been a member of the department for twenty years.

Sir Genielle Cane Brownleave, twelfth baronet of Stretton, Leicester, England, is in a class by himself, in comparson with the average titled Englishman. He has been in America for several years, and is not hunting for a rich wife. Some time since he sold his birthright for $12,500, and is now living in Utah, where he is working by the day. An American heiress is said to be ready to marry his and furnish the money necessary to redeem his estates in exchange for his rank and title, but he refuses the alluring offer.

CENTENARIANS.

FRANK McNALLY of Clinton, Mich., was born in Summerhill, County Meath, Ireland, April 18, 1797, and is therefore 111 years of age almost. He has a brother in the old home town, who has reached the age of 103 years. There is little about McNally to indicate that he has passed the century mark, with a comfortable margin to spare, and that he has a well-founded claim to distinction as the oldest man in Michigan. The broad shoulders, the sturdy frame, the keen eye, the hearty laugh, the handshake that makes you wince, all belong to a younger man, and it is difficult to recognize them with the statement that more than a decade has passed since he celebrated his 100th birthday.

Mrs. Malinda Clemons of Massilon, O., celebrated her 100th birthday on January 4. She has been a resident of Massilon since 1826, and was an active worker until she reached 80 years of age, when she went to live with a daughter. She predicts that she will live to be 110 years of age.

Rev. Abraham Isaac Trager of New York is 103 years old, and though he is probably the oldest person in that city, he keeps up correspondence with friends in America and Europe, and at wedding ceremonies, which he likes to perform, he is said to be a witty and delightful after-dinner speaker. At the age of 100 he made daily visits to the Montefiore Home, although the trip involved walking up more than 100 steps leading to Washington Heights. Throughout his life he has indulged himself with tobacco, alcoholic drinks and coffee. He says, however, that he is as temperate in their use as his system demands. Sixty-five years ago this venerable father in Israel was living in Palestine, near the city of Jerusalem, where he had gone with his first wife and their children from Wilna, Russia. He was born in Wilna and was educated there for the ministry. He came to New York about 1855, and founded the first Polish orthodox congregation in that city.

EDUCATORS.

PRESIDENT CHARLES W. ELIOT of Harvard University is one of the most hospitable of men. No host knows better than he how to make his guests feel at home. At public receptions he has something new to say to each person he meets.

President Hadley of Yale has stirred up a hornet's nest in Berlin by asserting that the number of American students in German universities is falling off. Nevertheless he goes calmly about enjoying Berlin and touring the art galleries under the guidance of Prince Ernst, the son of the reigning Duke of Saxe-Meiningen, who is much drawn to Dr. Hadley, and came to Berlin to hear him lecture.

Chancellor E. Benjamin Andrews of the University of Nebraska is said to have placed his resignation in the hands of the regents of the institution to take effect at the pleasure of the board. The report is that the resignation will be brought about because of the unpopularity of the chancellor's defense of Rockefeller and his solicitation of endowment funds from Standard Oil magnate. President Andrews is on the pension list of the Rockefeller endowment fund, and his future is provided for. He came to the University of Nebraska during the days of free silver, which cause he championed, and it is said it was because of that championship that Bryan and other silver people placed him at the head of the Nebraska institution. Mr. Andrews was at one time president of Brown University, where his views on free silver caused considerable discussion. Later he was superintendent of the Chicago city schools.

Two university professors will be members of the next New Jersey Legislature. They are John D. Prince of Columbia University and Henry D. Thompson of Princeton. The former is a professor of oriental languages and the latter professor of mathematics.

Dr. Andrew D. White, formerly president of Cornell University, and later Ambassador to Germany, has proposed to President Roosevelt a plan for the establishment of a department of foreign commerce in each of the agricultural colleges and experiment stations in the different States and Territories which were founded by gifts of public land under what is known as the Morrill act of Congress of 1862, with supplementary legislation. That act provided for advanced instruction in agriculture and military science. It provided for the education of the farmer and for experimental research into agricultural problems, which has been remarkably successful and in a large measure accounts for the extraordinary prosperity of the agricultural interests of this country.

Col. George Harvey, who has been appointed to the Bromley lectureship at Yale University for 1908, is a notable figure in the publishing world. He will lecture on journalism and literature. He was born at Peacham, Vt., in 1864. He began his career as a reporter on the Springfield Republican, and afterward on the Chicago Daily News and the New York World. He became managing editor of that paper later. In March, 1899, he bought the North American Review, and assumed the editorship. The following year he effected a reorganization of Harper & Brothers, and is president of the organization. He is also an officer in several street railway companies.

POLITICIANS, STATESMEN.

SENATOR WILLIAM B. ALLISON of Iowa who has already represented that State in the Senate since 1873, is seeking a reelection though he has reached the age of 79 years.

Senator Burrows of Michigan is the hero of a new reform at the capitol. When he leaves home in the morning he carries with him enough food to last him until his return. This reform has not been undertaken because he wishes to be different from other people, but because he believes that the Senate restaurant harbors cockroaches.

William H. Taft was already a big fellow when in the fall of 1874, he landed at New Haven, says an exchange. His [illegible] pounds of avoirdupois looked big to the sophomores, says the Circle. At the end of the first freshman scrap every one knew he was big. During all his college days he never lost his reputation. In the fall games of his senior year he pulled on the tug-of-war team. Those who saw this event say that Taft started off and "the rest came tagging after." But Taft was also big in other things. Here is a list of his college honors, furnished by Anson Phelps Stokes, the secretary of Yale: Delta Kappa Phi Theta Psi, the Boule Psi Upsilon, Linoia, Skull and Bones, and Phi Beta Kappa. President of our class boat club in freshman year. Member of the Delta Kappa campaign committee. Member of the freshman class supper committee. He and Foster were equal in winning second place in the freshman scholarship. Divided the first mathematical prize with John I. McDonald. Won two first sophomore composition prizes. First vice-president of the Boule. In the fall games, senior year, Taft pulled on the victorious tug-of-war team. Awarded the philosophical oration at junior exhibition and at commencement, and was a speaker on both occasions, being the salutatorian of the class.

Señor Enrique Creel can give President Roosevelt cards and spades, after a fashion. For, while the President has been ranchman, nimrod, soldier, civil service commissioner, assistant Secretary of the Navy, Governor, President, author, historian and a few other things, he has followed these various callings consecutively. Creel is at once Mexican Ambassador in Washington and Governor of Chihuahua in Mexico. It is much as if the Governor of Texas should be Ambassador to Mexico at the same time, only more so. Creel has just finished directing in Washington, the compulsory "kiss-and-make-up" party of Central American diplomats which the American and Mexican authorities jointly arranged. The two countries left the details of this Washington conference in the hands of Secretary Root and Ambassador Creel, but Secretary Root was so busy that the Mexican statesman had to look after most of it. He did it well, saw the representatives of the five comic opera Central American States sign an arbitration treaty, and now he has packed up his goods to go home to Chihuahua and govern that big state for three months. Creel is a big, broad, able man by the standards of any country. He is a financier and mining magnate as well as politician, Governor and Ambassador. Most Americans going to Mexico come in contact with him, for his State is the field for most of their investing. President Diaz is supposed to have Señor Creel in training to succeed to the Presidency of Mexico.

Secretary of the Interior Garfield is not believed to have ever worn a silk hat, and he shuns the Washington statesman's frock coat for an ordinary business suit.

Frank H. Hitchcock, who has now been converted to the Taft boom and who will look after southern delegates, was the champion boxer of his day at Harvard. Secretary Taft was the champion wrestler of Yale, while a student there. "Uncle Joe" Cannon's favorite exercise is reaching for the pot after the show down. Gov. Hughes is said to have played marbles in his youth, but that is the most strenuous record. Senator Knox plays at golf, a little, but even his warmest admirers admit that he is not likely to win any cups. Vice-President Fairbanks walks from the capitol to his home daily. Cortelyou plays the pipe organ when he feels vigorous and La Follette's athletic work is vocal purely.

The Jackson day banquet in Chicago last week was ungraced by Senator Jeff Davis of Arkansas because he fell asleep at his hotel and did not wake up until the banquet was a thing of the past. Various excuses for his absence were made by some of his friends who were present at the banquet, but the Senator refuses to be interviewed on the subject.

VALUABLE SUGGESTIONS AND USEFUL RECIPES RELATING TO THE CARE OF THE HAIR AND SKIN.

By Ethel Lynne.

[It is the purpose of this column to present valuable information and suggestions relating to the care of the skin and hair, and to all topics pertaining to the development or retention of physical beauty. Questions on these topics sent to Miss Ethel Lynne, in care of The Times, will be answered as promptly as practicable. Any one wishing a personal reply should inclose a self-addressed and stamped envelope.]

The value of a beautiful head of hair has been recognized everywhere through all time. Nations have differed in their standards of the beauty of every feature of the face; they have agreed always, apparently, with St. Paul, who says: "If a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her." The hair-roots are like those of a tree, capable of being coaxed back to life and strength, so long as there is anything to work upon.

Baldness, unless the hair roots are absolutely dead, can be cured. Who will say that a new growth of hair will not repay the time and patience required in producing it? When the hair falls out after a long illness or from grief, care, anxiety, or from too profound study, the best course is the heroic one—cut off what remains. Then wash the scalp with soap and water every other day, rinsing and drying thoroughly and applying twice each day the following hair tonic:

Phenic acid, 2 grammes; tincture of nux vomica, 7½ grammes; tincture of red cinchona, 30 grammes; tincture cantharides, 2 grammes; cologne, 120 grammes; almond oil, 120 grammes. Rub well into the scalp twice a day as long as required.

Normally, one should not grow gray until long after middle age. In this country, however, it is almost the exceptional man or woman who passes the thirty-fifth year without the discovery of a silvery hair or two among the brown or gold.

Gray hair at this age certainly seems premature. Its progress may be arrested, but in my opinion, which is founded on years of study and experience, nothing has so far been invented which will restore the hair already silvered.

Gray hair can only be changed in color by a dye or stain. Some of these dyes are effective, and many are relatively harmless. I do not advise the use of dyes or restoratives, but to those who differ from me in my views I give the benefit of several formulas, which are considered the best known to science.

The vegetable hair dyes are quite inoffensive. Unfortunately, however, they fade very soon, and the color they impart to the hair is, as the French say, "doubtful"—that is to say, one cannot to a certainty count on the exact shade. The best of all the vegetable hair dyes is henna, which is the preparation used. The henna may be reduced in strength until it produces the shade desired. It will stain the skin and scalp, but such stains are readily removed if washed at once with soap and water, without in any way affecting the color the henna has given the hair. In Turkey the henna is rubbed into the hair in the form of a paste. A decoction may be made at home by simply brewing the leaves as one would tea.

To produce the various shades of brown, the following is the best stain known. It is the basis of most of the restorers, etc.:

Pyrogallic acid, one-quarter ounce; distilled water, hot, one and a half ounces. Dissolve, and when the solution has cooled, gradually add of rectified spirits one-half fluid ounce. It may be made weaker or stronger as desired.

Years ago a celebrated hair restorative was analysed in a laboratory in Paris, where a friend of mine was a student. It was advertised as possessing qualities little short of miraculous. It proved to be a decoction of walnut shells, scented with oil of jasmine and rosemary.

This is really one of the oldest of hair stains, and is readily made as follows: Make a strong decoction of green walnut shells and water, add enough alcohol to preserve it, also a few bruised cloves. Let it stand for a week and filter. Lighten the color by adding water. Recollect that the walnut shells will stain the scalp, which must be immediately washed before the stain becomes set.

For producing golden hair, the safest and best agent is peroxide of hydrogen. To produce any shade of golden hair, pour a little of peroxide of hydrogen into a saucer, apply with a soft toothbrush to the roots of the hair; be careful to do it evenly. The hair must be perfectly clean and quite dry.

I may say now that I know of no such bondage as the use of any of these hair dyes or stains entails, and I advise against entering upon such slavery in every case; but there are women who are determined to have hair this or that shade, and to such I give the benefit of the best and safest means for attaining their desires.

Before applying any of the above cosmetics, the hair should be carefully washed and freed from all oily substances. Use the following shampoo for this purpose:

Take one cake of olive oil soap, melt it in one quart of boiling water, add one tablespoonful of common washing soda, mix thoroughly and let it stand. It will jelly. Take of the jelly for each shampoo a heaping tablespoonful, add five or ten drops of ammonia, also about a teacupful of warm water. Wet the head thoroughly with pure warm water before applying the shampoo; then rub the soapy mixture thoroughly into the scalp all over the head. Next rinse several times until all the soap has been washed out.

Never permit a hair dresser to "prepare," as they term it, hair for a change of color, be it auburn, brown or any other shade, by first bleaching it. Bleaching means taking all the coloring matter out of it; the vitality of the hair goes with the color; and frequently bleaching will rot the hair and utterly destroy its texture.

For falling hair, and, indeed, for baldness, any of the preparations made from cosmoline or vaseline may be used successfully. The active principle of cosmoline is coal, than which, properly used, nothing is better as a hair grower than preparations made from these ingredients. The following is a good vaseline formula:

Yellow vaseline, 50 grammes; cocoanut oil, 30 grammes; gallic acid, 6 grammes; essence rosemary, 12 drops. Rub well into the hair every night on retiring.

It is a mistaken idea that washing the hair frequently is injurious to it. On the contrary, cleanliness has never been other than healthful.

Scurf or dandruff, unless in a most aggravated form, is not a disease. It is the result of neglect, or, in plain English, uncleanliness of the scalp. I will cure any ordinary case of dandruff by perfect cleanliness of the scalp. Scurf or furfura is a natural and healthy formation. When the scurf is excessive, despite great cleanliness, it denotes unhealthy condition of the scalp. Try the following in such cases, but always in conjunction with very frequent washings with plenty of rinsing:

Extract of rosemary, 1 dram; tincture of cantharides, 1 dram; solution of carbonate potassium, 1½ drams; distilled water, 4 fluid ounces. Apply with a small soft sponge mornings and before going to bed.

INQUIRIES ANSWERED.

Massage cream—Spermaceti (pure,) ¼ ounce; white wax (pure,) ¼ ounce; almond oil, ¼ pound; butter of cocoa, ⅛ pound; lamoline, 2 ounces. Melt and stir in one dram of balsam of Peru. After settling, pour off the clear portion and add two fluid drams of orange flower water and stir briskly until it concretes.

Blackheads—Miss E. L.: Scrub your face well every night before going to bed in warm water, using a rather stiff complexion brush and a pure bland soap; "French Castile" or palm oil soaps are best. Rinse afterward in several clear waters in order that no soap remains to clog the pores. Apply the following solution: Ergotine, 3 drams; oxide of zinc, 7 grammes; vaseline, 30 grammes. Apply to blackheads; leave on all night (if it does not irritate.) Remove with hot water and a bland soap in the morning. Continue until blackheads disappear, which they will in a very short time.

Home Helps and Hints.

BY H. M. HUBBS.

[SPECIALLY CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES.]

TO DESTROY FLIES.

Mix together one-half of a tablespoonful of black pepper, one tablespoonful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of milk. This will attract the flies in the room and kill them.—[Mrs. C. Taylor.

FOR A WEAK HEART.

The application of heat over the heart, and applications of hot and cold water to the spine in rapid alternation, are a much more effective means of arousing the heart to activity than the administration of alcohol.—[Dr. J. H. Kellogg, Battle Creek, Mich.

TO PREVENT IRONS STICKING.

Mix a little turpentine in the hot starch. A little borax mixed with the starch will have the same effect.

CARVED IVORY.

Clean with a paste of dampened sawdust and a few drops of lemon juice. Lay the paste on thickly; allow it to dry and then remove with a nail brush.

ONIONS FOR NERVES.

Onions are useful in cases of nervous prostration. There is nothing else that will so quickly relieve and tone up a worn-out system. Eaten every other day they have a clearing and whitening effect on the complexion.

A DELIGHTFUL FRAGRANCE.

To give a delightful fragrance to a room, put a few drops of oil of lavender in a pretty jar, partly filled with very hot water and place in the parlor or hall.

LITLE HELPS.

After peeling onions rub the hands with raw potatoes or celery to remove the scent.

Damp salt will remove egg stains from silver spoons.

When ironing, take off your shoes and stand on a pillow or an old quilt folded, to prevent aching feet.—[Lucy Smith.

MOCK MAPLE SYRUP.

Take equal parts light brown sugar and granulated, add one-half the quantity of hot water and boil to a syrup. When cool add a little vanilla. Excellent for hot cakes.

THE BEST DISINFECTANT.

Dissolve a couple of pounds of copperas in a gallon of water and pour a portion of it hot down all drains. It will cut all grease and remove all odors. Do not flush the pipes for several hours if it can be avoided, so the copperas can have ample time to do its work.

CURE FOR BEE STING.

The best remedy for the sting of a bee is spirits of ammonia. For a child, dilute with water. If badly swollen, soak in hot water.—[L. M. Green.

CORKS.

When corks are too large for the mouth of the bottles for which they are intended, soak them for a short time in boiling water, and they will so soften that they can be easily pressed into the bottles.

SCALY LEG IN FOWLS.

Put a spoonful of kerosene in a pint of skim milk or buttermilk and mix thoroughly. This emulsion will destroy the mite which causes scaly leg. One or two dippings or washings with this will cure the worst case and leave the skin smooth and clean. It is also good for chicken lice.

POTTED PLANTS.

Powdered charcoal worked into the soil with a fork helps to make vigorous growth. It sweetens the soil and furnishes certain elements the plants should have.

MASHED POTATOES.

When mashing potatoes, after the milk and butter are added, and they have had their final stirring, add a small teaspoonful of baking powder and stir well, and see how light they will be; it makes them as light as a feather. A small onion chopped fine and added ten minutes before the potatoes are done, adds a fine flavor.—[National Magazine.

TURKISH DELIGHT.

Take one-ounce sheet gelatine, soak in one-half cup water for two hours. Dissolve one pound granulated sugar in one-half cup water, and when at boiling point add the gelatine. Flavor with one orange, juice and rind, and one lemon, juice only. Chopped nuts improve it. Boil all steadily for twenty minutes. Rinse a pan in cold water, pour in the delight, and when cold cut in squares and roll in confectioner's sugar.

TO CLEAN BAMBOO FURNITURE.

Don't use soap for this. Instead, scrub with cold salt water. Rinse quickly with clear water, but don't make more damp than absolutely necessary. Dry in the open air. Clean floor matting in the same way.—[Mrs. J. Manlove.

SCREWS IN PLASTERED WALLS.

It is often desirable to insert screws in plastering, and it is found hard to make them hold. The hole made by the screw should be enlarged, and the edges of the plaster thoroughly moistened with water. Then fill the hole with plaster of Paris and press the screw in the soft plaster. When it becomes hard, the screw will be held very firmly.

HOW TO CLEAN PIANOS.

Never put any kind of furniture polish on a piano. Wash the piano (a small section at a time,) with warm suds made with castile soap; dry quickly with a soft cloth and polish with chamois skin or an old silk handkerchief. Take care not to scratch the piano, and don't put the soap on the cloth, but dissolve it in the water. Any handsome furniture can be cleaned satisfactorily in this way. These directions were given by a piano dealer.

MEDICINE FOR THE BABY.

In giving medicine in liquid form to an infant, place the point of the spoon against the roof of its mouth. Administered this way, it will be impossible for the child to choke or eject the medicine.

SUBSTITUTE FOR GROUND GLASS.

In many rooms, with a homely view, or, for privacy, where a curtain is not desired, a good imitation of ground glass may be made. Take a piece of very soft putty and tie it in a piece of cheesecloth. Pat all over the plain glass with this cloth, until every part is covered with a thin, white coating. When this has dried so that it will not rub off, brush the putty over with one coat of white varnish. This window may be cleaned like a plain glass and it is an excellent substitute for ground glass.

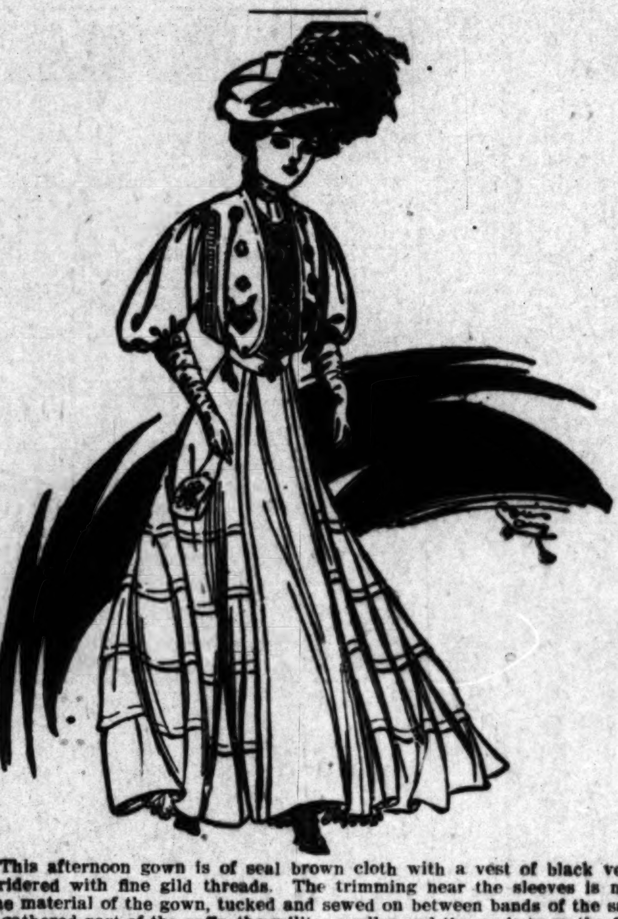
FILLING JELLY GLASSES.

Fill your jelly glasses or fruit jars with cold water from the fawcet and let stand so, while the cooking is going on. Never bother to gradually heat the jars before filling them. If nervous over it, place a silver knife in the jar before filling, but it is not necessary. Fold a small cloth in the bottom of a shallow pan, wet with cold water. Empty the water from your glass or jar, set on the wet cloth and fill at once with the boiling fruit. They never break, and it is so simple and easy.

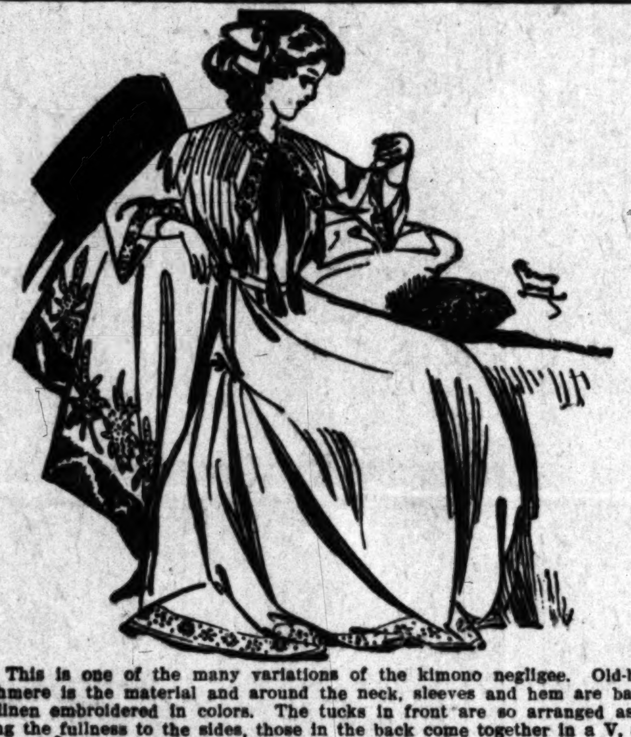
STEAM OUT SPLINTERS.

When a splinter has been driven into the hand, it can be extracted by steam. Fill a wide-mouthed bottle nearly full of hot water, place the injured part over the mouth of the bottle, and press down slightly. This will draw the flesh down, and in a minute or two the steam will extract the splinter, also the inflammation. Try it and be convinced.—[National Magazine.

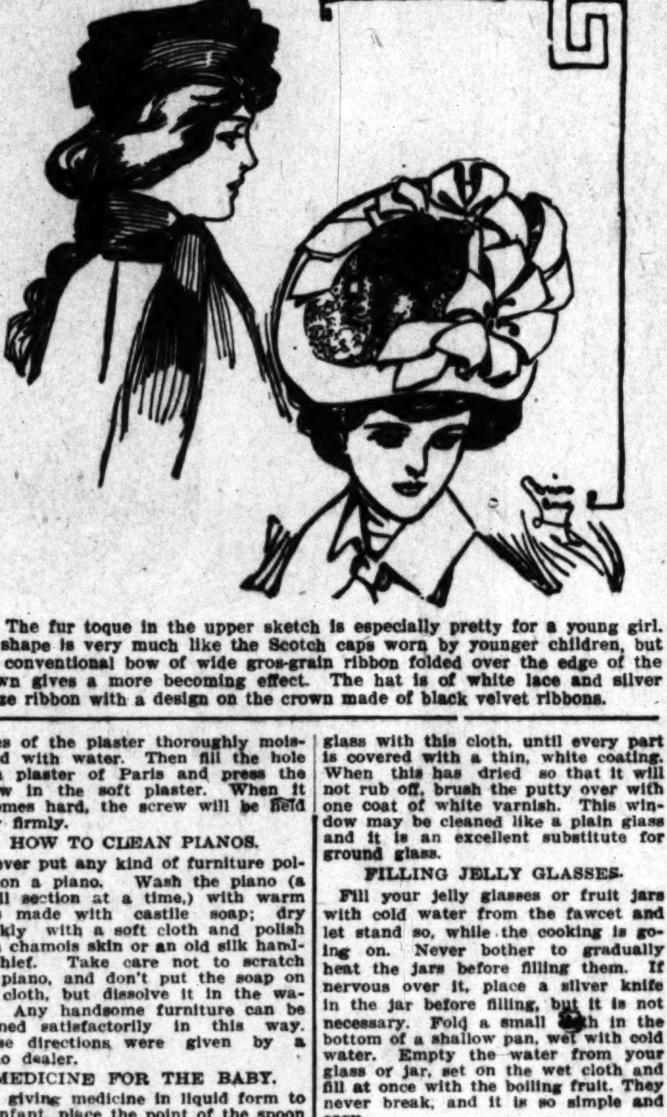
UP-TO-DATE FASHIONS FOR WOMEN.



This afternoon gown is of seal brown cloth with a vest of black velvet embridered with fine gild threads. The trimming near the sleeves is made of the material of the gown, tucked and sewed on between bands of the same. The gathered part of the cuffs, the military collar and the pockets on the front are made of black satin. The cord and buttons are black and gold, and golden brown gloves are worn. The skirt has a wide front breadth and the rest is cut in circular sections.



This is one of the many variations of the kimono negligee. Old-blue cashmere is the material and around the neck, sleeves and hem are bands of linen embroidered in colors. The tucks in front are so arranged as to bring the fullness to the sides, those in the back come together in a V, and the fullness is made by cutting the backs in flaring gores. One front laps over the other and fastens at the side, the neck is closed by a tie of soft silk with tassels on the ends.



The fur toque in the upper sketch is especially pretty for a young girl. Its shape is very much like the Scotch caps worn by younger children, but the conventional bow of wide gros-grain ribbon folded over the edge of the crown gives a more becoming effect. The hat is of white lace and silver gauze ribbon with a design on the crown made of black velvet ribbons.

A REAL HELPMEET.

WOMAN MAKES REPUTATIONS.

WRITES SPEECHES TO ORDER FOR MEN AND WOMEN.

Has Advance Orders for Over a Hundred Toasts and Replies to Toasts to Be Delivered During the Next Two Months—She Is the Busy Man's Ready Writer.

"It makes no difference whether the speech is for a feast or a funeral, I am ready to write it, and I guarantee satisfaction."

The speaker was a young woman who occupies an apartment in a studio building only a few doors from Fifth avenue, New York. "My charges are from $10 to $100 for a speech, and from $5 to $25 for teaching how it should be delivered.

"This is my busy season, for everybody who has any ambition to be known as a speaker has something to say at Christmas festivities. If you will let me glance over my books for a moment I can tell you just what I have on hand. In the way of Christmas greetings, at Christmas trees and such occasions, I have already delivered and yet to be called for thirty-seven speeches. Of this number only four are to be taught. I mean only four of the thirty-seven persons who are to deliver them have come to me to learn how to speak their speeches. Six of them are old pupils and would have taken lessons had I thought it necessary. Twenty are new customers.

"There are just 102 names on my books for toasts and replies to toasts to be delivered within the next two months. Most of them refer to Christmas, but others are for Washington's Birthday, Lincoln's Birthday, Lee's Birthday, and some few for St. Valentine's. As to toasts on "women," "our wives" or "our sweethearts," I keep a supply on hand. I write them whenever I have a moment to spare knowing only too well they will be taken off my hands almost any day.

"Most of the woman customers want patriotic speeches or cleverly worded toasts. Sometimes it is a reply "To the Ladies," but not as often as one might expect. As a rule, I think that women who attend men's dinners are quite willing to allow the men to do the talking. I have had some amusing incidents connected with my woman customers, but nothing like the side-splitting affairs with the men.

WHY HE IS A HUMORIST.

"There is a certain man in this town with something of a reputation as an after-dinner speaker, a humorist, who comes to me for every word he utters in public. He was among my first customers. A few weeks after I opened my office, when I was doing all the business alone, that man appeared one morning and stated his wants and said he could only give me two days to write the speech. He was such an awkward, ungainly sort of a man that I hadn't the slightest suspicion of his position. He didn't say where the speech was to be delivered; only gave me the subject; said that he wanted something very good and was quite willing to pay for it.

"He was on hand promptly to get the speech and as promptly turned in the other half of my fee for writing it. Then he asked if I would object to reading it over to him. As this was to be his maiden effort he wanted to hear just how it would sound to his listeners. As there was no lack of self-confidence, I suggested that he do the reading and let me make corrections, if any were necessary. Such reading I never heard and never expect to hear again. He emphasized every 'and' 'the' and 'but' in the paper to such an extent that the other words had no existence. It was the funniest effort at reading I had ever heard. I have considerable self-control, but not enough to have taken me through that man's performance. When I began to smile I simply couldn't stop; the laugh had to come out. When finally I could control myself sufficiently to explain, the man wasn't the slightest bit offended.

"That is all right," he replied. "It shall go that way. I want the fellows to laugh. Don't matter if the speech is intended to be serious. I hate a serious dinner. I'll give the fellows something to lough at."

"He gave them something to laugh at, for the next morning the papers told of his epeech. They all agreed that it wasn't what he said, but the way he said it. Oh, he's a famous after-dinner speaker now. My other customers don't know it, of course, but he gets the refusal of all my work, speeches and toasts. He is able and willing to pay. It is a matter of business with me. The last time I saw him on the street, he was much disturbed. He said his toast the night before hadn't been as successful as usual. He was sure it wasn't the fault of the toast, but of the delivery, because he was learning to read and recite like other men. He wanted to know if I couldn't give him lessons, teaching how he used to do. That was impossible, and I told him so. No civilized human being except himself had ever read as he had done.

LIKE TO SEE NAMES IN PRINT.

"Women, as a rule, don't care much about their delivery. They say, and I expect they are quite right, that the members of their clubs never listen to the speeches and papers read at their meetings. They either sit and whisper or they think about outside affairs. They do the thing for the sake of the reputation it gives them and to see their name in the papers or the reports of the meetings. If one of my speeches is printed in a magazine, a paper or an annual I require an extra payment.

"Women never object to this. They seem quite satisfied with the reputation of having produced something worth printing. Men are not so easily satisfied. They think one payment ought to suffice unless they get some money returns for the printed article. Even then they will haggle about it. Of course, I always have one argument to bring them to their senses. I always ask: 'What would your friends and the public say if I should insert as an advertisement my affidavit claiming that article as the product of my brain and research?' I don't have to ask that question often, however, I am thankful to say. People as a rule are willing to stand by their bargains.

"Next to the Christmas season the graduation season is the busiest for me. I couldn't begin to tell you how many graduation speeches I have written in my time. At least half my orders for such speeches come from the parents of the boy or girl to be graduated. When I remind them that boys or girls are not supposed to get assistance in such work, it does no good, only distresses them.

"My methods are very simple. To begin with, I came to New York with the intention of writing for the papers. I didn't make much of a success, and seeing this opening I determined to step in the breach and try my hand at working up a business. Realizing the necessity of a convenient locality, I rented this studio. From some half-dozen customers, most of them club women, my business has grown until now I am forced to employ two regular assistants, and am already dreading the day when another will have to be broken in. One assistant does my office work, while the other spends all her time in the libraries. I have to have material to build up articles and speeches on, and it is her business to get as much as the libraries can give.

"Couldn't I make as much money as a magazine or newspaper writer? I certainly don't believe I could make half as much. There is a great difference between speaking and reading. A speech or article that would pass muster and even be considered clever when well spoken might prove both flat and unprofitable reading. There is nothing original in my work—a few jokes, not always new; a few facts, historical or to suit the subject under discussion, clothed in good English. Any well-educated woman willing to give her time and mind to it might do as well. It is lack of time among the people who are rushing about in their efforts to keep up with everything more than anything else that puts money in my pockets. The majority of the men and women whose speeches and toasts I supply could do just as well themselves if they only had the time to think them out."—[Washington Post.

Pity the Poor Landlady!

Anne O'Hagan, who contributes an interesting article to the present number of Smith's, seems to know a good deal about the art of keeping a boarding-house and the privations and sacrifices that it entails on its votaries. She gives a heart-touching description of the trouble that the landlady must take with her guests, and concludes a harrowing description of the landlady's average day with an account of how she must spend her evening.

"Evening comes on," she says, "quiet evening that brings peace. The unmistakable odor of scorched soup salutes the nostrils of the diners as they descend to the basement banqueting-hall. They look at one another with raised eyebrows. Dinner begins with the roast. The landlady comes in and makes flushed apology. The cook, she explains, is leaving and is also drinking, and she herself hopes—— And she trails out with her hopes unexpressed, to the kindly reassurances of the men and the hissed announcement of the Second-floor Front that she has a 'good mind' to go out to dine at a restaurant.

"The miserable meal over and the cook, who has grown more and more obstreperous, being summarily dismissed, the landlady spends the evening happily as follows: She hears that the athletic young woman is convinced that some one has been stealing her property—a pair of slippers, a brooch, a silk petticoat are missing; she sees the Rear Hall-room take possession of the parlor at eight-thirty with a young man, she observes that the rest of the household drifts into the room for a few aimless minutes each, and, intercepted on the stairs, she agrees with the sociable Third-floor Fronts that it is a great pity the boarders are not more friendly; she herself sits in the dismantled dining-room with an evening paper, and there she receives the young medical student when he comes to ask her if she would mind telling the Shetland shawl widow not to bang on his wall in reproof when he is entertaining guests.

At ten o'clock she makes her weary rounds through the house, extinguishing the hall lights. She does not turn out the lower hall light, for the young woman who is entertaining in the parlor would resent that. The sound of the voices in the room where she hopes some time that night to sleep is very blithe and wakeful.

"At eleven-thirty the hall door slams again. Again she mounts to the parlor. It is empty. With a sigh of great weariness and gratitude she drags out of the stair closet the bedclothes for the 'handsome oak sideboard' so fittingly included in her drawing-room furniture. She enters the parlor, locks the tall doors into the hall, pulls down and out the sideboard, sets the clock for five-thirty—she herself must get the breakfast tomorrow morning—and creeps into bed.

"Oh, Imogene, stay in Plainfield; set up as village milliner, go out as 'mother's helper,' go out even as day's cleaner. But do not try to be a New York boarding-house keeper. If you do, the 'brother of the ox' will be a buoyant figure in comparison with yours. But no inspired bard will sing your troubles, no inspired brush celebrate your weary face and bent form."

The Fashionable Veil.

The development of the veil, however, has not stopped with the scarf. It has taken every possible form; round and oval; square and oblong. It is plain or spotted; finished with a border of lace, or with woven borders of satin; with ruffles or bands of ribbon, either velvet or satin, and even with thin Tom Thumb fringe. The veils of midwinter show all the fashionable colors—black, white, dull shades of rose, and dull and grass greens, tans, mode and fawn shades, royally bright blues, and again all the smoky grays which for months have been worn by the most fastidious. There are circular veils which chiefly serve the purpose of ornamentation. These are dropped over the hat, caught here and there to secure them, and are then allowed to fall in ripples about the head, at the whim of the winds. They usually fall a little below the chin and hang evenly all round. A small tulle, maline, or Chantilly net veil must be worn under them if the coiffure is to be protected. These circular veils usually have lace borders, but others are finished with narrow ruffles to weight them. These are also attractive, and for that matter, a bit more useful than the lace-bordered veils.—[Harper's Bazar.

Formal Frocks.

The evening frocks of this season are very dainty and airy, but their beauty lies rather more in the material and general effect than in cut and drapery. A charming frock for a young girl was in delicate shell-pink chiffon faille and the low round neck was trimmed at the top with a narrow but very full ruching of self-colored chiffon from which fell a wide bertha of the same, pointed at the front and back as well as over each shoulder. This bertha was used with square medallions of biscuite-colored filet lace. The long clinging skirt was a circular model fitted to the waist-line by darts and a pretty trimming was made by joining numerous medallions of the lace—matching those on the bertha—and binding them on either side with the chiffon ruching. This trimming band was set on the skirt just below the knees and was slightly pointed at the front and back. The costume was worn over a princess slip of chine silk showing a design of small pink roses. This is a new European fad and dainty in the extreme. Another evening dress designed for a young matron, was of black striped gauze, over a lining of deep electric-blue chine silk. The square-necked waist was finished by a band of electric-blue messaline, which ended at the left side in a large, flat bow. The little tucker which crossed the front, and the ruffles on the short, puffed sleeves were of black Chantilly lace and the five-gored skirt was shirred around the top and trimmed around the foot with two bias bands of the satin in medium width. A narrow girdle of the satin, slightly at the front, was passed through an oval buckle of rhinestones at the back and fell in long-shaped sash ends to the foot of the demi-train. A great many of the gowns designed for even-ing wear reveal the short empire waist line inaugurated last season, but this is only shown in gowns of the lightest materials, as they are the only ones that look well made in this style. The most fashionable materials for these fascinating creations are the flowered chiffon and mousseline, which are trimmed with narrow velvet or satin ribbon.

The princess gown is still the fa-vorite model, but this season it is often made with a fitted girdle, giving the effect of a two-piece costume, or, if designed for evening wear, when long lines are desired, it is fitted to the figure by narrow, graduated tucks. A dainty little evening gown, which was charm-ing in its simplicity, was made on these lines in pompadour silk in a green and white stripe. The square neck, and wide Mikado oversleeves were trimmed with narrow bands of applique chiffon trimming in a design of apple blossoms and their foliage. A wider band of the same trimming was around the foot of the trained skirt and the short, puffed sleeves were of plain green chiffon, finished with a band of the applique.—[The House-keeper.

Time Saving in Housework.

Do not consider mis-spent, the time used in any task tending to foster home-love, unity and comfort; and do not disregard the children's help. Oc-casional light tasks, considerately taught, will help to train for mother a reliable band of assistants, and will sweeten playtime as well, so there will be fewer disputes with young friends for mother to arbitrate.

A small kitchen with cooking uten-sils and materials near the stove saves much time and strength. If kitchen and pantry have not been built with this idea in view, perhaps shelves or cupboards may be contrived that will help. When making a trip to attic, cellar or store, consider if more than one errand can not be done at once. Putting things in place as soon as used, saves many extra journeys. Many a woman throws off her wraps in the parlor and, though passing immediately near to closet and hat box, never thinks of taking them with her. Do everything in its own time as far as possible. The sewing snatched up during the few spare moments found while preparing a meal, is apt to be soiled or so full of mistakes that many stitches will have to be removed, while, very likely, the meal will be de-layed as well.

Consider well the time, means and ability at your disposal, before enter-ing upon a large undertaking in any branch of housewifery. The most ir-ritating waste of time is that spent on a spoiled article or one obliged to re-main half completed. An occasional holiday, a daily hour spent in some restful recreation, a pair of rubbers for a rainy day, a handy wrap to throw on for a short run out doors, a warm wrapper and bedroom shoes for those obliged to rise often at night, do much toward lessening the many illnesses that beset the busy woman and are the most profitless of time destroyers. —[H. M. M., in The Housekeeper.

Helping the Child.

The women of the South are doing what women have always done—taking up the burden of the child determined to see that it has fair play, a square deal and justice. Ask any politician down there, especially among those who were recently defeated in the fight against the saloon, and they will tell you that if the women are advocates of these laws they are likely to come, as suddenly and unexpectedly as anti-saloon legislation came in spite of supposed indifference. There is no longer any question that the sentiment of the South is on the right side of these things.

There is no intention to minimize the work, and sentiment among the men of the South in behalf of children. Considering the difficulties and handicaps of that section, their interest and activity have been keen. It was Robert L. Taylor of Tennessee, now United States Senator, who twenty years ago became a pioneer in the juvenile court movement by advocating reforms of this kind. He incurred severe criticism for his pardon of any boy under 14 convicted of crime and sentenced to the peniten-tiary. It was not the Governor's in-tention to encourage crime, as some people said, but to emphasize his con-tempt for such a method of punishing and degrading children, when the State had provided no means for their cor-rection. The effect has emphasized the necessity of more enlightened methods. The writer recalls on an earlier trip through the South seeing fifteen boys in one bull pen with adult criminals. The boys had dog chains to keep them from running away. I told one of them that if he could get rid of those dog chains and had a chance to run away, I hoped he would run. The State may become infinitely more criminal than the child in fail-ing to provide industrial schools and wholesome environment for its young citizens.—[Judge Ben B. Lindsey, in January Charities and the Commons.

To Prevent Sagging Skirt.

In making the popular circular skirt having seams both back and front, it is desirable to stitch a narrow strip of the material in with the seams. This will prevent the stretching and sagging which so often makes skirts unsightly.

It is also very important to get the bottom edge of the skirt absolutely even, a much more difficult task than with the gored or pleated skirts. Accurate measurement with a yardstick is the only sure way to accomplish this.

A good, serviceable school dress is made from one of the new tweeds, which may be had in a variety of checks and stripes.

Make the skirt with five or seven gored model, with flat-stitched seams, the gores flaring perceptibly from the knees down.

These skirts are designed to be worn with the inevitable shirtwaist, either of flannel or light woolen or of rather heavy, white, wash material.—[Washington Star.

To Make Fancy Guimpes.

In making the fancy guimpes, such as are worn by both adults and children, the material should first be tucked, or spaces left for the lace insertion, if any be desired, before cutting out.

The lace can then be basted on either edge—flat on the tucked material—and the fabric cut away from beneath.

Leave about a qaurter of an inch on each side of the lace. Turn this back on the material and stitch on the edge of the lace.

Finish with feather stitching done with crochet or mercerized cotton, if preferred.

This makes a very pretty finish, and enables the garment to bear repeated launderings without the material fraying away from the lace, as it is apt to do in the case of most ready-made garments.

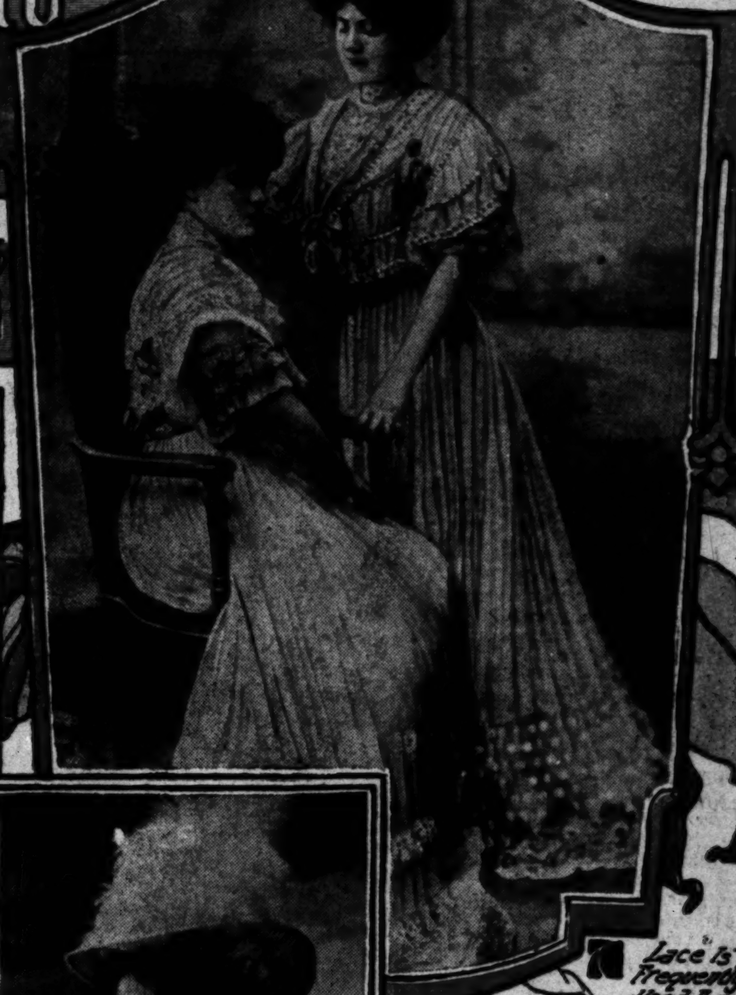
New Girdle and Scarf Effects on Spring Frocks



Lace Is Frequently Used for Girdles

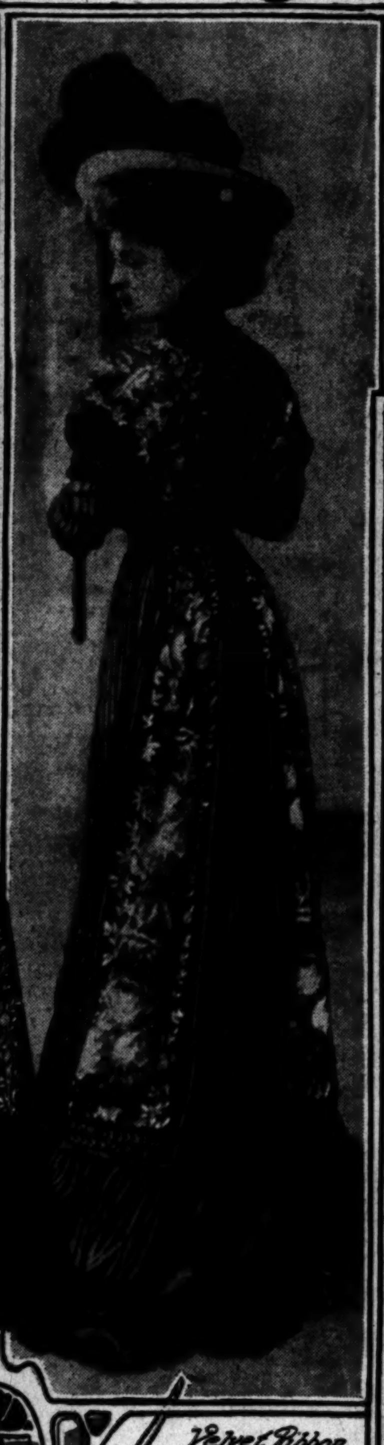
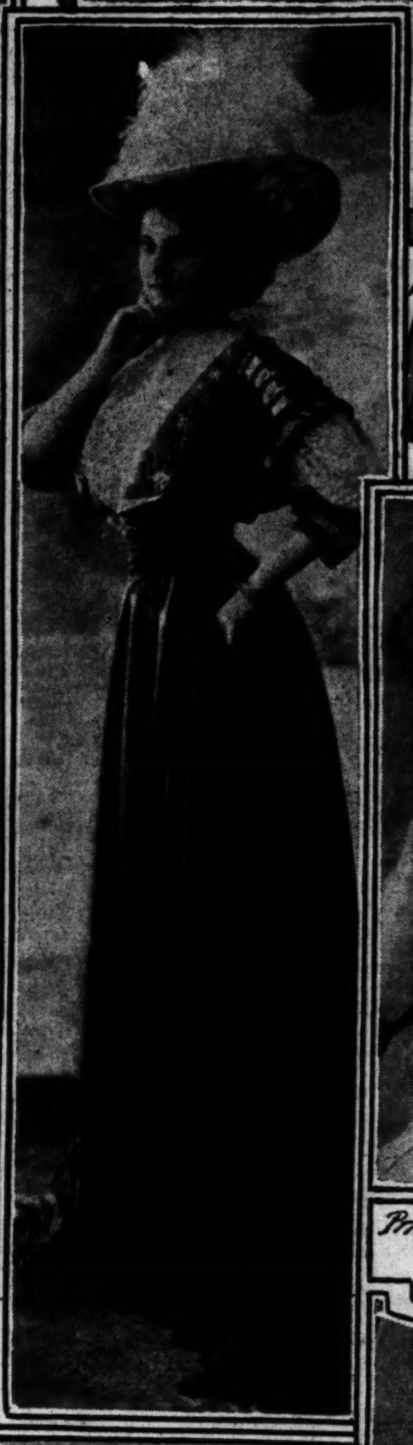
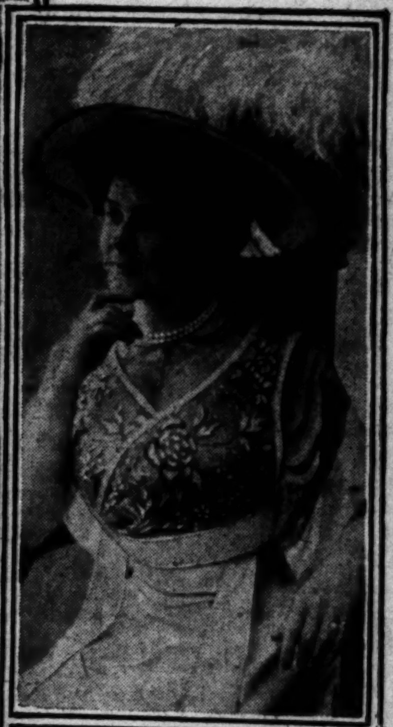
The Narrow Girdle Is Also Worn.



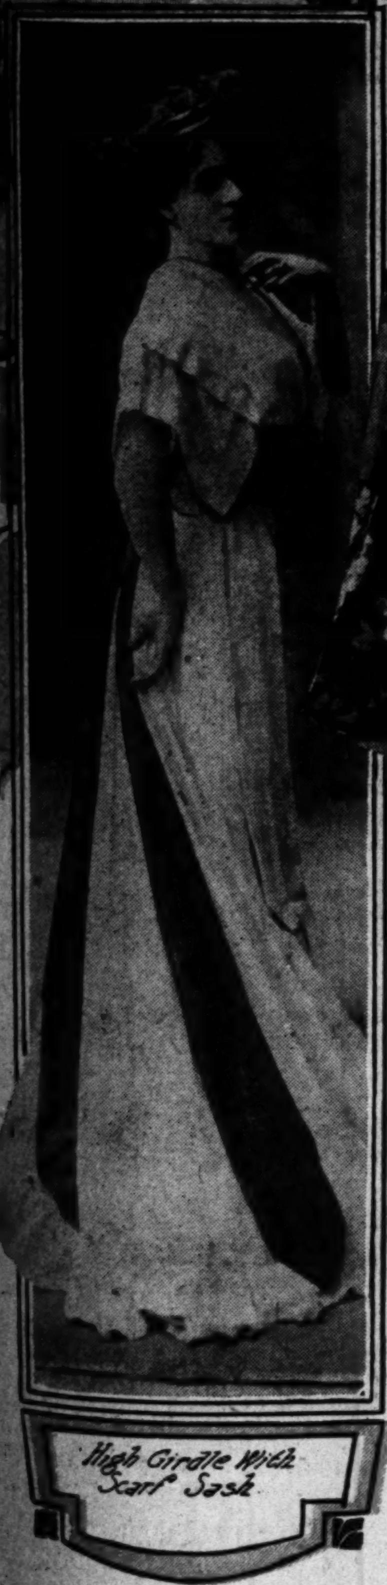
Velvet Ribbon and Pompadour Silk.



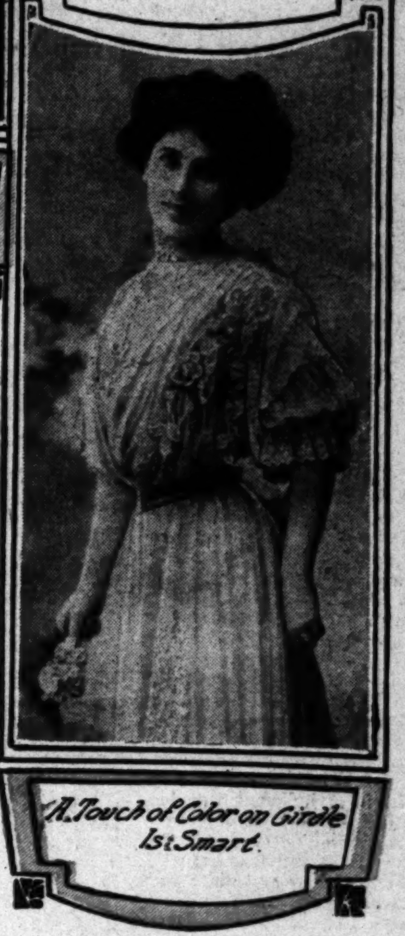
Of Soft Folds of Dress Material.



Princess Effect Is Still Popular.



High Girdle With Scarf Sash.



A Touch of Color on Girdle Is Smart.

THE newest touch on the early spring frocks is the attractive girdles and scarfs that adorn many of them.

The making of these girdles or scarfs is comparatively a simple matter. No great amount of sewing experience is required, and the making of one is an excellent investment of time and money.

They are so very new and smart that they work wonders for the style of the gown, be it new or old.

Pink is the favorite shade of separate girdles for white frocks, with yellow or tints of yellow following a close second.

One of the most attractive girdles shown was made of softest liberty satin ribbon six inches wide.

Three widths were required to cover the broad fitted and boned foundation that forms the belt part. This will be found much more satisfactory than covering with a single band of wide ribbon.

If desired, the boned foundation may be purchased already made, and then there remains only the work of tacking the ribbon on the foundation.

Most of the girdles fasten on the left side of the front under a huge rosette or flat bow.

Very often two long ends fall from this, almost reaching the knees, where they are finished with large silk tassels.

The effect is most graceful and artistic.

The girdles attached to the spring gowns are as varied in their nature as the sands of the sea; wide, crushed, fitted affairs made of the material of the gown are the standard thing, and the most elegant with a handsome cloth, owing to their absolute simplicity.

Most of these girdles fasten in the back under a little heading which folds over to one side; sometimes three flat buttons made of the cloth, hand embroidered, are tacked on, forming a pretty little deception.

The lace girdles are extremely new, as well as are the lace scarfs. Both are exquisitely pretty.

They are made of the lace stretched tightly over a boned belt fashioned from the lining.

Openwork embroidery and trimmings, passementeries and braids are used in the same way.

In lingerie gowns narrow bands of tucks alternate with the lace inserting, and make up most effectively.

These belts are worn straight around the waist, as shown in the seated figure, and they give a neat, trig effect that is very much sought after at present, although lacing or any pulled-in appearance is religiously avoided, rather straight lines being the thing.

The scarfs shown on the newest frocks are especially pretty.

Of course they have a new point, other than mere scarfs—a direct contrast with the gown that they adorn—and many charming and dashing effects are achieved along this line.

Take, for instance, a little white voile frock; its chief smartness may be made by fashioning a long scarf sash on the high girdle of one of the deep purple or yellow tints now considered so good.

Scarfs of tulle or chiffon edged with heavy fringe, tassels or beading whose weight keeps them in place are very smart for ball or dinner frocks.

Black scarfs are seen on white gowns and white scarfs on black gowns.

Sometimes they are taken around the waist over the girdle, crossed fichu fashion over the shoulder, or again fastened with a chou at the edge of the decolletage, quite independent of all other trimmings.

Certain folds of the scarf are often placed across the front of the blouse, and carry out the draped-scarf idea of the Greek costume as well as the Spencer of the modern period.

School For Housewives

BY MARION HARLAND

THE WOMAN WHO EATS ALONE

IT may still be a mooted point for whom a woman dresses herself becomingly. Some say for men.

Twice as many, a large proportion of the witnesses being ungrateful observers of the sterner sex, will have it that she arrays herself with an eye to the effect she will make upon "the other woman."

A small majority contend feebly that she conscientiously believes she owes it to herself to look her best; that she values what share of beauty has fallen to her lot as a talent she should improve.

This, apart from the simple pleasure she derives from the comely picture given back by the mirror before which she does the aforementioned "improving."

Nobody gainsays the statement that no woman cooks for herself.

Nor, as a rule, for the adult sisters who, with her, compose the family.

She tosses up pancakes and makes cookies to tickle the palates of her children; compounds broths and cooks meats to strengthen and to make them grow.

Her preparation for her own and for her sisters' diet has been aptly, if coarsely, summed up in a paragraph written by a physician, which I have quoted before in the course of these familiar talks:

"TOAST AND TEA"

"Women who live in a home where there is no man live on toast and tea the year round. If another woman chance to drop in at mealtime, they kill themselves to boil an egg.

"What wonder that they are scrawny, tallow-faced and neurotic!"

Since I first read this opinion of one who should speak advisedly upon the subject, I have speculated much upon the hypothesis indicated in the last clause.

Is there any other reason why the typical "old maid" who keeps her own house or flat should have the physical characteristics our critic describes bluntly?

May we not get light here upon the mysterious "delicate health" of the girl who rents two or more rooms and does her own cooking, earning a living, meanwhile, as dressmaker's apprentice, stenographer or clerk?

They are almost sure to be neat rooms; they are almost as certainly tasteful and comfortable, and fitted up with the various prettinesses belonging to toilet table and furniture that richer girls have taught her to consider the decencies rather than the luxuries of life.

"FUSSING WITH COOKING"

Her regard for these accessories to the comfort of daily living bolsters up her distaste to "fussing with cooking." Roasting and frying and broiling leave the smell of stale cookery in her curtains and upholstered furniture.

The rooms get hot and stuffy, and she gets heated and jaded.

And after all, what is the use of going through so much to get so little?

Thus runs her argument if she troubles herself to argue soberly on such a trifle.

The wise eat to live. Gluttons live to eat. Hunger is satisfied as quickly and surely with bread and butter and the nervous system braced as soon by a cup of good, strong tea as by a regular meal of soup, meat and vegetables. Not to speak of the saving in money, time and strength.

Her appetite is slender at the best, she will tell you, not without a touch of pride. The average middle-class woman has not quite outlived the Laura Matildaism of her mother's day and generation, when to confess hunger was unladylike and to satisfy it by partaking heartily and zestfully of substantial food was vulgar.

Who is to convince her that appetite grows by what it feeds upon?

That to be hungry when the stomach is empty is a normal and right condition, and lack of relish for wholesome food is disease?

That complexion depends upon health, and health upon food convenient for her?

That is, in a judicious rotation of nutritious articles of diet, well selected and well cooked. Bread and butter, toast and tea, are well enough in their way and place and time. Healthy human flesh was never made up entirely by them, and it never will be.

When this is the daily fare of our spinster or widow or young girl, the very blood undergoes a chemical change.

Salads are Healthful, Inexpensive and Easily Made

Learn to Read While Eating

Our plainspoken doctor did not stay to choose polite phrases in foreseeing the result upon skin, muscles and nerves. But he told the truth, and he might have gone further in the same direction and still kept within bounds.

Especially if he had added that our tea and toast devotee is almost invariably addicted to sweets.

When her monotonous fare leaves a craving in the ill-treated stomach, she opens the candy box and "fills up" with chocolates, marshmallows and gumdrops. If aching succeed the gnawing, a handful of cream peppermints sets all right.

In writing thus, I do not lose sight of the truth that the preparation of broths, meats and vegetables is not "nice" work.

RESOLUTION REQUIRED

Or that the woman who comes home at night, tired in mind and body by long hours of toil in offices or in salesrooms, would rather go to bed fasting than cook the simplest of "regular meals." I comprehend as well as if I had once sewed for a living, and suffer here the protest against the mere supposition as well, I say, as if I had ever stabbed myself with the needle from 8 A. M. until 6 P. M., that no small degree of resolution is required for the seamstress to warm a cupful of broth, broil a bit of steak or a chop, boil a potato and dress the salad that is to add the needed freshness to a winter's meal.

Bon Bon Habit a Foe to Beauty

Set Table Before Going Out

The Fireless Cooker is Helpful

Yet I insist that she should nourish digestive forces instead of stimulating the nerves to simulate vigor by "stewed tea" and sawdusty bread.

A VERITABLE GODSEND

To this class of solitaries the recently introduced fireless stove is a veritable godsend.

I gave one last year to a woman who goes out for day's work of whatsoever kind is offered her. In England she would be a charwoman. I take it that the root of "char" and of "chore" is one and the same. My worker is sober and industrious. So is her husband, but the earnings of the two barely support a family that comprises four children, all under 14.

The children take their luncheon to school with them.

"Cold victuals, of course," said the mother. "If I give them a cold supper, they get no substantial food all day.

"And somehow, it don't seem just right for growing boys and girls not to eat one hearty, hot meal for six days in the week.

"I believe in good, strong soup and stews of fresh meat—not much meat—and plenty of vegetables.

"I get awfully worried thinking it over, at times, me being out all day, you see."

I did see, and I told her I believed I could show her a way out of the tangle.

I expected her to be incredulous when I brought out the fireless cooker and explained how it worked. Her stare of amazement and her attempt to be respectfully grateful were funny enough to my cook and myself, who had tested the new labor-saver, and satisfactorily.

Mrs. Johnson accepted the "machine" and promised to follow directions obediently.

She came to see me a week later, fairly radiant with delight "The children and my husband can't say enough of what they think and feel," she said.

"First-off, not one of them had any faith in it. They made no end of fun of it. But they changed their tune when they tasted the first stew I made in it.

"I fixed it before going out in the morning, and it wasn't touched until I opened the cooker at 6 that evening. It was hot and tender and so good!

"I've cooked corned beef in it, and boiled cabbage and baked rice pudding in it all at the same time; there are three stories, you know.

"Another time I had a fine pot roast. I never tasted a better. And it makes beautiful soups."

I commend, then, the fireless, self-cooker—by whatever name it is known—to our lonely woman.

If you can get no other, make a hay stove of an old trunk and a discarded comfortable.

But cook your food, choosing what you like and what is nourishing and hot! Cold victuals are no better for the digestion of grown-ups in cold weather than for children.

THE HOUSEMOTHERS' EXCHANGE

IT IS with profound gratification that I note the growing interest manifested in our exchange by housewives all over the country. My only regret in this connection is the scarcity of space allotted to what I regard as the most important part of my work for and with the constituency.

I make room today for a lively letter from a new correspondent, but an experienced housekeeper.

Her "briefs" are pithy and practical:

I am a tyro in authorship, so do what you think best with these trifling briefs. If you choose to print them, I will send more some time.

1. Bake pies in little granite pans, instead of the old-fashioned, clumsy pie plates. Take them out of the oven with a cake turner.

Chicken pies are particularly nice baked thus.

2. Sprinkle coal oil on the top of range or stove before you begin to clean out the soot and ashes.

3. Dip your broom in coal oil and shake it before sweeping a very dusty room.

4. Clean sinks and bathtubs with gasoline, rubbing with a cloth, being very careful not to have fire or artificial light around while doing it.

5. Cook cereals in a bowl or a granite pan set in a saucepan of boiling water, after adding salt and boiling water to it. It beats the double boiler.

6. Cut a nice steak into a dozen or more pieces, and fry to a light brown in a tablespoonful of butter (more or less). When they are browned, take out the meat and fry in the same fat a clove of garlic, sliced. Next, put in half a cupful of mushrooms that have simmered tender on the stove.

Drain them free of water before they go into the frying-pan. Now add half a can of tomatoes and stew down to half the original bulk, making a rich gravy.

The tomatoes should be well seasoned with salt and pepper. Meanwhile, break a pound of macaroni into inch lengths and cook tender in two quarts of boiling water. Slice half a pound of cheese very thin, or grate it.

Drain the macaroni in a colander, and put a layer in the bottom of a bakedish; then a layer of gravy; next one of cheese.

Fill the dish in this way. Put into the oven until heated through.

Serve in the bakedish.

This, with good bread and butter, pickles and a nice salad, composes our dinner every other Sunday. The meat may be added to the gravy or be served separately.

7. Drain oysters in a colander of every drop of liquor. Roll them in cornmeal and fry in deep fat.

8. Grease sweet and Irish potatoes before baking them.

I sent a self-addressed envelope to you for the address of the lady who offered a stocking-foot pattern, but I made the mistake of addressing it to a rival paper, and I suppose they destroyed it.

M. G. T. (Memphis, Tenn.).

I am continually receiving letters addressed to the care of papers for which I do not write.

It would have been an easy matter for "the rival" to forward yours.

The donor of the stocking-foot pattern is overrun by applications.

A Word of Gratitude

Before presenting my contribution and before asking for help, let me bring a word of gratitude for the never-failing recipe for light bread given by you a year ago and repeated lately.

In my part of the country few housekeepers have made bread, and it had always seemed a bugbear to me. When I read your recipe, it seemed too easy to be true, but I determined to try and to succeed. It has the finest flavor of any white bread I ever ate. My enthusiasm abates not.

May I suggest one of my favorite ways of cooking lamb's liver?

Slice the liver in rather thin and small slices. Pour boiling water over it. Let it stand thus for a few minutes. Then dry, and roll in meal which has been salted and peppered. Fry a few slices of bacon until all the fat is tried out.

Remove the bacon from the skillet and fry the liver in the hot fat until done. Place the liver on a dish where it will keep hot; drain all the fat out of the skillet and make a cream gravy, as for (so-called) Maryland fried chicken.

2. Another and a homely hint: If you moisten a cloth slightly with coal oil and rub your porcelain bathtub with it, those obstinate streaks which refuse to yield to soap and water will come off as by magic.

I shall be glad to send a recipe for braised tongue at some other time.

Now, can you tell me why my lemon custards fall with such unfailing regularity? I make them by my mother's recipe, and hers were the best I ever ate.

Mine rise beautifully, and as soon as they come out of the oven, down they fall! I have the like experience with sweet-potato custards, so it must be my baking that is at fault.

Please give me a really good recipe for cooking kidney beans.

Pardon my too-long letter. You don't know how much more I want to say.

Mrs. J. C. (Nashville, Tenn.).

Say it another time.

You have paid your entrance fee and all future dues by your "nice" letter. Here is a recipe for cooking kidney beans. Somebody else may send you a better, and tell you what is the matter with your custards.

I fancy that you bake them too fast. Cover them until they are "set," then brown.

Kidney Beans a la Lyonnaise.

Soak over night and put a tiny bit of soda in the water. In the morning, cover with boiling water and let them get lukewarm in this. It will take off the raw, rank taste many dislike.

Throw away this water and cover deep with boiling, slightly salted. Boil tender, but not to breaking. Drain in a colander, salt, if needed, and set in the colander within an open oven to dry. Melt in a frying-pan a tablespoonful of dripping or of butter, and when it hisses, cook in it a teaspoonful of minced onion and as much chopped parsley.

Salt and pepper to taste, and put in the beans. Shake over the fire until the beans are coated with the hissing mixture and heated through. Do not let them brown. Serve very hot.

This is the best way of cooking beans of which I have any knowledge. I hope you will be as successful as you were with the bread and like it as well.

Handkerchief Hints

Have any of our members ever tried pressing wet handkerchiefs on a window or a mirror when ironing is impossible? When they are dry, fold. They look as well as when ironed. Ribbons may be washed and pressed in like manner.

L. M. (Chicago).

The same tale has been told to us by other housewives. Are the handkerchiefs and ribbons really smooth?

Or have they a suspicion of rough dryness about them?

When Baby Chokes

Do mothers know that when baby chokes on food, or other matter, lodged in the windpipe, if the little one's arms are raised and held high above his head, the offending substance will come up or go down?

I have heard of a man who was choking with a piece of meat. A young man rushed up to him and raised his arms high, holding them forcibly in that position, and he was relieved instantly.

I have been often benefited by your Exchange, and hope to be of some use to it some day.

E. H. (North Attleboro, Mass.).

You have been of use to it.

And when your say was said, you stopped and left room for the next speaker. That is a rare accomplishment in writer or in speaker.

Another, and a more violent method of curing choking is to grasp the strangling child by the heels and hold him head downward.

I have seen it tried again and again and never saw it fail to relieve the sufferer.

A New Feature of Great Value

OF INTEREST to every home-loving woman is Marion Harland's "School for Housewives," which has been secured as a permanent feature of "The Sunday Times." Without exaggeration, the statement can be made that there is nothing in America today that can equal it.

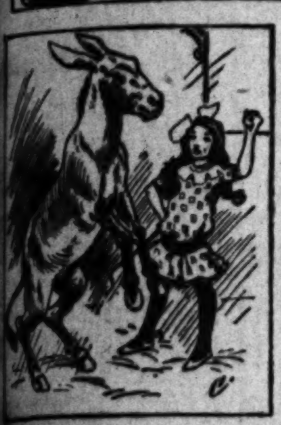
Bertha's Menagerie



[illegible] THE MULE LEARNED MORE READILY"

WHAT an amusing idea," said Bertha's father, reading from his paper; "it says here that soldiers of some of the French garrisons are being given lessons in dancing."

"Why does it seems so amusing to you?" responded the general. "Dancing is an excellent exercise, which strengthens and hardens the muscles and gives grace to the body. I myself am very fond of dancing."

Little Bertha, who was very fond of the general, lost not a word of this conversation. It also gave her an idea which her father would no doubt have called "[illegible]," too. Every morning thereafter she was never to be found for at least an hour. Far back in the garden she had opened her "dancing school," with which she hoped to surprise the general.

Some of the dogs were her first pupils. When they had learned to prance [illegible] on their hind legs in time to her [illegible], she next began to train her rabbits. Then she instructed the [illegible] and after that the geese and [illegible] who proved very dull, indeed.

Chickens, turkeys and pigeons were taught as well. Her pussycat found it most difficult of all to learn—even the goats and the mule learned more readily—but at last she had them all trained to dance to her satisfaction.

Then it was she invited the general and all the rest of her friends to witness a grand exhibition she was going to give them. The general and the other guests came, wondering greatly what the "grand exhibition" was to be.

When every one was assembled Bertha's pets were brought in by the hostlers. They were quiet for the moment, while Bertha explained to the guests what she was about to do. But instead of dancing at her command, the cat flew at the birds, a dog ran after the cat, the parrot grabbed hold of a dog's ear, and the whole company fled in the wildest disorder.

"Oh, general!" sobbed Bertha, "I thought I would surprise you, specially, by having all of them dance for you. They really do dance all right by themselves—and I thought they'd all be right together!"

The general soothed the little girl, and praised her for her patience and skill. But, although she was pacified, Bertha never forgave her "menagerie"—and forthwith discontinued the "dancing school."

"Jimuel"

SHE was the new teacher, who had just come that morning for the first time, and was now engaged in becoming "acquainted."

"What is your name, little boy?" she asked.

"Sam," was the reply.

"No," explained the teacher, "that is only a nickname. 'Samuel' is your name."

Then she questioned a bright-eyed little chap sitting beside Samuel.

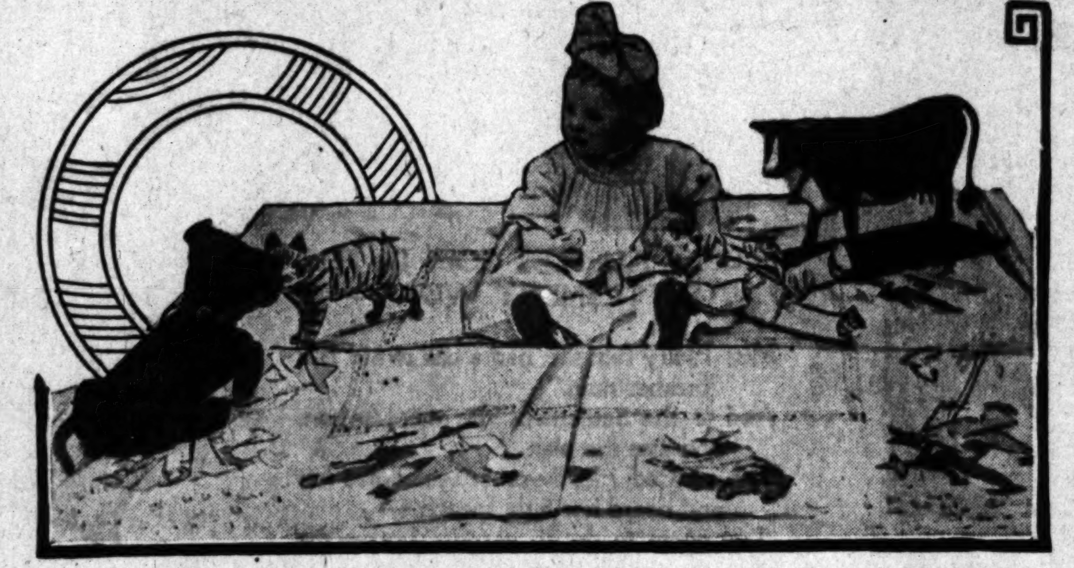
"I 'spose my name's 'Jimuel,' then," responded the boy, "although I'm always called Jim."

"Dad," began Bobby, "the world is round, isn't it?"

"So I believe, my son," replied dad.

"Well, dad," continued Bobby, "how can it come to an end?"

Naughty Puss and Wicked Doggie



OH DEAR! I wish someone would come—
I know there'll be a fight;
My heart's jus' goin' ippy-dum
'Cause I've got such a fright.

That funny thing the doggie wears
So he can't even bite,
But still, the awful way he glares
Looks mighty like a fight!

O, naughty dog, and pussy, too,
You know you shouldn't fight;
It's such a wicked thing to do,
And 'tis ill-mannered quite.

The Queen's Pathetic Treasure.

Of the many valuable treasures in the possession of Queen Alexandra, there is none more highly valued by her than a modest milk-jug of earthenware, which she keeps in the boudoir attached to her dairy at Sandringham. It was given to her by a poor dying girl, whose latter days had been soothed by the tender nursing and sympathy of the princess, Alexandra. When the queen entertains any very exalted guest at afternoon tea in her Swiss chalet, it is from this humble but priceless jug that she pours the cream.

Not So Flattering.

Gertie (who has behaved very rudely to her aunt)—Auntie Clara, pray don't go away yet.

Aunt (flattered)—I had no idea you were so fond of me, Gertie.

Gertie—Oh, Auntie Clara, it isn't that, but mamma said I was to be whipped when you had gone.

Too Slippery.

Mother (laughing) to Tommy, who talks rather much—Tommy, you must learn to hold your tongue.

Tommy (after a faithful trial) — I can't, mother; it's too slippery.

The Richest Prince

THE richest prince is not always he that reigns over the most extensive and populous empire, with the largest and the most prosperous cities and the best-filled treasure-house.

Back in the middle ages there reigned a prince called Eberhard the Good, who was a grand old man, just, wise and true, and his little principality was the envied corner of Europe. For, though he was only a grand duke, he ruled so justly and well that his subjects were happy and they all loved him as a father. There was a feast, they tell us, one day at the city of Worms, and all the German princes were sitting at the banquet table, when a dispute arose as to which of them was the richest and most prosperous ruler. Prince Ernest, of Saxony, boasted of broad domains, brimming with gold and silver mines, and his great palace filled with golden treasure.

"I am richer than he," said the Elector Frederick, of the Rhine. "From my grand castle at Heidelberg I can look over leagues and leagues of hillsides covered with vineyards and valleys rich with golden grain fields."

King Louis, of Bavaria, claimed the palm of sovereignty, "because," he said, "prosperous cities and rich old cloisters, filled with works of art, are greater treasures than gold or silver mines, vineyards or ripened grain fields."

Then all looked at the old lord of Wurttemberg, whose hair and beard were white as the snow on Alpine peaks, and whose blue eyes were shining with a smile. "I have little to boast of," he said, meekly. "There are but few cities in Wurttemberg, and no silver mines, no famous vineyards, and no great store of treasure and precious stones. But I own one rare jewel—I can wander anywhere in my dominions without fear, and lay my old head in peaceful slumber in the cot of my humblest subject."

"It is enough," they cried in chorus; "we yield the palm to thee, for there are no richer treasures than a people's love and loyalty."

FRED M. COLBY.

His Answer Was Soft.

"Always remember, Henry, that a soft answer turneth away wrath. And when another boy insults you, or even strikes you, bear this in mind and don't lose your temper."

Henry promised, and departed for school.

At lunch, when he returned home, his mother asked if he had kept his promise.

"Yes, ma," replied Henry. "Tommy Jones wanted to lick me—and I gave him a very soft answer."

His mother smiled happily. "Ah! you would not fight?"

"No, but I hit him in the eye with a rotten apple," replied the innocent Henry.

Found Out Nothing.

A curious person of a certain town, who loved to find out everything about the new residents, espied the son of a new neighbor, one morning, in the doctor's.

"Good morning," he said. "Little boy, what is your name?"

"Same as dad's," was the quick reply.

"Of course, I know, little boy; but what is your dad's name, dear?"

"Same as mine, sir."

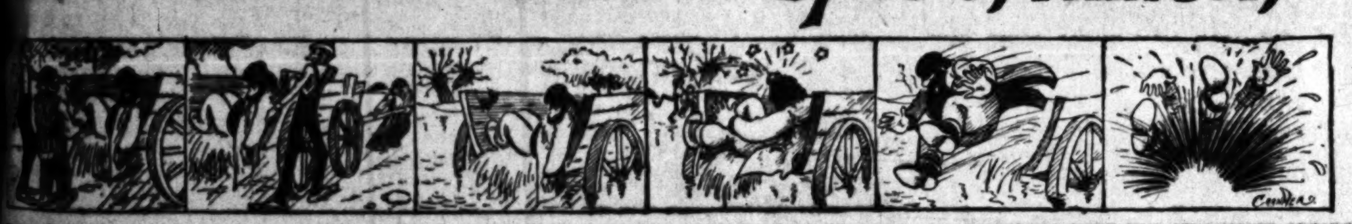
Still he persisted. "I mean what do they say when they call you to breakfast?"

"They don't never call me; I allus gets there first. See?"

The Mysterious Egg.

An egg can be shown in a bottle with a mouth too narrow for it to have passed through. How did it get there? When an egg is soaked in equal parts of strong acetic acid and water it becomes softened, and may be pressed into any form. Water will again harden it. You might remark that you had at first thought of exhibiting the hen in that bottle, but left that trick for another occasion.

Tired Tim Takes a Bath in Spite of Himself



Good Advice

HE WAS a wee Scotch laddie, with a plaid muffler round his neck and a plaid cap perched on his small round head. And this afternoon he was caddying for the bishop on a golf course in Scotland.

The bishop had never played golf before. One could see that with half an eye. But the bishop had the admirable trait of perseverance.

After making a neat tee on the ground the boy placed the ball upon it and then stepped back to await developments.

The bishop swung sturdily at the ball—and missed. Then he swung savagely at the ball—and sent a clod of earth flying through the air. Nothing daunted, he swung again, missed and sat down suddenly. But still he wasn't disheartened. He was about to make another try with his last stick, when he paused, turned to the lad and asked: "My boy, what would you advise me to do now?"

The caddy squinted his eye, pondered a moment, and then replied, without the shadow of a smile:

"Give it a clout with the bag, sir."

His Advice.

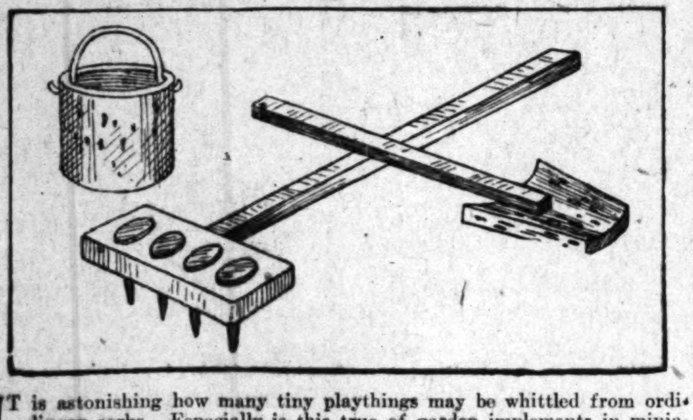
Little Nellie, aged 5, said to her father the other evening:

"Papa, I want to ask your advice."

"Well, my dear, what is it all about."

"What do you think it will be best to give me for a birthday present?"

Playthings from Corks



IT is astonishing how many tiny playthings may be whittled from ordinary corks. Especially is this true of garden implements in miniature.

The drawings above show you several interesting little articles constructed in this manner. But you can, no doubt, find many others quite easy to make.

Ambition Realized

A LAD in a German village had set his heart upon presenting the town church with a fine organ.

Every one in the village discouraged the attempt and laughed at him. But he was not to be turned aside from his purpose, and finally, after some years, the organ was erected.

Then came the most discouraging moment of all. When he put his feet on the pedals and his hands on the keys, he found that he couldn't play the organ. All the people mocked him anew.

It was just at this time that the great musician, Sebastian Bach, was visiting a neighboring city. In his despair, the lad went to the master and besought him to come to his aid.

Bach's heart was touched at this appeal, and consented. When it became known that this great master was to play, people flocked to the little church from far and near. The music came from the very soul of the composer, and the people listened to such sounds of glorious harmony as they had never heard before.

After all, the lad had attained the ambition of his early youth—and in such a way!

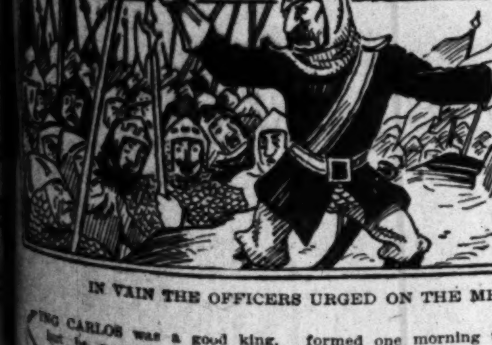
More Blessed.

"Pa," said Willie thoughtfully, "I think I know what the minister meant when he said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

"Yes," replied his pa. "Well, what did he mean?"

"Castor oil."

General Wise Outwits the Enemy



IN VAIN THE OFFICERS URGED ON THE MEN

KING CARLOS was a good king, but he was careless. Loving peace himself, he very often forgot that many of the rulers of neighboring kingdoms were more warlike. So it was that when another king declared war, Carlos was greatly disturbed. But he was no coward, and promptly sent back acceptance to the challenge. Then he straightway forgot all about the war and settled back to enjoy himself.

He was surprised, indeed, to be informed one morning that an immense army was encamped some distance from the walls of his city. At once he sent for the general-in-chief of the army. Now, this general was really very clever—Wise was his name, and "wise" he was—but the king had always refused his demands for more men and better arms, so that he was by no means prepared to go out to meet the foe and return victorious.

"I shall advance with the army, if you so wish it, sire," said he to the king, "but I tell you frankly there is small chance of success. They are ten times as powerful as we."

The king replied emphatically: "No, that is decidedly out of the question. We must think of some other plan. I know, general, that it was I who got you into this fix, but I fear I must impose upon you still further and ask you to get rid of this annoyance."

The general went away greatly perturbed. Without question, he had a most difficult task before him. But, as the king trusted him implicitly, he vowed not to abuse the royal confidence, nor would he fail were there any possible loophole of escape.

That night a vast army of workmen was at work, directed by the general himself. The king was astonished when they told him that gigantic mirrors were being hung outside the city walls, but he had faith in General Wise's ability and decided to await developments.

Next day the enemy began to march upon the city. But when they came within a short distance of the walls and saw what seemed to be a powerful army opposing them, they were filled with dismay, for they little dreamed of such resistance. In vain the officers urged on the men. They did not care to risk what seemed like certain death; smitten with fright they broke ranks and fled in the wildest confusion.

By merely placing the mirrors General Wise had saved his country! Of course, the enemy had only seen their own reflections in the mirrors—and were frightened at themselves!

King Carlos heaped all possible honors upon General Wise and also heeded his words of advice by directing that the army be strengthened at once and well equipped with new arms.

When the neighboring king heard of how he had been duped he sent another army into the field, but by that time General Wise was fully prepared to fight and had little difficulty in coming off the victor.

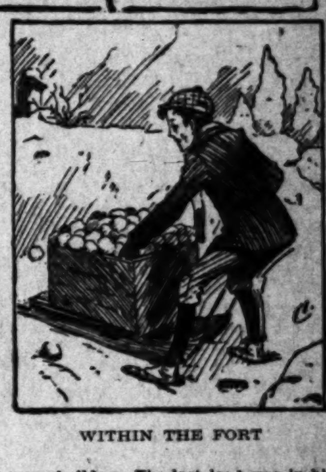
Battle of Possum Hill

FOR the most part, there existed strict dividing lines throughout Homeville, separating the territory of the "Bloody Robbers" from that of their rivals, the "Bloody Pirates." But Possum Hill was any man's land; never was the claim to it made good by either band. Here was a favorite battling ground for the two forces during winters, when snow lay heavy and "stuck."

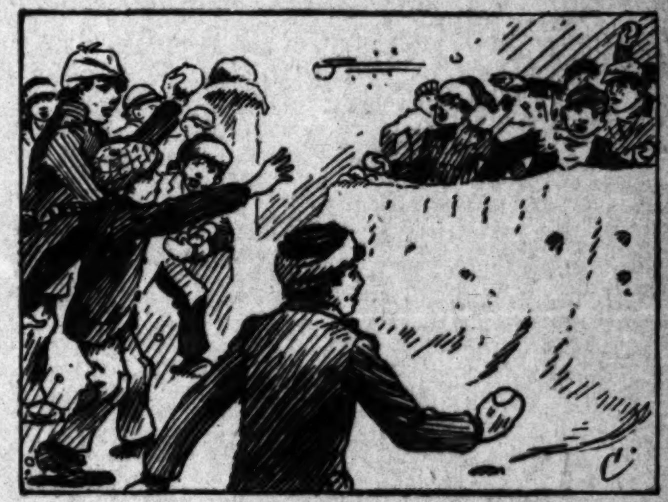
This year the "Bloody Pirates" stole a march upon the enemy, and had erected a strong and handsome snow fort before the "Robbers" had knowledge of this stroke of enterprise. Not long were they to remain in undisputed possession, however. The customary fight began in quick order. During the whole of one Thursday afternoon every member of the two gallant bands played truant in order to continue the struggle. Try as they would, the "Robbers" were unable to oust their opponents from the position.

Right on the hill had the fort been built. Its walls were high, offering fine protection to the defenders. Inside were heaped countless numbers of snowballs, accumulated by only the greatest kind of industry. In charging this stronghold, the "Robbers" were compelled to rush forward entirely in the open, exposed to the merciless fire of their adversaries. Brave as they were, the "Robbers" were at last obliged to raise the siege and repair to their homes in deep discouragement.

But that night "Shorty" came to his comrades' rescue. While all Homeville lay peacefully asleep, Shorty slid from the window of his room, dropped upon the roof of the outhouse below and quickly ran cross town to Possum Hill—a jaunt of at least three miles.



WITHIN THE FORT



EXPOSED TO THE MERCILESS FIRE OF THEIR ADVERSARIES

Beyond the hill lay Sugar's homestead, and it was currently reported that during the night Sugar's big bulldog was loosed and permitted to roam over the hill and the surrounding country. Every boy in Homeville, whether "Robber" or "Pirate," had an unbounded respect for that bulldog, so no one had ever sought heretofore to ascertain the truth of this statement. Shorty's courage was put to its severest test.

Stealing silently up the hill Shorty was soon within the walls of the fort. His first impulse was to stamp to pieces the great number of snowballs he found there. This, of course, would leave the "Pirates" helpless when next morning's assault would be made by the "Robbers." But it seemed such a shame to destroy so many nicely made balls that Shorty decided to carry them down the hill and hide them where he and his comrades would find them.

So earnestly was Shorty engaged in this task of transporting snowballs that he quite forgot his fear of the enormous bulldog. The last load was in his arms when he heard a patter of feet behind him. The next instant Shorty was speeding down the hill. Never did he go faster in his life. Not even did he pause to glance behind him at the savage bulldog, now swiftly gaining. It took him just a fraction of a second to shinny up the pine at the bottom of the hill—and at the end of that fraction of a second Sugar's bulldog had stationed himself at the bottom of the tree.

That dog kept guard for "keeps," too. Hour after hour passed, until Shorty was almost frozen. But he would rather freeze on his perch than risk falling into the clutches of the beast below. Somehow he managed to cling until dawn, when Farmer Sugar, coming in search of the dog, released the shivering lad and took him to the farmhouse.

The "Pirates" lived nearest to Possum Hill and so gained the fort before their enemy. Hardly were they inside than the "Robbers" appeared. Then the "Pirates" discovered, too late, that all their snowballs were gone. The next moment there darted a figure from Farmer Sugar's house. Down the hill it ran stiffly shouting: "Charge 'em, you 'Robbers'! They haven't got a snowball!"

In just five minutes the fort was in possession of the "Bloody Robbers"—and remained so until the sheriff came in search of them for playing the truant that morning as well as the afternoon before. It was only then that the "Robbers" learned of Shorty's heroic deed, as he modestly recounted how the snowballs of the "Pirates" had disappeared.

Shorty "caught it" from his pa as well as from the teacher—but with the words of his comrades' praise still ringing in his ears he didn't mind it at all!

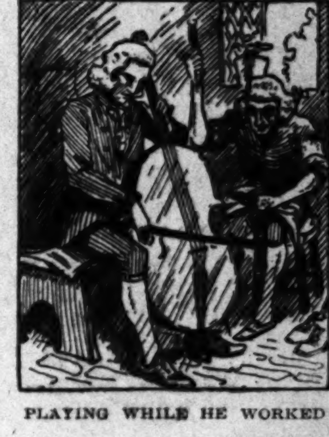
Haydn as a Boy

THE celebrated musician Haydn had, in his youth, a very miserable time of it. Taken into the home of a charitable shoemaker, Haydn endeavored to repay the good man for his kindness by playing to him while he worked in his shop.

During all this time the concert-masters were enriching themselves through Haydn's musical compositions, and giving the lad practically nothing in return. Already celebrated throughout all Germany the young man himself was entirely ignorant of his renown.

It so happened that one day the Countess Thun, having arranged a concert, found that the pianist had fallen ill at the last moment. A lackey promised to find another musician, and presently returned with Haydn. The poorly clad youth was ushered into the magnificently appointed salon.

"Is it true, my friend," asked the countess, "that you are an expert player of the pianoforte and can read this sonata?"



PLAYING WHILE HE WORKED

What was the surprise of Haydn to recognise in the piece of music hande him one of his own compositions!

"I can play it all the better, madam," replied he, "insomuch as it is a sonata composed by myself."

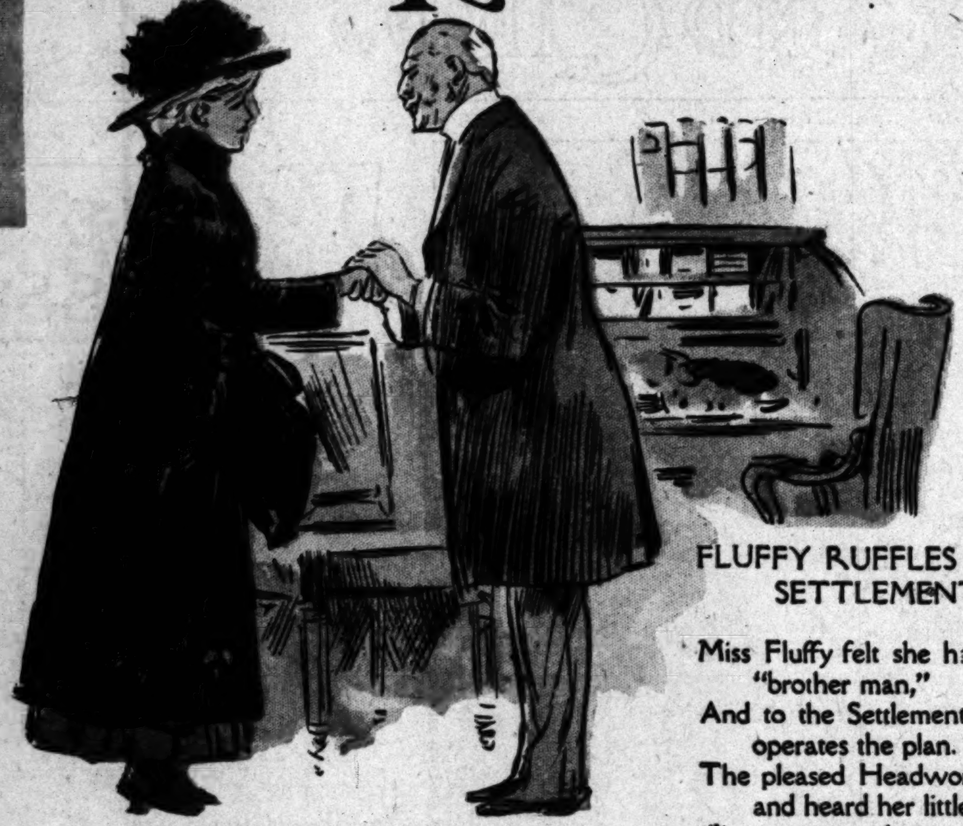
The countess responded: "You deceive yourself, my dear sir, for the piece is by the great Haydn."

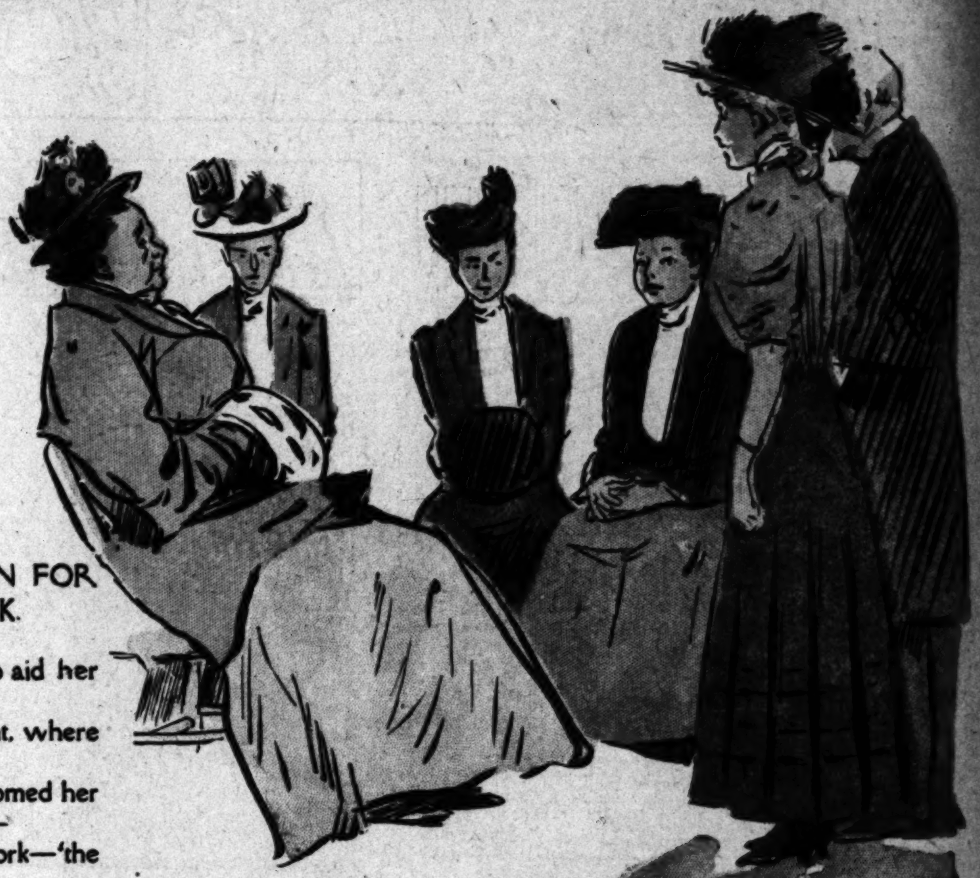
"But I am Haydn," insisted the boy whereupon the entire brilliant company smiled.

Hardly had he begun to play, however than all acknowledged that the musician certainly could be no other than the master. Under his magic spell the instrument fairly sang, and when he had finished all murmured in respectful admiration.

The days of proof were now over for Haydn. But in the midst of all his honors and successes he still bore in mind his old friend, the shoemaker. He bought for the good old man a house nearby and often stopped to chat over old times with him.

FLUFFY RUFFLES Drawings by Wallace Morgan





FLUFFY RUFFLES GOES IN FOR SETTLEMENT WORK.

Miss Fluffy felt she had a call to aid her "brother man,"
And to the Settlement she went, where operates the plan.
The pleased Headworker welcomed her and heard her little speech.—
"I've come to do an earnest work—'the other half' to teach."

"You are exactly what we want," the pleased Headworker said.
"We've socialists and rhapsodists and anarchists, all red;
We've altruists from Russia, German optimists, indeed,
But of dainty Fluffy Ruffleses, we do have a crying need!

"In studying the 'Happy Home' this class finds great delight,
Composed of wives intent to keep their husbands home at night.
So here, my dear, you might begin and give some good advice
And show them how, at little cost, to fix a flat up nice."

For object lesson all the class repaired to Grogan's flat,
They brought in bowls of shrubs and blooms, rugs, scarfs and things like that;
A Botticelli picture print was tacked upon the wall.
"Oh, this is lovely!" Fluffy said, as she surveyed it all.

"Oh, here's the husband! Now we'll see how all these things he'll greet.
Oh! Oh! The beast! he wants to throw the 'trash' into the street!
But no, I knew he would be charmed: he'll let the dressings stay—
His higher nature has been stirred. And now we'll go away!"

CHALLENGE TO FLEET ISSUED BY MARKSMEN.

Southern California Rifles to Form Team to Shoot Targets When Squadron Reaches These Waters. Barbecue Planned for Sunday.

THE Southern California Rifles have issued a challenge to the United States fleet, under Admiral Evans, now on the way to Southern California waters, to contest in a target tournament here while the fleet remains. The following challenge was forwarded to the fleet last night:

"The Southern California Rifles, an organization composed of sharpshooters, scouts, and expert horsemen, hereby issue a challenge to the best rifle and revolver team in Admiral Evans's fleet to meet a similar team from the Rifles when the fleet visits Southern Californian waters. The National Guard of California is invited to make it a three-cornered match. An early reply will be appreciated.

"W. H. LEONARD, President.
"C. HARVEY-ELDER, Secretary."

The tournament is to consist of rifle and revolver shooting at targets, and feats of expert horsemanship by the Mounted Rifles, together with any form of entertainment which may be planned.

The team is to be picked from the best shots in the organization, to be determined by a series of competitive contests to be held while the fleet is on its journey to the Northern Pacific.

An invitation has been sent to the National Guard of California to make the meet three-cornered. There are some excellent shots in the guards. The members are practicing weekly at a range near Eastlake Park.

OFFERS BARBECUE.

The Board of Control is arranging to hold the first shoot next Sunday. Capt. Steve Queirolo of the fire department, who owns the lease of the Heidelburg Inn property in Cahuenga Pass, in addition to offering a rifle range to the Rifles, has offered to give a free barbecue next Sunday, should the Rifles decide to hold a shoot there.

A committee has been appointed to arrange for constructing the rifle range, and if preparations are sure to be made complete, the first shoot will be held there, and the offer of Capt. Queirolo will be accepted.

The committee appointed consists of J. S. Hendrickson, Ray Howard and James Forbes. The members are to meet officers of the board in The Times building tonight at 8 o'clock to make arrangements.

J. S. Hendrickson is working with Robert M. Yost to form the First Troop, with the Vaquero Club as a nucleus. Hendrickson has evolved a plan to form a mounted corps of twenty horsewomen to act as an auxiliary company of nurses to aid the Hospital Corps. Several surgeons have volunteered to instruct the women. A number of excellent horsewomen have volunteered, and most of them can shoot and ride almost as well as the men. The plan has been accepted by the Board of Control, and Hendrickson given full power to go ahead with the organization.

The Harvard School boys have been the first in the schools to offer to join the organization. To provide for boys in the high schools and colleges who desire to learn to shoot and conduct target practice, another company has been formed, to be known as the Cadet Company. O. S. Lowsley has been appointed to superintend the organization. He has appointed assistants in some of the schools to aid him. At Harvard School, William Glasswell has been authorized to form a squad; Tom Felt at Polytechnic High School, and Ed North at the Los Angeles High School, have been authorized to act in similar capacity in their schools.

Leon A. Atwood of SanBernardino has been appointed to organize a squad in that town, Redlands and Riverside. The high school cadets in each of these towns have been doing considerable target practice, and there are a lot of other sharpshooters in the upper end of the valley who are anxious to join.

Sierra Madre is anxious to form a mounted squad. J. A. Madden of that town has been authorized to go ahead with the preliminary work.

SIXTH WARD OUT.

Members of the Sixth Ward Good Government Club say that the members of the organization, numbering some 130, desire to join the Southern California Rifles in a body.

The Native Sons are giving the organization of the Rifles their full endorsement. Three parlors, including Sierra Madre Parlor, Ramona Parlor and La Fiesta Parlor, have already so voted. The matter is to be brought up before a meeting of the Los Angeles Parlor, Monday night.

It is proposed by some to form an automobile corps to serve in transporting bodies of the Rifles to any given point in the fastest time possible, where railway facilities are not at hand.

J. F. Seymour, Jr., a young civil engineer who claims to know every foot of Southern California, is preparing a large topographical map, one mile to the inch, showing all roads, streams, railways and physical conditions of Southern California, which he proposes to donate to the Rifles to be used by the officers in directing the establishment of rifle ranges and in conducting target practice.

DR. SHURTLEFF BUSY.

Dr. F. C. Shurtleff is rapidly organizing the band of scouts which will work as a part of the Southern California Rifles in mapping out the country of the south coast, locating water holes, springs and streams and planning for a general exploitation of the mountain region.

Shurtleff already has picked some of the men, all of whom have had long experience and trailed over every foot of mountain land from the divide to the Mexican line. These men have lived in the wilds nearly all their lives, trapping, hunting, herding cattle, and serving in campaigns against the Indians.

Shurtleff will have an advisory board of four men. He will act as chief of scouts. Of that board, two men will probably be Jean Plummer, an old-time plainsman of Southern California, who is well known by the gun men of the country, and Signor Valenzuela, a Spanish cow puncher of the old school, who knows every footpath in the great mountain ranges of the south country. With these two men on the advisory board it will be fair sailing toward a successful mapping out of the country.

An expert surveyor will be another member of that board. The tumbled about, crazy-quilt formation of the southern ranges offers a great chance for scout work. An army of considerable number could be hidden in almost any of the big cañons of these mountains.

In case of a war on the Coast it would be a great advantage to have the lay of the mountain land mapped out, and the scouts will undertake this work.

Dr. Shurtleff expects to pick a hundred men for his band. He will school those who are not familiar with all the requirements of the organization. The scouts will carry carbines, side arms of a character best suited to themselves, a blanket, a canteen and wire nippers, besides a lasso and small outfit. While on their rides through the country they will wear blue shirts, campaign hats, corduroy pants faced with leather, and boots.

Dr. Shurtleff will have some expert gun men with him, among them being Joe Singer, the crack rifle shot of California, and others. He will give his men a try-out within the next two weeks. He will teach those who are unfamiliar with a rope the trick of dragging dead branches from trees for fire wood, and how best to blaze trails and drain water holes, when necessary. The game of wire nipping will be taught the men of the scouts.

First Water Polo.

The L.A.A.C. will play its first game of water polo next Thursday night with the Bimini Baths team, in the Bimini plunge. The first practice was held Friday night, with Loomis, Whelan, Mitchell, Derby and E. Brown out for practice.

FIRST MOTOR MAKES TRIP TO EL CENTRO.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

EL CENTRO, (Cal.) Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The first automobile to make the trip from San Diego to El Centro arrived here at 4:30 this afternoon. The machine is a Reo and it carried E. T. Aiken, C. H. Bigelow and A. G. Padgot. The party left San Diego Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock and stopped the first night at Cottonwood, a distance of only about forty miles. They arrived at Campo the next morning at 10 and remained there until 2, and reached Jacumba late in the afternoon of Friday where they remained over night.

This morning they started at 9:30 for El Centro and made the run of 132 miles without mishap, although they found the worst traveling in Devil's Cañon on this side of the range and at times feared they would be unable to get their car through.

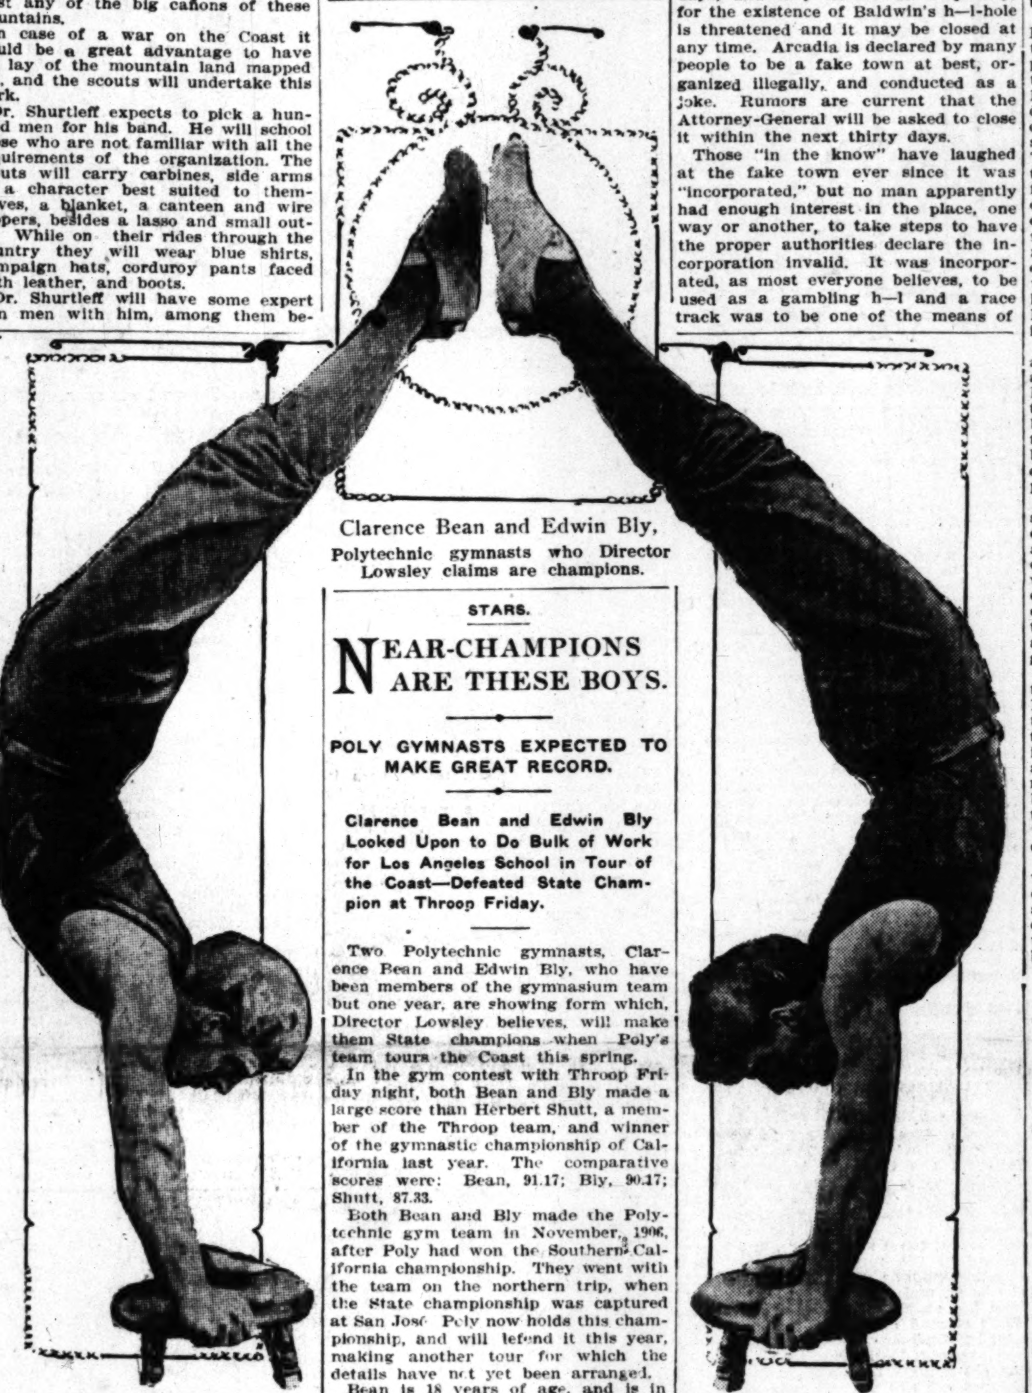
They are enthusiastic over the possibilities of a first-class highway from San Diego to the Imperial Valley. The party will visit various points in the valley to stir up interest over the road building project.

MOTORCYCLES ON RUN.

Members of Los Angeles Club Will Enjoy Pleasure Jaunt to Anaheim and Return Today.

The Los Angeles Motorcycle Club will enjoy a trip to Anaheim today, leaving the clubhouse, No. 122 West Thirty-second street, at 9 o'clock a.m., going via Downey, Norwalk, Artesia and Buena Park, and returning through Fullerton, La Mirada and Santa Fé Springs, which makes a most interesting trip. "Roads have been officially inspected, and are said to be in the finest of condition. Luncheon has been arranged at Anaheim.

Friday evening, the lady friends of the club members were entertained at the clubhouse. Ten new members were taken in at the last business meeting, making the club membership about a hundred. Los Angeles has the largest motorcycle club in existence at present.



Clarence Bean and Edwin Bly,
Polytechnic gymnasts who Director Lowsley claims are champions.

STARS.

NEAR-CHAMPIONS ARE THESE BOYS.

POLY GYMNASTS EXPECTED TO MAKE GREAT RECORD.

Clarence Bean and Edwin Bly Looked Upon to Do Bulk of Work for Los Angeles School in Tour of the Coast—Defeated State Champion at Throop Friday.

Two Polytechnic gymnasts, Clarence Bean and Edwin Bly, who have been members of the gymnasium team but one year, are showing form which, Director Lowsley believes, will make them State champions when Poly's team tours the Coast this spring.

In the gym contest with Throop Friday night, both Bean and Bly made a large score than Herbert Shutt, a member of the Throop team, and winner of the gymnastic championship of California last year. The comparative scores were: Bean, 91.17; Bly, 90.17; Shutt, 87.33.

Both Bean and Bly made the Polytechnic gym team in November, 1906, after Poly had won the Southern California championship. They went with the team on the northern trip, when the State championship was captured at San José. Poly now holds this championship, and will defend it this year, making another tour for which the details have not yet been arranged.

Bean is 18 years of age, and is in his third year at Poly. Bly is 17, and will graduate this spring. Both have made wonderful advances in gymnastic work under the training of Physical Director O. S. Lowsley, who formerly was a member of the department of physical training at Stanford.

Bean and Bly probably will not meet Shutt in competition again this season, unless the proposed interscholatic gymnasium meet at Pomona, April 18, is arranged. Both should be able again to defeat the present State champion if they come into competition.

At Santa Barbara last year Bean made a record of 136½ points out of a possible 150, and Bly made 135. Their performances have always been consistent, and both are very versatile stuntists. Bean does the giant swing with ease, and Byle's best stunt is the hand balance on the horizontal bar.

There are but three teams competing in the County League series this season. L. A. High was to have met Whittier, but the latter withdrew, and when Poly and L. A. High compete, the schedule will be completed. Poly lost two members of the championship team of last year, but took on two equally good gymnasts, and is stronger as a team than when the tour of the State was made.

PUGS SIGN ARTICLES.

Nelson and Unholz Formally Come to Terms—Brock Is Matched With Kid Dalton.

Bat Nelson and Boer Unholz formally signed yesterday for their fight at the Pacific Athletic Club on the night of February 4, and the fight bugs are actually assured of the contest. They are to fight for 50 per cent. of the gate receipts, and will divide the money, 60 and 40 per cent. Both men started in to train yesterday afternoon, the Boer at the East Side Club and Nelson at Arcadia.

Manager McCarey has practically agreed to put on Kid Brock and Kid Dalton at 130 pounds as a preliminary for the next fight following the Thomas-Sullivan battle next Tuesday night. Brock is from Detroit, and brings a good reputation with him.

Santa Ana Wins Both.

SANTA ANA, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Santa Ana High School girls' basketball team this afternoon overwhelmed the girls from the Riverside High School by a score of 29 to 6. Riverside made only one field goal. The Santa Ana High School boys' team defeated the boys' team of Anaheim High School by the score of 31 to 21.

To Defend Trophy.

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—That Oxford and Cambridge will be called upon to defend the Rice international chess trophy in a match by cable was decided upon at a meeting of representatives of Columbia, Harvard, Yale and Princeton, held here yesterday.

SODOM.

BLUE FATE IMPENDS OVER ARCADIA "CITY."

Row Over Arrest of Lucky Baldwin's Horse Trainer May Cause Appeal to Attorney-General on Legality of the Incorporation.

THE bookmakers at the Arcadia race track are skinning the gambling suckers to a finish these days, and they should do it quickly, for the existence of Baldwin's h—l-hole is threatened and it may be closed at any time. Arcadia is declared by many people to be a fake town at best, organized illegally, and conducted as a joke. Rumors are current that the Attorney-General will be asked to close it within the next thirty days.

Those "in the know" have laughed at the fake town ever since it was "incorporated," but no man apparently had enough interest in the place, one way or another, to take steps to have the proper authorities declare the incorporation invalid. It was incorporated, as most everyone believes, to be used as a gambling h—l and a race track was to be one of the means of skinning the public. This might have been carried on this year without any serious interruption but for a fracas that happened in the "city" one night during the early part of last week.

The storm centers around Jack Berdie, town marshal and ex-officio tax and license collector, and he may be the means of breaking up the biggest gambling institution in this end of the State. It may seem strange that a petty officer, elected in Lucky Baldwin's own "city," should be even the indirect cause of the "city's" downfall, but it looks that way to part of the crowd that is up in the grand stand to see the match race between the aged stake horse, Lucky Baldwin, and the selling plater, Jack Berdie.

Last Tuesday, Berdie ran up against a fellow named Tom Cooke and beat him a city block in a short sprint. It appears that this Cooke is a trainer of one of the strings of horses that Baldwin races at his Santa Anita track. Naturally, he thinks he has a lot of privileges in Arcadia that other men are denied, and the story goes that on Tuesday night he went into one of the "places" in the "city" and started a "rough house." This rough stuff business is a common thing at night in the "city," and it is said, to Berdie's credit, that as City Marshal he does his best to suppress wrangles, keep the drunks of both sexes under control and prevent people from being shot by the collection of race track thugs and bad actors that infest the "city."

When Cooke entered a certain place and started a "rough house," Berdie sailed in to prevent it. Cooke looked the Bird over and frankly told him to "go to h—l." Berdie concluded that if that place was any worse than Arcadia he didn't care to take a chance at it and promptly banged Cooke on the jaw. The blow was such a hot one that the force of it knocked Cooke over a nickel-in-the-slot machine and, as it went off like a Waterbury watch, Cooke was badly tangled up in the works of the sure-sure box. He came out of the wreck like a raging bull and charged on Berdie, but the ringside history of the fight is that Berdie was there and knocked Cooke out into the road.

The trainer was so tame by this time that he would eat out of any man's hand without bolting through the barrier, and Berdie placed him under arrest. Now, as it happens, the only jail that Arcadia boasts of is an old water tank, and on this particular night the tank had a lot of water in it and Berdie could not throw his prisoner in there because he had no boat for him to sit in. He told him to appear before the justice the next morning and released him on his own recognizance.

It seems that Cooke rushed straightway to old Lucky with his tale of woe, and Lucky told him that HE was runnin' that town, and that Cooke didn't have to appear in any justice court. He did not appear, and there the matter ended, apparently, for it is stated that nothing has been done about the matter since. Baldwin swore vengeance on Berdie, and the latter sought the advice of an attorney as to what he should do.

Berdie learned to fly many years ago. He looks like one of the old-time frontier officers, and he acts up to the part. He declares he has had a "hot time" trying to keep peace out in Baldwin's big gambling den. Dozens of people go to Arcadia in a drunken condition, or load up with a large-sized jag soon after they reach there. Then they are crazy to "start something," and between these commencers from Los Angeles and the many peroxide blonde "nieces" and the hangers-on and touts from the race track, a City Marshal's job in the "city" is not a dream but a nightmare. Berdie evidently proposes, however, to stay with the pot until some one wins it, or he is forced to show down his hand. It is asserted that the decent people in the place are with Berdie.

The night revelry is well known to all of the auto parties that race there after dark, and everything goes. Jim Barry, the pugilist, started in to train there for his first fight with Langford, but had to move away on account of the racket at night, which was caused by some of the "girls" running up and down stairs and others banging on the piano when he tried to sleep.

A few weeks ago a number of respectable persons living in the southern end of the "city" petitioned to be allowed to have their property cut out of the "city," and an "election" was held for that purpose. The "kickers" were dropped out, and about the only ripple the election caused was to close the two bars at the race track and keep the gambling sports from getting the booze that is sold there.

The indications are that some of the taxpayers, who strongly object to Baldwin's rule of the place, will ask the Attorney-General to descend on the "city" and declare its incorporation illegal. It is understood that there are really no Trustees, that is only a mythical board; that meetings are held but once every three months; that the "Tax Collector," "Assessor" and "Treasurer" have no books, as required by law, and receive no salaries.

Some of the common laborers who worked on Baldwin's ranch, so they could vote for "incorporation," have since been discharged, and are in this city now, calmly awaiting the fate that seems to be coming to the gambling town.

DUCKS DUCK.

DUCKS OFF TO DEEP WATER.

SATURDAY HUNTERS ALL REPORT SCARCITY OF BIRDS.

Blue Wing Club Members Shoot in Better Luck Than Others—Conditions Will Hardly Change Before End of Shooting Season — Teal Again Make Appearance.

Duck hunters report poor sport on the ocean-front yesterday, and some of the regulars believe that the birds have gone away to stay until after the season closes, in four weeks. There is no denying the fact that there are a less number than at any time since the season opened, and those who have not had a shoot this season will do well to get busy at once. Some of the clubs had bad luck on the mid-week shoot, and, with Friday night clear, the birds evidently came in from the ocean to feed and then went out yesterday morning and stayed all day.

The ocean has been comparatively quiet for several days, and this condition gave the birds a chance to stay on deep water, and there are probably a dozen other reasons the hunters could give for light bags. There seemed to be plenty of ducks on the ocean, but even when the wind kicked up the whitecaps, the birds did not come to land.

There were four guns on the Blue Wing, and they had about the best luck of any of the clubs. George Adams and Dr. Schiffman each got the limit; Louis Woolwine shot twenty-eight, and Dr. Dwight Steen, twenty. Even these men thought the birds were scarce.

At the Bolsa Chica, Count Jaro von Schmidt was the only one lucky enough to get the limit, and he had one big canvasback in his bag. The other six men shot from ten to thirty each, and they were Ed Hull, J. J. Fay, H. T. Kendall, W. E. Dunn, T. J. Lendrem and Capt. Tompkinson.

The Lomita Saturday squad dwindled down to three men when the club was reached. Joe Amestoy got seventeen; E. Mueller, fifteen and Dr. Lasher, ten.

At the Sunset the only limit man was Dr. C. G. Stivers. John Hunter, L. G. Lohman, George Rictor and A. T. Jergins shot from fifteen to twenty-five each.

There were four guns on the Christopher. Harry Dillon was high, with twenty-three; J. W. Morrison got twenty; Godfrey Fritz, seventeen, and W. A. Frick, twelve.

The Westminster squad did fairly well, notwithstanding the fact that the majority of the birds seen were far out on the ocean. Those killed were almost all teal. A. L. Schwarz was high with twenty-six; George Jess had twenty-three; Karl Klokke, twenty-one; F. E. Robinson, sixteen and Stoddard Jess, fourteen.

Eight guns were at the Chico, and there was nothing startling in the scores. Eddie Maier had twenty; Joe Gioia, twenty-one; Charles Burman, twelve, and the other five from ten to twenty-five.

Teams Break Even.

ONTARIO, Jan. 18.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Ontario and San Bernardino High School basketball teams broke even in two games played on the local courts today. The Ontario girls had a walk-away match and outplayed their opponents in all departments of the game, winning easily by a score of 55 to 8. The boys' game went to San Bernardino, in one of the closest contests ever witnessed on the local campus. Score, 16 to 14.

DARING.

PERILS MANY ON AUTO RUN.

Petrified Forest Has no Terrors for Motorists.

Death Hovers Near in Blinding Snowstorm.

Narrow Diablo Trestle Is Safely Crossed.

Two daring autoists have arrived in Los Angeles after completing a 1360-mile journey from Alamosa, Colo. For the first time an automobile was sent through the petrified forest of Arizona, and across the terrible Diablo trestle, and thence over the desert from Needles to this city.

The car, a big Pierce-Racine, was driven by Frank H. Gable, and he was accompanied by Wells U. Briggs. Both men are machinists of Alamosa. They undertook to bring the four-cylinder car here for its owner, J. Nestor Ortiz of No. 1946 Park Grove avenue. The auto was purchased in Los Angeles in May of last year and was shipped by Mr. Ortiz to Colorado a few months later. Recently Mr. Ortiz and family returned to Los Angeles, and left the car behind. Gable proposed to bring it overland and his proposition was accepted.

Early in December the two daring machinists started from Alamosa and sent the car down into Arizona on its long journey to the coast. They reached the edge of the petrified forest after a journew of twenty days, during which much rough country was passed. On the edge of the dead forest they were halted by roads which seemed impassable, and were urged to take a more circuitous route. It was explained by settlers that an automobile had never traversed the forest. A hermit outlined the road, which was little better than a trail, and told them some of the dangers to be faced.

THROUGH THE FOREST.

With the hermit's map in their possession, Gable determined to drive through the forest. Once into its depths it was harder to turn back than to go forward, and the Pierce was sent ahead and the trip was successfully made. The cutoff saved the travelers many miles.

Elated with the undertaking, Gable and Briggs pressed onward to the Diablo ravine, which is spanned by a narrow railroad bridge 290 feet in the air, crossing a chasm which is rocky and dangerous. The trestle afforded another short cut. Gable decided to cross.

On the aërial bridge, 484 feet long, the Pierce-Racine crossed the chasm. It was necessary to look either way along the tracks for cars, as the danger of being caught on the trestle was great. Bumping over the ties, the machine passed on its perilous journey, and once more the motorists scored. By driving across the railroad bridge a distance of twenty miles by the circuitous highway was saved.

Again, when roads failed, and it was almost impossible to proceed, Gable took to the railroad tracks, and at Lupton a fierce snowstorm was encountered, through which the motorists were obliged to pass. As the snow flakes cleared somewhat they saw a through train bearing down upon them from either direction. The men flagged both trains, and saved the machine.

The journey from Alamosa here was accompanied by many dangers, but the men declare they would be willing to drive back again. Both are enthusiastic in praise of the motor car as a means of travel.

As described by the travelers, the route taken after leaving Alamosa was due south to Antonito, and then through Barranca in New Mexico to Santa Fé, where they turned west and followed the route which may be taken by the cross-country motorists on the proposed New York to Paris run.

They left New Mexico by way of Gallup, crossing the line to Navajo, in Arizona, whence they passed through Diablo Cañon, and Ash Fork, to Kingman, crossing the California-Arizona line at Needles. The car was then sent over the Mojave Desert to Barstow, on the run to Los Angeles.

ADVENTUROUS.

MAKE GRUELLING TRIP TO MINES.

FOLLOW MULE TRAILS IN EAST OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY.

Los Angeles Party Meets Trouble in Hills Beyond Descanso, Where Grades Are Great and Roads Are not to Be Found—Roadside Repairs Succesfully Made.

Mills Titus of Los Angeles has recently made a trip in a Model G '07 Franklin to some mines in the southern part of San Diego county, where few automobiles ever venture. With him were Guy West, E. C. Taylor and George Pike.

The mines which they intended to visit are situated some 55 miles east of San Diego, and are known as the Noble group. Mr. Titus arranged this visit with the object of looking over the property, and making a purchase if the mines showed well after inspection. The rest of the party are all interested in the automobile business in one way or another, and went for the pleasure of the trip.

They left Los Angeles on a Thursday morning at daybreak, and followed the inland route to Lakeside. They did not hurry, but went straight through with only a short stop at Elsinore for lunch. They reached Lakeside at 5 o'clock that evening, and took dinner at the hotel, expecting to make the thirty-five miles to the mines easily before midnight.

They made fairly good time until they reached Descanso, but after that their troubles began. The road was little better than a mule trail, and led up and down steep hills, where the gradient was at times from 20 to 30 deg. They were often obliged to stop, while three of the party got out of the car and pushed, but they managed to reach a point two miles from the mines. During the last twelve miles they made an ascent of nearly 5000 feet, and this not over an even gradient, but up and down hills. As they approached their destination the road grew worse and worse, and it seemed that they would never make it. To add to their discomfort the acetylene lamps gave out, and they had to follow the trail by the dim light from the oil burners.

Finally they reached one place up which they were unable to go even with the united efforts of the engine and three men pushing behind. Then Guy West had an inspiration. He said: "The reverse gear is lower than the low speed forward, suppose we turn around and back up the hill, perhaps we can make it." So they turned round and tried to back up the hill. Unfortunately Mr. Titus could not manage the control and steer backwards at the same time, the light being too dim for him to see. So Guy suggested that he stand up and steer, while Titus managed the control. This scheme worked very successful for some time, and they had nearly reached the top of the hill, when suddenly the driving shaft broke, and the car started down the hill. Titus put on the foot brake, but it had been put out of business with the shaft, and he forgot about the emergency brake. By the time he had recovered his scattered senses, the car had dashed down the hill and run up a slight incline into a thick clumb of mesquite.

Home-made Baby Auto, with bird-cage hood, built by Whittier man, who claims the car will travel thirty-five miles an hour on a good road.

There was nothing to do but leave the car where it was and walk to the mine. So they took out their guns and what dunnage they could comfortably carry and trudged the two miles to the mine camp. By this time it was nearly daylight and they decided to go out hunting instead of sleeping. They made their way to a neighboring lake and, before midday, returned to the mine with a good bag of duck and quail.

Taylor and Pike announced their determination to turn in and get some sleep, but Guy West and Titus were just beginning to feel energetic, so they took some tools with them and went back to the stranded car. They extracted the shaft and found that the universal joint had broken off, so they took it back to the camp and then decided that they could do with a sleep, too.

In the morning they set to work in the forge and George Pike, who has followed the trade of blacksmithing, volunteered to forge a new part out of an old pick. This was done and the new joint attached to the shaft by means of a pin. Back to the car went all four of them and, after some hours of toil in the sun they replaced the shaft. Opinions differ as to who did the work and who gave advice. Any way the shaft was replaced and then Titus started the engine and they essayed the ascent of the hill to the mine once more. Half way up the slope the pin holding the joint on the shaft, sheered off and the car was stranded again.

They took the shaft out again and carried it to the forge. This time Guy West stated that he was going to show them how to do it and he made a new pin, drove it in, riveted the ends over and then brazed the joint. This time the pin held and they made the trip back to Los Angeles via San Diego and the coast route without further mishap. Guy West states that the pin is still holding and that he expects it to do so until the car wears out.

NO RACE FOR DEWAR TROPHY?

Present Holder of Cup Refuses to Allow A.C.A. to Amend Rules, and Deadlock Is Result.

W. J. Morgan has announced that it is possible that no race for the Sir Thomas Dewar international trophy will be contested on the Ormond-Daytona Beach in Florida during the meet to be promoted by the Automobile Club of America, owing to the announcement of the latter organization that all cars entering for the Dewar trophy must show a speed of sixty miles an hour for at least one hundred miles. Mr. Morgan declares that the present holder of the trophy, which was won by Fred Marriott at the last Ormond meet, refuses to allow the rules to be amended by the Automobile Club of America. Mr. Morgan is of the opinion that the trustees of the trophy are powerless in the matter, as clause 5 of the deed of gift is as follows:

"The contest shall be open to any and all cars of weights within the international classifications, regardless of power or country of manufacture." The last clause of the deed of gift reads: "The board of trustees shall have power to decide all matters spesifically covered by these conditions." Mr. Morgan told yesterday of an interview he had on Monday in Boston with two motorists, who declare they have built special cars to compete for the trophy. Neither of them is willing to agree to the changes proposed by the Automobile Club of America.

The Roads of France.

France now has 316,898 miles of local highways, built at a total cost of $308,800,000, and 23,656 miles of national routes, which cost the nation $303,975,000 to build. The present road system was started by the first Napoleon.

Interesting Chauffeurs.

As a result of a demand for "interpreting chauffeurs" to drive cars on foreign tours, the West Side Y.M.C.A. of New York City, as an adjunct to its automobile school, is giving special training in foreign languages to drivers.

The Worcester (Mass.) Club has set an excellent example for the clubs of other cities by voting $300 above its dues to the Massachusetts State Association for the promotion of legislation in the interest of motorists of the State at large.

HOME PRODUCT.

MAKES MOTOR IN BACK YARD.

BABY CAR HAS BIRD CAGE HOOD WHICH IS UNIQUE.

Whittier Motorist Builds Car Which Weighs Less Than Five Hundred Pounds and Runs Thirty-five Miles an Hour—Hundred Miles With Three Gallons Gasoline.

One of the smallest motor cars in Southern California, which is in daily use on the roads is owned by H. H. Custead, agent for the Western Union Telegraph Company at Whittier. Custead has just completed the machine after having worked upon it in his back yard during spare hours.

The curious little car attracted much attention on the streets of Los Angeles Friday. Custead and Rev. A. B. Baird, pastor of the Baptist Church of Whittier, drove to this city from their home in just forty-five minutes. The little machine bumped over the roads with its load of human freight, and seemed top heavy. Rev. Mr. Baird weighs almost 200 pounds, and is six feet in height. He looked even bigger in the miniature motor car.

One of the New Elmore Taxicabs, to be placed in service in Chicago this month.

It was Custead's desire to own a machine. He determined to build a car of his own. He purchased an engine and secured the necessary parts, then rigged bicycle wheels to the car he had hammered together. When the machine was finished, it was tested on a smooth piece of road near Whittier and the baby motor made thirty-five miles an hour. Custead says it is possible for any one who has mechanical ideas to build his own motor car. He says the cost is slight and the pleasure to be gained more than compensates the builder for his time and outlay of money.

The funny little motor car weighs just 440 pounds. Its one seat will accommodate two persons. The batteries are beneath the seat. It has a planetary transmission with two speeds. There is no reverse. Custead says he has never needed one.

The hood looks like a large bird cage. Wire gauze is fitted over the one-cylinder in octagonal form, and runs out to the radiator. The engine is air-cooled and the motor is four horsepower, and is adequate to drive the little machine. The parts are self-lubricated by a special system arranged by the maker.

The machine has been in use only a short time but its builder has already made several long runs. Recently Custead traveled 100 miles and used only three gallons of gasoline on the trip. He drove the car from Whittier through Los Angeles to Venice in just one hour and thirty minutes. From Whittier to Long Beach he covered the distance in one hour and twenty minutes.

For more than two years Custead has worked to perfect his neat little machine. He has tried several plans of building and has abandoned them. At last he has hit upon a style of mechanism which suits him and he says the car is all that he desires. The motor cost the builder about $600, though he says the machine could be dublicated for a much less sum.

Though the car is light it holds to the roads well and is just the thing for inter-city travel, according to Custead. The baby motor is on the roads every day and has already traveled several thousand miles without costing the maker a cent for repairs.

The fuel consumption is something the maker boasts of with particular pride. He claims to be able to travel farther with his machine on a smaller amount of gasoline than can any other motor with any other car.

TAXICABS FOR CHICAGO.

O. H. Fay Will Put Into Operation in a Month Ten Cars from the Elmore Factory.

Owen H. Fay of Chicago is about to give the Windy City its first taxicab service. The cars he will place on the street are being made by the Elmore factory, which has not previously given any indication of going into the town car business, and both the project and the cars come to the motoring world as a surprise. It is expected that the taxicabs will be in operation within a month. The chasses are practically complete at the Elmore factory, and as soon as the bodies and tops are received, the completed cabs will be rushed to Chicago. Stands will be established at the Auditorium Annex, the Palmer House and the Great Northern Hotel.

It is expected that the new taxicabs will be the speediest in America. The engine is rated at twenty-four horse power, and the regular speed of the cars, fully equipped and carrying five passengers, will be thirty-five miles an hour. The cabs are built on stock chasses.

"The Elmore company will be able to furnish me with sixty cabs next year if the business warrants it," says Mr. Fay. "I intend to start modestly, and expect to encounter some difficulty in securing experienced drivers. I shall engage a half-dozen New York taxicab drivers to begin with, and will educate my livery staff into the method of operation.

"I think Chicago will take kindly to the taxicab. To the public they are giving a realization of cheaper cab fares; to the automobile manufacturers they suggest new business opportunities, and to a host of drivers they represent a chance to earn money at a rate previously thought of only in their dreams.

"The taxicab has taken New York by storm. In that city two companies are now in the field. One firm has about 250 cabs in service, while the other is operating over fifty. It is my intention to equip eight of my electric cabs with taximeters, so that I shall start business with eighteen available vehicles.

"The taximeter charges for one or two passengers will be 30 cents for the first quarter of a mile, or first twelve minutes of waiting, or fraction thereof, and 10 cents for each succeeding quarter-mile and 10 cents for each six minutes' waiting. For three, four or five passengers, the charge for the first third of a mile, or first twelve minutes of waiting, or fraction thereof, will be 30 cents; for each additional sixth of a mile or each four minutes of waiting 10 cents. For carrying a trunk the charge will be 20 cents, and for ordering a cab, each mile or fraction thereof from stand or station to point ordered will cost 20 cents."

LOST ON DESERT.

Party of Goldfield Motorists Have an Exciting Time on Trip from Nevada to Los Angeles.

A party of six autoists left Goldfield for Los Angeles the past week in a seven-seated 1907 Pope-Toledo, and had an exciting time before they reached this city. George Holloran of Goldfield is the owner of the car, and with him were three ladies, Mrs. L. L. Poluck, Mrs. Barry Hamilton and Mrs. Wilkes, who, with Dr. Turner and Guy Hill, the chauffeur, made up the party.

They left Goldfield at 10 o'clock Sunday morning, and reached Greenwater before dark without accident or mishap. They stayed at the nearly deserted mining camp for the night, and started out in the morning early hoping to reach San Bernardino that night. Unfortunately, they were not well acquainted with the roads, and they lost their way several times, the heavy car sinking deep into the sand, making the going very slow.

When night fell Monday evening they were many miles from "Nowhere," and they decided to camp out. The women were well supplied with wraps and rugs, and they were made as comfortable as possible under the circumstances.

Shortly after midnight the rain began to fall and, before long, the entire party was thoroughly soused. The clouds cleared off before morning, and they were thankful to dry off in the morning's sunlight. Meanwhile Guy Hill inspected the engine, and, after drying it off, essayed to start it. He had more than a little trouble, and finally primed all four cylinders. When he did this he got four sound explosions, so he surmised that there must be something wrong with the carburetter. On inspection, he discovered that a drop of water was clinging to the end of the needle valve, effectually stopping the gasoline flow. Once this was removed there was no more difficulty, and the engine started without a murmur.

The wetting and the delay had not tended to quiet the nerves of the women, and they were not feeling too well when the start was made Tuesday morning. All day long they struggled along through the sand, not sure whether they were making progress in the right direction or not. The trail they followed most of the day was nothing but a mule path, and zigzagged mercilessly through the sagebrush. They were obliged to camp out again Tuesday night, and, in the morning, they found that the supply of food was very low, and the water all gone. Wednesday morning broke with a clear sky, but the bright sunshine found no reflection in their hearts, for they were hungry and thirsty, and did not know when they would reach water.

They started out, however, determined to make the best of it, and, after five hours of weary traveling through the sand, they came to a hut that had been occupied by some cattlemen. Here they found water and food, and soon they had a fire going and a good meal prepared. After refreshing themselves, and taking a short rest, they staretd out again, and reached Johannesburg in less than an hour.

They took a long rest at Johannesburg, and then left for the final stage of the journey over comparatively good roads. They reached Los Angeles just before mid-day Thursday, thoroughly tired out, but thankful to be back once more in civilization.

GREAT CONTEST OPENS YEAR.

Snow, Sleet, Mud and Rain Do not Prevent Three Cars from Getting Perfect Scores.

The first endurance run of the year was held at Philadelphia by the Quaker City Automobile Club, being run on New Year's Day, and the day following. The cup went to the White steamer, which tied with two other cars, and then won the run-off.

As the weather was very bad and contestants had to face snow, sleet and rain, as well as plunge through deep mud, it shows what a great advancement is being made in the construction of motor cars. In the run off for the cup between a White, a Peerless and a Studebaker, all of which had finished the endurance run perfectly in spite of the weather conditions, the three cars had to cover the two days' route of 175 miles in one day. All again finished without penalty, and twenty minutes ahead of the schedule. The victory was fought out by a technical examination of the cars to show any defects that might have developed by the hard usage the cars had received. A casual examination by the Technical Committee showed no weakness in the cars, so the three were taken to a garage and washed up thoroughly, and then minutely examined. The White steamer was awarded first because the only defect found was a loose wood screw on one fender.

In the original contest, ending the day before, the White was found free from any technical faults, the only one out of the six cars which finished in the touring car class with otherwise prefect scores. The Studebaker had a broken shock absorber, and the Peerless a loose transmission, while the Stoddard-Dayton was counted out on account of a number of loose bolts and nuts, the Oldsmobile for a twisted wheel, and the Stearns for one broken front spring. The Studebaker made claim that shock absorbers were not a real part of a car, while the Peerless people claimed that new cars were sent out with loose transmissions, so these two cars were allowed to have a run off with the White.

In the free-for-all runabout class the Packard was awarded the cup, while in the small runabout class the Maxwell had a walkover. Fifty cars took part in this endurance run, and with judges and free-lance cars there were fifty-seven cars in the two-day run and about a dozen cars in the run-off of the tie.

GREAT HILL CLIMB COMING.

Annual Pasadena-Altadena Meet Will Be Bigger and Better Than Ever.

Every indication points to a great entry list for the annual automobile hill climb on the Pasadena-Altadena course on Washington's Birthday. More interest than ever is being displayed, and although the course as yet is in rather poor condition, many cars have been sent over the route.

The committee having in charge the details of the meet are not as yet ready to send out entry blanks, but it is known that there will be some changes in the method of management. The entry fee will be $50 for each car, of which $40 will be returned if the car starts and is not disqualified or fined. Greater strictness than ever before will be maintained at the start, for the use of the course has been granted for only two hours and a half. This makes it necessary for the events to be run without any hitch. To do this, cars must be in place and waiting their call. Drivers who are not ready to start will be fined or disqualified.

One new rule promised for this year is that all passengers must sit erect, as if they were on an ordinary tour. It has been the practice before for passengers to crouch behind the dash and front seat, in order to present as little surface as possible to the wind.

New Car for Physicians.

A recent invention in the way of a physician's motor car takes the form of a neat little inside driven landaulette which has divided seats. The left hand seat is made removable, and may be slid off the back of the machine, together with a small portion of the footboard, which is made it. A couple of stretching be attached to it and the verted into a invalid. chair for an invalid. treme emergency the be entirely removed, alongside the driver the extreme rear of the used for the conveyance laid at full length.

Automobile Buyer Attention!

The OBJECT of this Association is to further the interests of the dustry and to protect the automobile buyer from the "Curbstone Operators," are bound to exist in any large city. The purchase of an automobile calls for vestment of a sum of money sufficiently large to warrant a careful investigation buyer's part as to what car he buys and from whom he buys it.

Leaving aside the respective merits of the different cars, we wish to buyer that it is as necessary to look up the reputation of the firm from whom he car, as it is to ascertain the reputation of the car itself. An irresponsible dealer can PROMISE you more than one that expects to remain in business community, year after year, depending almost entirely upon the good-will of for his business.

We all appreciate that a SATISFIED CUSTOMER is the very best we can have, and all automobile dealers of any prominence whatever honestly satisfy their customers in every sense of the word. This is a new industry, yet scarcely seen its start, and for that reason the evils that go with a new been more apparent in the past than they will be in the future.

It is the earnest wish of every member of this Association that we have mobile buyer's confidence.

We call your attention to the fact that this Association has conducted every race meet, endurance run and hill climbing contest held in Southern in the last two years, and has given Los Angeles the prettiest automobile show ever been held in the United States, outside of the city of New York.

In conclusion, we wish to state that on February 22, 1908, our third annual ing contest will be held over the Pasadena-Altadena course, and we promise you hotly-contested sporting event ever held in Southern California. Sincerely

How experts in motoring get out of the worst difficulties. Some of the roadside wrinkles which will extricate a car from any mishap to be met with in ordinary touring.

HOW TO CARRY THEM.

A shovel, 150 feet of rope, with blocks attached and an anchor as described, can be easily and quickly attached to the crosswise spring behind, if platform springs are on car, or to the ends of the rear springs, with several strong straps, carried for that purpose, brass buckles being fitted to the straps, so that rust will not occur. Attached in this way these tools are out of the way and quickly detached.

Under the running board on one or both sides can be carried planks of an inch and a half or two inches in thickness. Such boards, if carried permanently, should be of hard wood and bound with iron at each end. They should be as long as possible, but not longer than the running boards. They can be fastened to the running board by two or three bolts or with straps fitting into notches or slots made for that purpose.

A plank or board is always better than a jack, for it offers a leverage and can be worked more quickly than a jack, if used as a pry. In case of soft sand or marshy ground a plank can be laid down in front of a wheel, giving traction at once. Also in using a jack to get a wheel out of the mud the plank will give a foundation for the jack, where a jack alone would do no good. In crossing a narrow, marshy stream or ditch, where a heavy car would sink in and get no traction, two planks carried under the foot boards, or removable foot boards, or removable foot boards can be laid across the little stream or ditch, and the car safely and satisfactorily driven across on the planks. Using the planks thus may take a half-hour, while getting stuck might mean being hung up for hours or a day, or if horses were obtained the horse owner would charge as much for a pull of ten feet as a dozen pairs of planks would cost. In fact there are a score of uses for planks that save both time and money.

GETTING OVER ROCKS.

Planks come in very handy in helping an automobile over a boulder or rocks in the road, where a car cannot otherwise pass. Two strong men can lift a wheel over a big rock, if a light car is used, but in touring nowadays the large cars are most common and more than mere man's strength is needed.

Even a single plank will get a car over boulders that are higher than an axle. A rock should be placed under one end of the plank, thus making an inclined plane for a wheel to climb. Thus the axle and car are lifted higher than the rock. The jack or the chains in their sack will hold one end of plank up from the ground, but usually there is plenty of loose rock where boulders are encountered. Here is where a plank is worth its weight in gold.

In wet weather when the roads become soft, especially where there are earth roads with no rock foundation, one side of the car will sometimes sink to axles if the car is turned out of the road. Then it is necessary to raise that side of the car out of the ground. Here is where the jack and plank combination is necessary if there is no rail fence, lumber yard or wagon tongue handy to pry a wheel out at a time.

In the East there is usually a rail fence handy, or a sapling can be cut for the purpose, even with a pocket knife, if there is not a small ax or hatchet in the tool kit. In Washington and Oregon there is also timber handy for a pry, but in Southern California this is not often the case.

HOW TO DO IT.

When plank and jack are used and a wheel lifted out of the mire, brush or something of the kind, unless bits of board or timber are available, must be used under the wheels and in front of them to pull back into the road again. In a case of this kind, if chains are along, they should be applied to wheels when raised out of the mire or a rope can be tied about the rim and tire to give traction.

It sometimes happens that a car gets down into a stream bed, but cannot climb the banks. Here is a case where it is best to drive the car down stream or up stream, as the case may be, until the banks are found less steep and traction can be maintained. There is a limit to traction, for on a grade greater than 60 per cent. a car will not pull itself unless the traction is aided by mechanical means. One way is to attach a rope to a tree, post or "deadman" and then wind the rope around a hub, and as the power is applied, thus hold all the gains that are made so that the car cannot slip back down the grade. Of course if the car's engine has not enough power for this it is necessary to resort to rope and blocks or other outside help.

Sometimes one side of the road will cave off as a car is passing, and let the car drop down to the axle on that side. Sometimes this happens on a dangerous mountain grade. The first thing to do in a case of this kind is to use shovel and pick and dig holes under the wheels on the upperside of the road. The inside wheels will thus be anchored, so that the car cannot roll off the grade, and be lost while an attempt is being made to get the car back onto the road again.

THE SAFEST WAY.

If blocks and rope are not handy to pull the car back onto the road by man power, it is best to build a foundation under the wheel or wheels that have dropped off the grade, and thus level the car up with the road, so that it will get on with its own power. If there is a sheer precipice, such plan is out of the question, but this is seldom the case. It may be necessary to build up a foundation of six feet or more, which can usually be done quickly with soil, gravel, roots or other débris generally found where a bank or grade has caved off. Two or three willing workers can quickly perform wonders in a case of this kind, and save time instead of going miles to find horses.

One night on Pala grade, a big car with large wheels slid off on a sharp turn, and the rear wheel hung over the edge, while the weight of the car rested on the differential. Meanwhile the outside front wheel was over the edge of the grade in soft soil that would not hold. Holes were dug in the road on the inside of the mountain grade for the other wheels to drop into and anchor, as there was danger every minute before this was done of the car rolling down into a field some hundreds of feet lower.

By use of plank and jack, the rear end of the car was raised a little at a time, and the road being cut away outside of the inner wheel at the same time, the whole car was pushed in probably an inch at a time until the car was again on the road. Every gain was held by packing earth on the outside edge of the inner wheel in the hole that had been cut in the road. The front of the car was also brought onto the road the same way. This car was kept from rolling down the mountain side by some of the passengers steadying it until shovel and pick could be brought a half-mile.

OTHER TRAVEL HINTS.

If rope is always carried on a car many uses will be found for it in difficulties. When an extra tire is not carried and a tire gives out completely rope can be wound around the rim of a wheel, and progress made on the rope substitute until another tire can be obtained.

When it is absolutely necessary to run with only three cylinders of an engine, the missing cylinder being entirely out of commission, removing the spark plug will do away with much of the compression, and make the engine run that much easier.

Cases have been known where a car has been brought in on its own power after steering arrangement was broken by attaching ropes, and one person on each side directing a wheel with ropes.

A car 170 miles away from this city had several of the teeth to the pinion of the bevel gear broken out. It was taken to the nearest blacksmith shop, and, after removing the pinion, the broken teeth were filed off, slots cut by file in place of them, other teeth forged out, fitted into the slots, brazed in place with brass spelter and borax in the blacksmith forge, and then the new teeth were filed to fit. Thus, after seventeen hours' work, the car was able to get back to Los Angeles on its own power.

The past summer a car rolled down the mountainside in Tejon Pass, and every spoke was broken out of one of the rear wheels, besides much other damage done. By removing the broken spokes and whittling out others from wood obtained at the nearest ranch, the wheel was put together again and carried the car back forty-two miles to Bakersfield on its own power.

TO FIX LEAKS.

Bread crumbs or bran make a quick repair for water leaks of radiator or pump. Hard soap has also been used often for quick repairs of this kind when soldering iron was not obtainable. If the leaks are of any size it is best to whittle wooden plugs and drive them in.

When dry cells are depended upon and are about exhausted, their life can be extended considerably by punching holes in the top and pouring in hot water. In case of weak storage battery, a wait to give the battery time to recuperate a little while will oftentimes get a car in on its own power when no supply of dry cells is obtainable.

Dust, dirt or sand is far better than water to put out a gasoline fire, and quick action with roadside dust will often save a car, if a gasoline leak catches fire. Always see that there is a good valve near the gasoline tank to shut off the feed pipe quickly. This may save the price of a car in an emergency, especially if the gasoline gets on fire at the carburetor or along the feed pipe at some point distant from the tank.

BUSCH GETS SHOW CAR.

Pope-Toledo Machine, With Old English Coach Body, a Center of Interest.

The "Old English Coach," a 1908 Pope-Toledo creation, which was a center of attraction at the New York automobile shows, has been sold to August Busch, vice-president of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association of St. Louis.

The history of the "Old English Coach" is interesting. A coach would accommodate a family of average number, and each coach was named some simple title, such as "Old Times," "Good Luck," "Pleasure," etc. About the same time in France a similar vehicle was introduced, known as the "Diligence." When Louis XVI came to the throne, he wanted a coach which would be representative of his age, and ordered one built, combining the old English idea with the idea of the French diligence. The result was a vehicle having the strength and durability of the English coach coupled with the grace and elegance of the French 'diligence.' The Louis XVI coach rapidly replaced the old idea in both countries and became the popular conveyance.

The Pope-Toledo coach is a revival of the Louis XVI design. The body is finished in canary yellow, with black stripping, or in the language of the shop, picked in black. The interior is upholstered in old English whipcord with French broad-lace; the woodwork is in prima vere.

To Hold Automobile Week.

The New York Automobile Trade Association recently held a special meeting to discuss the project of holding an "opening week" or "automobile week" in the early spring. Gen. Cutting was appointed chairman of a committee to work out the details, the other members being Col. K. C. Pardee, Richard Newton, C. R. Teaboldt and C. W. Wurster, with E. V. Stratton, secretary of the Trade Association, as secretary.

English Imports Increase.

The British Board of Trade reports that for November, 1907, the imports of automobiles and parts thereof into that country show an increase over the same month of 1906. The number of complete cars imported during the month of November, 1907, was 409, and for the corresponding month of 1906 and 1905 the number was 352 and 359 respectively.

AUTO SPEEDERS AFTER RECORD.

SAN FRANCISCO-LOS ANGELES TIME IN DANGER.

Three Cars Now Out for the Glory of Lowering It—Complete Account of Previous Record-Holders, With Dates, Makes and Horse-powers of Cars, Drivers, Etc.

Recently there has been much discussion of the San Francisco-Los Angeles road record, and it seems likely that in the near future there will be at least three attempts to lower the present mark. The Franklin people are said to be preparing for a dash over the route with a six-cylinder Franklin, to regain the honor they held for one day. William Ruess is also preparing to attempt the run again with a Pope-Hartford, as W. H. Phelps, the factory representative, has agreed to lend Ruess his new car for the trial. Ruess thinks he can drive the car all the way through unaided, which will be a remarkable feat, if it is accomplished. As stated in The Times last week, the Tourist factory is also preparing to send a car over the route.

The Times has been requested to publish a more complete and detailed list of the records established than that printed last week. The details have been supplied from the records kept by Charles P. Gates, and the data is entirely correct.

Franklin cars have held this record three times, while no other car has had the record more than once, the other record holders being the Rambler, Pope-Toledo, White, Columbia and Pope-Hartford. The first two times the Franklin captured the record on first trial, each time going north. The Pope-Toledo also got the record on the first trial, and going north. Of the others, only the Pope-Hartford has secured the record on first trial, the Rambler and White making two trials, and the Columbia and six-cylinder Franklin three trials each.

The only prize that has been put up for this record, aside from the glory all have been after, is a cup that the owner of the Columbia had made last winter as a challenge cup for any one to lower the record Ferdinand Nelson then held. So far the only contestant for this Nelson trophy who has made a showing is Rudolph Habernicht, with his 1907 Pope-Hartford, when he lowered the record, but did not reach The Times office in this city, the finishing point nominated by Mr. Nelson. All other requirements were carried out, when the Pope-Hartford had to stop near Bimini Baths on account of a broken spring, with eighteen minutes left to have covered the three miles in to The Times office. Three other cars have been sent after this record since it was lowered to eighteen hours and thirteen minutes on November 8, 1906, y the Columia and its drivers. At least eight trials have been made, two recently by the Studebaker, and no car has gotten inside of thirty hours, some not even finishing the run.

It was said after the White had reduced the record to twenty-one hours and twelve minutes that tire troubles would make it impossible for any one to get this record, but Tony Nichols, with his six-cylinder Franklin, did the trick just before the Columbia got the record, though on San Juan grade he cut one tire in two and had to replace it. Still, it is necessary to average thirty miles an hour all the way to get the record now, and that is going some.

The record and their order, with make of car, horse-power, drivers and dates are as follows, all being elapsed time, no stops being counted out:

Franklin runabout, twelve-horse-power, Dunlop tires, driven by L. L. Whitman and R. C. Hamlin, stock machine, June 16, 1905, time, 37h. 54m.

Rambler touring car, twenty-horse-power, Diamond tires, Fageol brothers and Harry Torley, drivers, June 23, 1905, time, 39h., 3m.

Rambler touring car, driven by Will Fagoel, W. C. Henderson, Ed. Mathews, H. Thalman and F. A. Jacobs, twenty-horse-power, Diamond tires, July 1, 1905, time, 31h. 25m.

Franklin runabout, twelve-horse-power, Dunlop tires, R. C. Hamlin, L. L. Whitman, drivers; July 15, 1905, time, 29h., 39 m. (including 15 minutes wait at Oakland for ferry.)

Pope-Toledo touring car, thirty-horse-power, Diamond tires; B. Frayer, Tony Nichols, R. G. Fowler, drivers, July 17, 1905, time, 24h., 50 m.

White touring car, eighteen-horse-power, Goodrich tires, H. D. Ryus, A. Pipenburg, drivers, July 29, 1905; time, 21h., 12m.

Franklin touring car, thirty-horse-power, Diamond tires, Tony Nichols, R. G. Fowler, drivers, October 26, 1906; time, 21h., 3m.

Columbia touring car, forty-five-horse-power, Diamond tires, Bert Saunders, C. Dehl, F. Hall and Himmelwright, drivers, November 8, 1906; time, 18h., 13m.

Pope-Hartford touring car, thirty-horse-power, Hartford tires, Jack Fleming, R. Habernicht, W. R. Ruess, drivers, December 4, 1907; time, 17h. 55m.

Of these records, the first trip of the Rambler and the White, Columbia and Pope-Hartford records were made south-bound. The Columbia and Pope-Hartford came all the way by land, the others crossed by ferry to Oakland. All the Franklin records and those of the Rambler and Pope-Toledo were made north-bound.

By using a cut-off at Salinas, and the direct route at Bradley, the distance between San Francisco and Los Angeles is reduced to about 460 miles and according to the rules laid down by Ferdinand Nelson, for his challenge cup, cars must start from Mission and Guerrero streets in San Francisco, and finish at The Times office in Los Angeles at First and Broadway. As to the cut-offs and shortest routes between the cities, that is up to the drivers, though newspaper correspondents usually check the contestants along the way in San Jose, Paso Robles, San Luis Obispo, Santa Maria, Santa Barbara and Ventura.

Auto Invasion on.

A genuine American invasion of Central America is under way, a Philadelphia automobile salesman having started, January 1, to introduce the cars he represents to the natives of all the five republics. He also will visit Brazil and Buenos Ayres, returning via Cuba and Porto Rico.

Women's Clubs Also Help.

The women's clubs of Kane county, Ill., recently raised more than $1000 to improve and beautify a road along the Fox River, much used by motorists. The money was raised by selling silver spoons engraved with a famous Indian's head, and which have been sold to persons living in half the States of the Union.

Experiments With Benzol.

Joe Tracy, who has evidently kept track of some of the fuel experiments made in England and other European countries for the last couple of years, has announced that he has been testing the virtues of benzol as a fuel for automobile engines.

NEW MODEL HAS CHANGES.

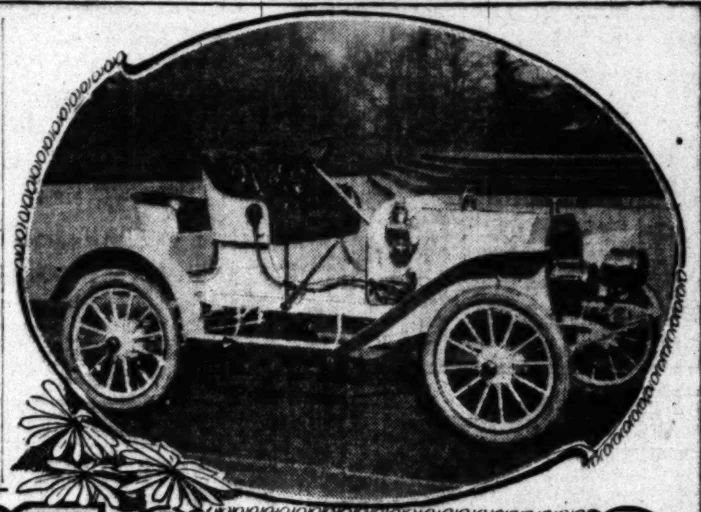
Pope-Hartford Roadster Arrives and Displays New Axle and Transmission.

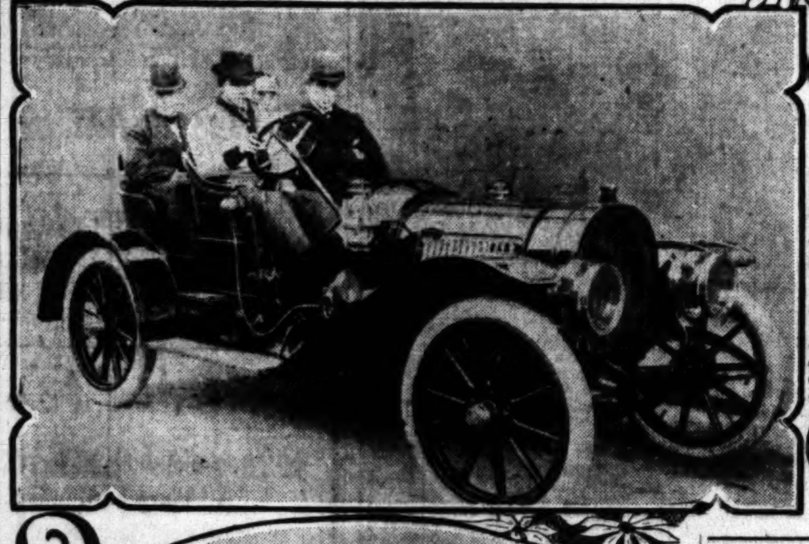
The Pope-Hartford runabout, which has just arrived in Los Angeles, looks quite a little different from the 1907 model, although in the main it follows the same lines. The same engine of 30-horse power is used as the Hartford factory found by experiments that a large and more powerful engine would give no more desirable results. The wheels and tires are larger and the wheel base has been lengthened ten inches. In place of the single rumble seat behind are a pair of rumble seats with folding backs.

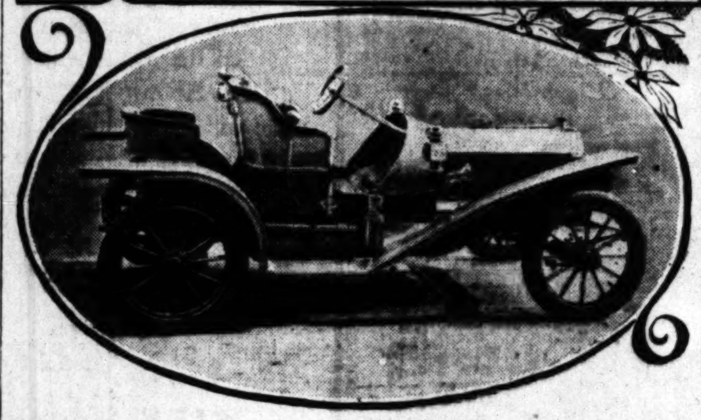
A larger steering wheel is supplied and the clutch now has thirty-four large compressed cork inserts. Selective type of transmission has been substituted for the progressive type and the rear axle has been changed to the floating type. This style of axle makes it possible to remove the axle shafts and the entire differential construction with the car standing on its own wheels.

The general construction of the Pope-Hartford touring car and runabout are the same except body and springs. In the touring car the 1907 lines have been followed so closely that the same appearance remains and the longer wheel base, larger wheels and bigger body are not noticed unless a 1907 car is placed near enough for a comparison. Control has been improved somewhat so that a speed of from four to fifty miles an hour on high gear is practical by the throttle system.

In the dark finished cars the base work is mostly covered by enamel or japan, on the European plan.







Four of the newest 1908 models to be seen in Los Angeles. At the top, the twenty-horse-power Buick; at the left, the new Pope-Hartford runabout, with double rumble seat; at the right, the four-cylinder Maxwell, brought out at the Garden show; and at bottom, the Great Smith runabout, with the newly designed fenders.

GREEN MAXWELL COMES.

Trim Touring Car, One of the Late Arrivals, Attracts Attention by Stylish Appearance.

The four-cylinder Model D Maxwell touring car, which has just arrived, is attracting attention by its trim lines and jaunty appearance. The car is light and speedy, and travels almost noiselessly. It is one of the stylish machines of the many which have lately arrived.

The car has a 24-28 horsepower engine, a feature of which is the method of lubricating the pistons, which is accomplished by a grooved brass ring at the lower end of the cylinders, fed from a separate oil lead, the overflow running into the crank case to aid the splash system.

The transmission is of the sliding gear type, and there are three speeds forward and one reverse. The ignition is jump spark. There is one set of dry batteries and a storage battery.

An olive green, with black moldings and carmine and gold striping, makes the car attractive.

GREAT SMITH HERE.

Runabout Shows Speed on Road Run to Pomona—Gray and Gold Makes Unique Finish.

The Great Smith runabout, a gray car, trimmed with gold and blue stripes, is one of the showiest of the late arrivals. The finish adds to the general style of the car, whose lines are made striking by the extended fenders of a new design.

P. A. Renton drove the machine to Pomona Thursday and the car acted well. Along the Pasadena boulevard the speedometer registered sixty miles an hour, and the car held the road at that pace.

The motor is four-cylinder, with a rating of twenty-four horse power. It is water-cooled and shaft driven. The ignition is jump spark, and the transmission of the sliding-gear type.

The Renton-Williams company has experienced difficulty in getting cars here, and have not been able to supply the demand for the runabout. The factory has promised to make deliveries each week after the middle of February.

May Have Three-Mile Track.

In Waukegan, Ill., a suburban town north of Chicago, the inhabitants are all worked up over a rumor that a three-mile concrete track for automobile racing is to be constructed between that place and the Wisconsin State line. It is said that the project was first thought of last fall, but that it has been kept quiet in order to secure options on the necessary land at fair prices. It is now asserted that options have been secured for more than 500 acres of land and that plans for the proposed racecourse will be outlined in the near future. The property which it is proposed to use is near the shore of Lake Michigan, and consequently close to the path of the projected extension of the famous Sheridan drive, which motorists of Illinois and Wisconsin hope to see extended from Chicago to Milwaukee.

Indiana spent almost $7,000,000 for new roads in 1907, some counties building from sixty to 100 miles of up-to-date gravel or stone highways.

WITH A RUSH.

WHITTIER WIPES OUT OCCIDENTAL.

PRESBYTERIANS OVERWHELMED IN BASKETBALL COURT.

Quakers Show Fine Form With Patched Team and Outclass Their Opponents—McKenney Is Best for Visitors—Marshburn Elected Captain by Whittier Team.

Whittier won one of the greatest victories in her history last night by completely overwhelming Occidental in the first intercollegiate basketball game of the season, the score being 57 to 8.

Just before the game, Marshburn, the crack guard of last year's championship team, was elected captain, and the choice proved to be a wise one, as he was in the game every minute from start to finish, his man not getting a single goal. He also threw more goals than any man on either team, getting six in the first half and three in the second.

At the last minute, Holton was placed at center, instead of Clark, who has been playing the position since Tebbetts has been out. He was not far behind Marshburn in throwing goals, getting five in the first half and two in the second half.

Renneker played his old, steady game, getting one goal in the first half and five in the second half. Sharpless was a little off-color on goal throwing, getting only two in the first half and one in the second half. McCaslin, the substitute guard, put up a fine article of ball.

For the visitors, McKenney probably played the best game.

When the whistle blew at the beginning of the first half, Holton outjumped McKenney and knocked the ball to Sharpless, who threw to Renneker. He tried for goal and missed. A foul was then called on Sharpless, and McKenney threw the goal, Occidental securing the first point. This is the only time during the entire game that the Presbyterians led, for the Quakers soon got together and threw goals seemingly almost at will. The first half ended with the score being 31 to 4.

In the second half it was merely a question of how many points the Quakers could run up.

The line-up was as follows:

Whittier.		Occidental.
Renneker	forward	Baer
Sharpless	forward	Thomas
Holton	center	McKenney
Marshburn	guard	McDowell
McCaslin	guard	Hillery
		Hopkins

SUMMARY.

Whittier—Field goals, 26; from foul line, 5.

Occidental—Field goals, 3; from foul line, 2.

Total score—Whittier, 57; Occidental, 8.

The preliminary game was between the Occidental Preps and the Whittier second team, the score being 36 to 4 in Whittier's favor. The Whittier second, as a whole, played a great game. Although the boys missed several good shots at the basket, their team work was fine. Clark, for the Whittier second, probably played the best game, making eight out of the fourteen field goals, while Gilkey, for Occidental, did the best for them.

The line-up for the preliminary game was as follows:

Whittier.		Occidental.
Beeson	forward	Moore
Williams	forward	McDowell
Clark	center	Gilkey
Marshburn	guard	Marshall
Tebbetts	guard	Bradbeen

Summary—Whittier, field goals, 14; from foul line, 8. Occidental, field goals, 1; from foul line, 2. Total, Whittier, 36; Occidental, 4.

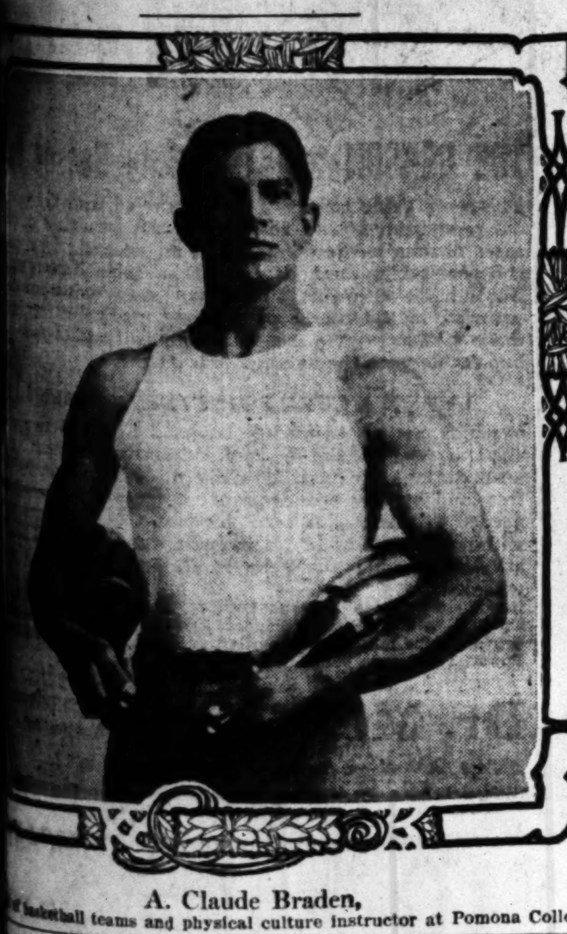
MNASIUM CONTESTS AT INVITATION MEET.



A. Claude Braden,
basketball teams and physical culture instructor at Pomona College.

MONT, Jan. 18.—The Pomo- athletic management has de- to launch upon a new ven- stimulating interscholastic and will hold the first annual California championship in- gymnastic contest here, in conjunction with the fifth interscholastic field meet for and prep. schools.

The judges selected are George W. Braden, physical director for the Pasadena Y.M.C.A.; C. H. Price, physical director, for the Los Angeles Y.M.C.A.; and A. Claude Braden, physical director, Pomona College.

To the contestant scoring the greatest number of points will be awarded a gold medal, to the second man a silver medal, and one of bronze to the third best. A banner emblematic of the Southern California championship will be presented to the team scoring the greatest number of points in aggregate by all members of their aggregation. Two hundred will be the highest score possible, since ten points will be the maximum for one exercise on each piece of apparatus.

The number of contestants from one school in each event will be limited. The exact number has not yet been decided on, but will probably be three. Invitations to enter this event will be included with the invitations for the regular field meet, and Trainer Braden is confident of having several strong teams enter the contest. The most promising are Throop, Pasadena High School, Los Angeles High School, Polytechnic High, and Harvard School. Whittier High will likely send a team also.

The committee who have been appointed to assist him in preparation for the big day for Pomona are Dr. George S. Sumner, faculty chairman of athletics; Coach Franklin E. Pierce, Capt. William Himrod of the Pomona track team, and president of the associated students; Walter Hartzell, general manager of athletics.

NOW TEACHING.

PARSONS COACH FOR PASADENA.

FORMER CHAMPION SPRINTER TO TEACH HIS METHODS.

High School Boys Have Good Track Team and Propose to Try for Records This Season—Kern and La Spada Are Best of the Veterans. New Material on Hand.

Charles Parsons, former dash man for U.S.C. and Wisconsin, and the most consistent hundred-yard performer in campaign work ever seen on the Coast, has been secured as track coach by Pasadena High School and has been training the squad during the past week. Parsons is beginning the season with very light work, and has not yet sized up his material, but thinks he has taken hold of a good bunch of promising athletes.

Since Monday afternoon, when the first practice was held, about fifteen candidates for the track team have been out daily, practicing starting and doing slow laps around the track. Next week Parsons will put the men through harder paces, and will single out the runners for their different events.

Pasadena High will be well equipped with sprint and distance men, and with Parson's coaching should put out first-place winners in the track events. In the field events, also, there are old men on hand, so that a well-balanced track team will represent the Crown City school this season.

The first meet will be held on February 1, when the four classes will compete. This will be largely in the nature of a tryout for new and old material.

Of the members of the team of last year who are again out, Kern, hurdler, and La Spada, 100 and 220 man, are the best performers. Kern has been singled out by Parsons as a possible interscholastic champion in both the high and low hurdles, and the veteran sprinter also may make a quarter miler out of him. La Spada, who is manager of the track team, won the 220 in the Pomona meet last year in 23 1-5 seconds, and ran second in nearly all the other meets of the season. He has shown a steady improvement for two years, and with Parsons's help may become a record breaker this season.

Rice, captain of the team, who ran the 880 last year, will do the same event this year. Hole will again do the mile. Smith will be a close contender for first in the 440 this year, as he ran second to Lee, of Harvard, last season, and will be able to get under 55 seconds this year.

Tyler, last year at Throop, will also run the quarter mile, and enter the broad and high jump. Thompson and Card are the candidates for the hammer throw, and both do over 140 feet. Pyle will put the shot, and has a record of 41 feet 6 inches.

Cacus is expected to vault in great form this year, and better his record of 11 feet, made at the U.S.C. meet last spring. Gibbs, who has represented Pasadena in the broad jump for four years, will be eligible for the Stanford interscholastic meet only. He has done 22 feet.

ANNEX ANOTHER.

POLY GIRLS WIN EASY VICTORY.

SANTA MONICA HIGH FALLS A VICTIM TO TEAM PLAY.

First Ten-Minute Period the Score Was Close, but After That the Los Angeles Girls Ran Away With the Game—Gladys MacKay and Miss Miller Are the Stars.

Polytechnic defeated Santa Monica High School in a girls' basketball game, held on the Poly courts, yesterday morning, by the score of 31 to 4. Santa Monica played a good game, but was overwhelmed by the Polytechnic team work. At the end of the first ten-minute period, the score was 3 to 2, but after this Polytechnic ran away from the visitors. The game was cleanly played on both sides.

For Santa Monica, Miss E. Miller, center, was the star, catching the ball on every toss-up. Gladys MacKay of Poly played the best game, allowing no goals to be thrown from her territory.

This was the second game on the Polytechnic schedule, and both were won. Next Saturday Poly will meet San Fernando High School.

The threatened protest by L. A. High of Poly's 10-to-9 victory of last Saturday, has not been made. Poly claims that there was still a minute to play after the winning goal was thrown, and, furthermore, that there are grounds for a counter-protest, owing to the fact that the L. A. High did not send in a certified list of players three days before the game, as the rules of the County League provide.

The line-up yesterday was:

Polytechnic.		Santa Monica.
Ross	forward	Macomber
M. Brown, Franklin	forward	Coe
Z. Brown, M. Brown	center	Miller
White	center	Harding
MacKay	guard	Chandler
Buisseret	guard	Spence

Summary:

Field goals—Zadie Ross, 5; Hazel Franklin, 7; Macomber, 1.

Goals from foul—Mary Browne, 1; Hazel Franklin, 1; Macomber, 1; Coe, 1.

Birds Are Threatened.

That many breeds of game birds are seriously threatened with extinction in America at the present time is asserted by ornithological authorities in New York. Reports which have been received at the headquarters of the National Association of Audubon Societies from sportsmen, wardens and experts in every section of the country show alarming decrease in grouse, quail, woodcock, ducks and various shore birds. Not only sport, but public health, will suffer permanent injury, officers of the association declared, unless action is taken by the State Legislatures this winter to protect these dying races of game.

WHITTIER TEAM IN CONFERENCE.

Scheduled in Three-Cornered Meet at Occidental.

Concession to Allow Preps to Enter Contests.

Offer Amendment to Exclude Affiliated Colleges.

Whittier College has accepted the invitation of Occidental and Pomona to enter a three-cornered track meet, and the annual conference will be held on Occidental campus, March 21.

The faculty and student body of the Quaker college have ratified the conference agreement existing between Occidental and Pomona, the Presbyterians and Congregationalists making the concession that all preparatory students in Whittier College at the present time may compete in the conference meets of the future, provided that any academy student does not compete more than the regular time of four years.

After this year, the academy students of Occidental and Pomona will be barred from intercollegiate athletics, but this ruling was not enforced with respect to Whittier in order to allow the Quakers to use some of their best athletes, who will be in the preparatory department for two or three years.

An important amendment has been proposed to the conference agreement by Pomona and Occidental in the form of a ruling, excluding all affiliated colleges from participating in intercollegiate athletics. The faculties and student bodies of both colleges are in favor of the amendment, and it simply remains for the clause to be inserted in the agreement, which will be done at an early date.

The new ruling will bar from college sports all students in the music department of Pomona, and exclude the law, medical, and dentistry departments of a school from contributing athletes to intercollegiate teams. This measure is proposed for the purpose of barring all men not of college rank from college sports, as a student may enter the affiliated colleges without a high-school diploma or credentials of any sort.

Pomona and Occidental have been in favor of this amendment for several years, but it was never adopted on account of the objection of U.S.C., who wanted to draw on all departments for athletes. However, Pomona and Occidental regard the affiliated schools as being a part of U.S.C. in name only, and they believe that Methodist athletes in local dual and conference meets should be drawn only from the department of liberal arts, which is the college proper.

The conference agreement as it now stands ranks favorably with the standards of eastern colleges. The one-year residence clause guards against the importation of tramp athletes, and the high scholarship requirements reduces to a minimum the possibility of any one other than a bona fide student participating in local intercollegiate athletics.

Had not Whittier entered the conference, the annual conference meet, which has been a feature of local track athletics for the last ten years, would have had to be abandoned, as it would have been only in the nature of a return dual meet between Occidental and Pomona.

It is expected that the Quakers will make a strong showing against Pomona and Occidental in track athletics this year. Considering the small number of athletes, the Quakers have made remarkable forward strides in sports during the last two years.

In basketball Whittier has been preeminent among the local colleges for a number of years, dividing honors only with St. Vincent's, at times, and the football team last season surprised the followers of the game by its strong showing against the larger colleges. The Quakers broke into track athletics last year for the first time, and succeeded in capturing a number of places in the conference meet. Baseball is firmly established at the Quaker school, and an intercollegiate schedule was played last year.

From present indications Pomona has the best chance of taking first honors in the conference meet, although the loss of Bob Spurgeon will mean a loss of at least eight points to the Congregationalists, as he was the strongest competitor of Bird of Occidental in the 100 and 220-yard dashes.

On account of the large amount of new material to be developed at Occidental, it is impossible to get a line on the Presbyterian team at the present time, although Coach Merrill is confident that he will be able to turn out a winning aggregation for the conference meet. There are several promising new men who have all the earmarks of future "greats," but whether they can be turned into point winners before the end of the present season remains to be seen.

The only intercollegiate dual meet will be between Occidental and Pomona, as at the present time the Quakers are not in a position to contest with each college separately. However there is a possibility that the Quakers and Occidental will meet in a dual match, although the date has not been arranged.

SECOND ST. VINCENT'S.

Manager Carroll Arranging Good Schedule With Fast Prep Teams in the South.

St. Vincent's academic baseball team, under the direction of Coach Moores, is rapidly rounding into shape. The youngsters have been making a creditable showing against the first squad.

Though not yet meeting the ball with consistency, all the boys stand well up to the plate, and it is only a question of time before they find their batting eyes. The infielders are all fast players, handle the ball well, and without exception have good throwing arms. With a little more teamwork and a knowledge of just what to do with the ball at critical moments, they should form a strong combination.

At present O'Lhasso and Phillips are the strongest bidders for the place behind the bat, with the chances favoring the former on account of previous experience. Workman appears to be a fixture on the initial sack, through his ability to gather in bad throws. O'Rourke seems equally secure on second base, as does Hickson, who is covering the difficult corner at third. Bastanchury at short is the star performer of the bunch, being a hard hitter as well as an excellent fielder.

In the outer gardens it is a toss-up between Ross, Meers, Crawford and Bourge. All are fast men and cover the territory well. O'Neil probably will do the bulk of the pitching. The boy has a good delivery, with speed and wide curves. Beatson is also a likely candidate for the pitching staff.

Manager Carroll is arranging a schedule. On account of this being the Saints' first appearance in the High School field, it has been rather difficult to secure contests.

The present schedule includes games with:

St. Vincent's and Polytechnic High School, February 1.

St. Vincent's and Harvard, February 7.

St. Vincent's and Riverside, February 21, at Riverside.

St. Vincent's and San Bernardino, February 22, at San Bernardino.

St. Vincent's and Pomona, February 27, at Pomona.

St. Vincent's and Santa Ana, March 7, at Santa Ana.

San Bernardino and St. Vincent's, March 14.

Pomona and St. Vincent's, April 22.

Santa Barbara, Santa Paula and Ventura against St. Vincent's, April 24, 25 and 26.

Riverside and St. Vincent's, May 30.

ROUGH DIAMONDS.

MANY VETERANS FOR 'VARSITY.

BRIDEWELL PITCHES WELL IN PRACTICE STUNTS.

Promising Baseball Men Have Registered from Prep Schools and Will Be Given Try-out—Manager Hunt Proposes Series of Contests With Northern Schools.

Baseball is on at the University of Southern California this week, and a likely squad of twenty-five candidates have already signified their intention to try for the 'varsity. A majority of last year's nine is available as a nucleus for the team, and a large number of promising men registering from many preparatory schools are also on hand anxious to be factors in the season's results.

Walter Bridewell, 'varsity pitcher for two years, is captain of the squad for the ensuing season, and is already doing fine service in getting the diamond in good condition. Track training will not interfere with the work of the ball athletes, as the vaulting and jumping standards have been moved from the inner field of the track to the space directly fronting the bleachers, and the entire football ground is being fixed for the baseball squad. For the last two days a steam roller has done much to smooth and level the infield, and early in the week the diamond will be platted, and the bases put in order.

The 'varsity schedule has not as yet been arranged, but Manager Hunt has in contemplation a series of contests with Stanford and Berkeley, and games will be played with the local High School and Whittier College. In baseball, as in track and basketball, the loss of intercollegiate contests will be offset by a lengthy series of inter-class and inter-department games, which should furnish plenty of sport for the fans.

Of the old-timers who will be in the for team positions, Burek and Bridewell will make up the battery. Burek may also try his skill in the box. He has splendid curves but lacks control. Trotter, from Santa Paula High, has had considerable experience both in the field and at first base, and will be given a try at the first bag. Dickison of the law school, who occupied the first bag at intervals last season, will again try for his position. Richardson is versatile, playing either first or the outfield with credit. Shute and Almy are out for shortstop. Wirshing an Coloneus will try for the third bag, while the following will turn their attentions to the outfield berths: Crossman, King, Mee, Skinner, Woolin, Thornton, Moore, Christopher, Collison, Hunt.

Osborne, the basketball expert, who played on the Whittier College nine last year, will be out for an infield position. Gates, of Alhambra will try for centerfield.

Practice will be held daily, and as soon as the squad shows any sort of team work practice games will be played and the inter-class contests run off.

BASEBALL PROSPECTS.

STRONG INFIELD WORKING.

Baseball practice is in full swing at Harvard School, with about twenty candidates on the diamond each afternoon, under the direction of Coach Cutting, formerly a member of the Chicago Reserves nine. Six players who made the team last year are out again, and a strong infield has already been developed. The new candidates are mostly trying for outfield positions.

Newman, catcher; McCauley (c.,) second base; Cornego, shortstop, and Thorpe, third base, held the same positions last year, and are sure of their places again. Dotson, who is covering first, played in the field last year.

Sharp, who caught for Belmont last season, is trying for an infield position, and probably will alternate with one of the infielders. Duque, who covered third base during part of the last season, is trying for the field, and Robb, the old right fielder, is again out for his position. Others trying for field positions are Levy, a senior; Riggins and Bretherton.

The pitching job lies between McLees, substitute twirler last year; Ernsting, a freshman, who pitched for the lower school last season and Stoll, a newcomer.

Practice has not been under way long enough to allow the coach to get a good line on the players, and the lack of a good diamond has held the team back. The football field has been converted into a baseball grounds, the work of transformation having been completed Wednesday. No games have been scheduled for the coming season.

PLAY, TWO GAMES.

ACTIVE AT JOY PARK.

The Dyas-Clines will play two games of baseball this afternoon at Joy Park, the first with the Vernons, and the second with the Nofzigers. The batteries will be Ash and Berryman for the Vernons, Stone and Thompson for the Nofzigers; Lyman and Whaling, first game, and Reiger and Whaling, second game, for the Dyas-Clines. The games will begin at 1 and 3 o'clock. Halbrighter will umpire, and probably will be retained for the Southern State League series.

The next meeting of the officers of the new league will be held Tuesday night, when the schedule and rules committees will report. The Azusa team has disbanded, leaving four teams in the league, but more out-of-town nines probably will join.

Archery Tournament.

Plans for the annual tournament of the National Archery Association, to be held at Chicago, August 18, to 21, are already under way. The secretary of the association, William Carver Williams, has issued a circular letter, urging the archers all over America to arouse interest in the sport in order that the Chicago tournament may be a great success. A campaign for new members will be made during the months preceding the tournament. During the past few years the sport has shown a remarkable growth in popular favor.

ATHLETIC MEET IN THE SOUTH.

Try-out for Olympic Games Is to Be Arranged.

Contests to Be Held in April According to Braden.

Southern Officers to Have Full Powers to Act.

Southern California athletes will be given an opportunity to try out for the Olympian games some time in April, according to the plans of the local commission of the A.A.U.

The National Committee of the A.A.U. in charge of the selection of athletes for the Olympian games, to be held in London in July, has already authorized the P.A.A. to hold a Pacific Coast try-out, in May.

The plan of the P.A.A. is to hold preliminary meets in the northern and southern sections of the Pacific Coast, where the best men will be selected and entered into the P.A.A. meet, at San Francisco.

The Southern California meet, according to George W. Braden, secretary of the southern commission, will be held in April, to select a track team to go north and compete at San Francisco.

"We have a number of athletes in this section of the Coast, who are worthy of a chance to try for Olympic games," said Braden yesterday. "If but one Pacific Coast meet were to be held, at San Francisco, the chances are that very few southern boys would enter it. For this reason we have hit upon the plan of holding a separate meet in Southern Californal, where we will select a strong team to send to San Francisco."

Braden reports good progress in the A.A.U. movement since its introduction in the south. The Redondo and Venice swimming clubs, San Fernando athletic club, Whittier basketball and track teams, Pomona basketball team, and many high-school athletes have taken out amateur cards. Braden also reports that the baseball situation is being cleared of the spirit of professionalism, and that several players in the leagues dominated by "Red" Perkins have been barred for accepting money for playing.

Regarding the refusal of the Citrus Belt League to join the P.A.A., Braden said: "There is no particular reason why the league should join, if they conduct all their meets within the league, but if they wish to meet outside teams, it will be necessary for the individuals to take out amateur cards."

The Southern California organization formed with the hope of conducting a southern branch of the A.A.U., independent of the P.A.A., will continue to exist, says Braden. Although subsidiary to the northern organization, the local commission has almost independent power, and can transact its own business whenever occasion arises. The regulation of athletics in the south is entirely in its hands. It can issue temporary sanctions for athletic meets, issue cards of amateur standing, and pass regulations, without first consulting President Peixotto, or the P.A.A. commission in San Francisco.

Final approval of such actions must come from the northern officials, however, but as Peixotto, in his recent visit to Los Angeles, stated that he had the greatest faith in the Southern California commission, and would accept its rulings without question, there is little danger of the north usurping the authority which properly belongs in the south.

On the back stretch Burns sent Rip Rap up to third place. As they turned into the stretch Big Bow was leading by two lengths, and Algol was two lengths in front of the favorite. Had Burns swung around the leaders and ridden his mount diligently through the stretch, the favorite would have won handily. As it was he tried to come through on the rail, was shut off and gave up. Bow won by a snoot, Algol beat Rip a little over a length. And the books again kept the money.

Thus were three odds-on choices beaten in a day. And right here a word to the Arcadia bookmakers. Odds-on favorites have no business trailing a field and winning or losing in a ding-dong finish under the bat. Odds-on means out-classing a field, it means tin-canning in front, winning in a canter. If the bookmakers at Arcadia want to disgust the betting public completely, let them make a few more Diamonds, Nonie Lucilles, Master Lesters and Rip Raps odds-on favorites and then show the public how foolish they are to bet on such horses at such prices.

Modena won the baby race from Frank Clancy, one of the choices, which led into the stretch, but stopped, just as he did last time out, when he apparently had the race won. Marion Delorme, the first choice in the betting, was a poor third.

The sixth and seventh races were complete upsets of form, Phil Igoe, a 15 to 1 shot, winning the sixth, and Dominus Arvi, a 10 to 1 chance, capturing the last race of the day. A blanket would have covered the first six horses in the sixth race, but the favorite, Sainrida, practically left at the post, would not have been found under the blanket.

Confederate, the favorite in the last, and Toupee, the second choice in the same race, ran disgraceful races, the former finishing in the ruck, and the latter a poor third. Dredger, a maiden 3-year-old, and Dominus Arvi, a maiden 4-year-old, finished second and first, respectively. Results:

RACING AT OAKLAND.

MONTGOMERY IS BEATEN.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 18.—One of the most exciting contests of the season was seen at Emeryville today when Deutschland and Montgomery came down the stretch in the Lissak Handicap. Montgomery was the favorite on account of his eastern achievements. Deutschland had a good lead to the stretch, when Jockey Miller urged Montgomery and the two were soon on even terms. FINE BARKERS TO BE SEEN.

THREE HUNDRED ENTRIES COMING TO BENCH SHOW.

Over Fifty Fine Ones Are Expected From San Francisco Alone—Entry List Will Close First Week in February—Ten Exhibitions Carded for Present Year.

With 300 entries assured, the fifth annual show of the Southwestern Kennel Club, to be held in this city next month, will be a four-point affair toward a championship and with this tied, the dog fanciers of the Coast will certainly bestir themselves to get their pets in the best kind of shape, for a dog owner is as touchy about the number of points the first in a winner's class will bring him as is an actress over having her jewels stolen every month.

G. D. Roach's Marshfield Dan.
English Setter which is expected to win prizes at the dog show next month.

Then entry list does not close until February 8, but Fred Herr, the chairman of the bench show committee, declares there will not be less than 300 exhibits and that there will be over fifty from San Francisco, which a large number. As an illustration of the class of the northern entries, one need only mention that Miss Crocker will bring down about ten of her Boston terriers and bull terriers, than which there are few better in the West. Dr. L. W. Sprig, secretary of the Pacific Coast Pointer and Setter Club, will bring a string of English and Irish setters.

Other exhibitors of San Francisco who will send fine specimens are as follows: George Neiborger, cocker spaniels; A. Balfour, field spaniels; A. H. Hayes, Jr., English bulldogs; J. A. Wiborn, English and French bulldogs; Judge Carroll Cook, American fox hounds; E. Tripod, curly poodles; Nat Messer, Airedales; Robert Wallace, collies; R. H. Groves, Irish setters; W. W. Stetheimer and I. C. Ackerman, fox terriers; Judge E. Shortall, bull terriers; J. Roach, English setters and A. L. Stewart, Gordon setters. In addition to his own dogs, Stewart will handle a big string of good ones for northern owners.

In addition to the regular prizes in the premium list sent out, Col. A. W. Hamilton offers a cup for the best dog owned and exhibited by a lady and a local cafe gives a cup for the best Coast-bred dog of any breed. Many other handsome special trophies have been promised by the various dog owners of Southern California.

The dog owners of the Coast will have all they can attend to this year, in the way of shows, for there are no less than ten in sight. The first one of this year is scheduled for Pasadena an February 13-14. Los Angeles is next, on February 19-22, and Oakland comes a week or two later. Then San Francisco follows for the last four days in April, and in the autumn there will be Burlingame in September and then Tanforan, Vallejo and Freno, with Venice winding up the year in December. Many of the owners of Southern California will have their dogs in the northern shows.

Weak Men
Do You Know the Danger of a Neglected Ailment? I Can Cure You Now. Don't Delay.
There are few men who do not at some time in their lives need the services of a skilled specialist. Disorders and derangements come, and unless promptly and thoroughly cured are apt to pass into a chronic stage. A majority of the most difficult and complicated cases I treat have grown serious through neglect or improper treatment of minor ailments. Little symptoms have their meaning and should be heeded. Sometimes the treatment required is slight and in thousands of instances the mere observance of a few hygienic suggestions have been sufficient. For sixteen years men's diseases have been my specialty. I positively cure cases such as no other physician ever has cured. My professional advice is free at all times, either in personal consultation or by correspondence, and I am always glad to render such help as I can in the way of scientific suggestions.
DR. TAYLOR
The Leading Specialist
I Will Wait for My Fee Until You Are Well
My Direct Treatment for "Weakness"
That disorder commonly known as "weakness" has for years and generations baffled the efforts of physicians, yet to this very day a majority of doctors, specialists not excepted, are attempting to overcome it by methods that have been in constant use and have constantly failed for half a century. They dose the system with powerful stimulants and tonics calculated to restore nervous force or strength, that is not and never has been lacking, with a result that the functions are temporarily excited, to the positive detriment of the patient. Weakness—we will call it such for convenience just now—is only a symptom resulting from a chronically swollen and inflamed prostate gland, and is curable by local treatment only. Either early dissipation or some improperly treated contracted disease is responsible for the inflammation in most instances, though accidental injury, strain, etc., may produce the same result. I have permanently cured thousands of cases of prematureness, loss of power, etc., without the giving of a single internal dose, which demonstrates the absolute accuracy of my understanding and treatment of this disorder. In years I have not met with a single failure, and I have entire confidence in my ability to cure all cases that come to me for treatment. I am equally certain that no treatment other than that which I have perfected can completely and permanently restore strength and vigor.
Make Haste to Seek Expert Treatment
Make haste to seek the services of the most skillful Specialist in Men's Diseases possible to you—the doctor who has a reputation for performing CURES. Don't put the matter off. Delay is dangerous. Every moment you are hesitating the disease is gaining greater headway and will be that much harder to cure. If you delay too long your condition will certainly pass beyond the power of human skill. Remember that your ailment will not cure itself.
Why My Methods Cure
Bear in mind that for twenty-five years I have made a specialty of the half dozen ailments peculiar to men. I do not dose the stomach with powerful drugs, as do other specialists; I have no electric belts or other trick-a-trap devices to sell you for a fat price—or any other price; neither have I any nostrums or Tonics to work off on you for so much per; but I have developed a Direct-Method Treatment that will CURE ANY CASE of WEAKNESS IN MEN. Instead of destroying the digestive and assimilative processes of the stomach and bowels by filling them up with drugs, I apply curative medicines DIRECTLY to the DISEASED REGION, and thus effect a CURE in a comparatively short time.
Dangers of Varicocele
Many men afflicted with varicocele are endangering their general health, and even life itself, by allowing the disorder to remain uncured. Many of them believe it is an incurable disease, which is far from being the truth, as I have demonstrated not only hundreds but thousands of times.
Varicocele results from partial paralysis of the delicate nervous fibers that have a part in controlling local circulation of the blood. The muscular coatings of the veins, being deprived of nervous communication and control, become inactive, weaken and relax. The blood vessels expand from the pressure within, the circulation of the parts becomes sluggish, and frequent stagnant pools form in the little nooks and pockets that constantly enlarge as the relaxation continues. The possibility exists that clots may form in these stagnant pools and then pass out into the general circulation. Should one find lodgment in a valve of the heart the result might be instant death, or should it be carried to the brain general paralysis would follow.
Contracted Disorders
Absolute safety demands the most thorough treatment in all contracted diseases. If men but realized the danger attending such ailments, they would not think of intrusting their cases in unskilled hands. Unless every particle of inflammation is removed, a chronic stage follows just as surely as though the disease had received no treatment at all. I cure thoroughly. I will not dismiss a patient until every possibility of relapse is past. I treat contracted diseases as no other physician treats them, and I cure thoroughly in less than the usual time required.
Organic Weakness, Lost Vigor, Stricture, Specific Blood Poison and Piles are also among the diseases I PROMPTLY and PERMANENTLY cure.

My Specialty Men's Diseases
There is no ailment peculiar to men that I cannot cure. For twenty years I have devoted my entire time and energy to the treatment of men's diseases.
My methods have been perfected by actual experience, with a thorough theoretical knowledge as a basis. I am the only physician thoroughly and permanently curing those functional derangements commonly classed as "Weakness," and my success in overcoming such cases has placed me foremost among specialists treating men's diseases, and has brought me the largest practice of it kind in the West.
DR. MILES
The Master Specialist
My Fee for a Thorough and Lasting Cure of Any Ailment is only $10 in any uncomplicated case.
PAY ME AFTER I HAVE CURED YOU
I Cure All Diseases of Men
I have treated hundreds of men who have long suffered a gradual decline of physical and mental energy as a result of ailments, and have been interested in noting the marked general improvement that follows a thorough cure of the chief disorder. My success in curing difficult cases of long standing has made me the foremost specialist treating men's diseases. This success is due to several things. It is due to the original, distinctive and thoroughly scientific methods of treatment I employ.
To those in doubt as to their true condition who wish to avoid the serious results that may follow neglect, I offer free consultation and advice, either at my office or through correspondence. If your case is one of the few that has reached an incurable stage, I will not accept it for treatment, nor will I urge my services upon any one. I treat curable cases only, and cure all cases I treat.
The Scientific Treatment of "Weakness"
Dosing the system with powerful stimulants and tonics in an effort to restore functional vigor can have but one final result: the condition is rendered worse than before. Few doctors know of any other method than stomach drugging, and when this does no good they say "There is no cure for Weakness." I have often made strong statements to the effect that the ailment must be thoroughly understood before it could be remedied. I have proven it beyond dispute that so-called "Weakness" is merely an indication of the existence of a low form of inflammation in the Prostate Gland, which is usually aggravated and made worse by stimulating medicine, electricity, or any other agent that excites temporary activity. The Prostate is a nerve center, and therefore very sensitive to treatment—the right kind quickly helps, while the wrong kind can cause great harm and sometimes irreparable damage.
I employ the only scientific and fully effective treatment for "Weakness," which is almost entirely local, by which I mean that the medication is applied directly to parts. Medicines containing poisons are entirely excluded. I obtain the most desirable results in every case undertaken, and the cure is permanent and complete.
Varicocele
I cure any case that I accept in one week's time. My treatment is a painless one, and in most instances the patient need not be detained a single day from business. There is no doubt or guesswork, but absolute certainty of a thorough and lasting cure, with complete return to that degree of health and vigor that existed before the disease began.
Stricture
My treatment for stricture is absolutely painless, and perfect results can be depended upon in every instance. I do no cutting or dilating whatever.
Contracted Disorders
Every case of contracted disease I treat is cured thoroughly. My patients have no relapses. When I pronounce a case cured there is not a particle of infection or inflammation remaining, and there isn't the slightest danger that the disease will return in its original form or work its way into the general system. Some contracted diseases are less serious than others, but none are too trivial to warrant uncertain methods of treatment. I especially solicit those cases that other doctors have been unable to cure.

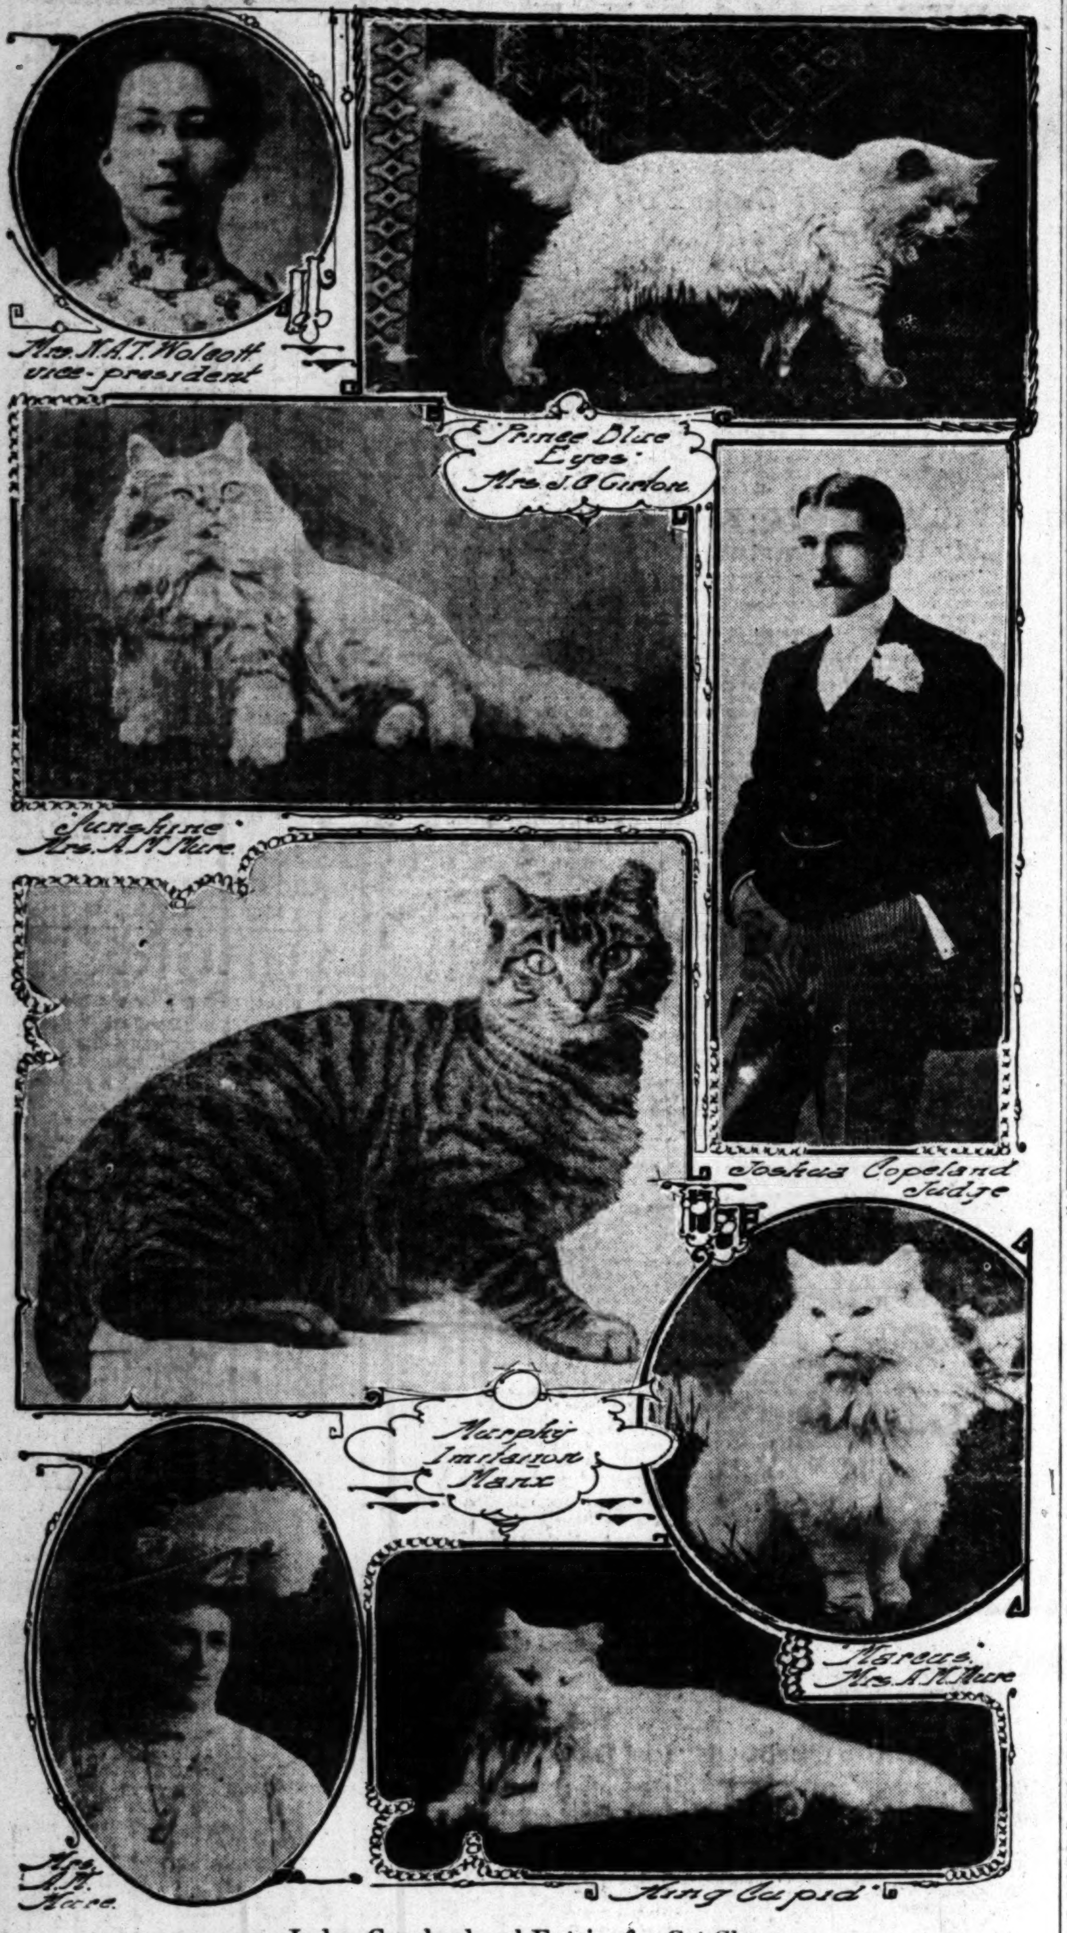
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA NATIONAL CAT CLUB FEATURES.



Judge Copeland and Entries for Cat Show, which is to be given at Chutes Park, beginning Thursday and continuing three days.

TO OPEN THURSDAY.

KITTIES DRESSING UP FOR GRAND CAT BALL.

THE third annual show of the Southern California National Cat Club is to open next Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, when 175 Angoras, Persian, Silver and other high-class specimens are to be on exhibition at Chutes Park. The show will continue for three days.

These kitties are in a great flurry these days, getting "coats" and "frills" and "plumes" in most attractive shape for the show, which is quite an event of the season in "tony" cat circles. The report is that so far very few "regrets" have been received to invitations issued, so when show day arrives, it is safe to predict that the "S. R.O." sign will be in evidence.

The feature of opening day will be the judging. Joshua Copeland of Ward, Pa., will perform this function. A public reception room decorated with the club colors, orange, red and green, located in the center of the building, has been prepared with an eye to the comfort of visitors and owners.

The cages will be decorated by the owners in orange, pink, blue and colors which harmonize with the colors of the cat. The blue cats will have orange, the black cats yellow, the whites, pink, blue or lavender; the orange-colored cats will have olive green.

The prizes to be contested for this year are particularly handsome. Of these, four will be challenge cups, offered by the club, and which must be won three times by one cat or one kennel. One of these is "The Blue Cat Cup," which has one win to the credit of the deceased "Robin Adair" of the Royal Blue-eyed Kennels, and one win to the credit of "Boy Blue," owned by Miss Wooster of Hollywood. Another of these cups, offered for "the best cat in the show," regardless of class, is engraved with two wins to the credit of "King Cupid," owned by Mrs. G. J. Girton.

The other two challenge cups, which are up for the first time this year, will be awarded for the "best blue-eyed male" and the "best Silver male," respectively. Other cups to be won outright have been donated. There will be a number of beautiful bronze medals awarded by the club. These medals will be offered to the best solid-colored cat in each class, the best blue-eyed white male, best orange-eyed white male, best blue male, best black male, best kitten in kitten class, best female, best Silver male.

About 100 special prizes have been given by merchants of the city and members of the Cat Club, which will be awarded to different classes. The show committee expects to have all entries at the park Wednesday.

Arrangements have also been made for an even temperature to prevail throughout the building, by a series of heated pipes, thus assuring comfort for the valued cats.

The new entries to date are those of Miss Price, who will exhibit Thyma, Susan, Currents, Jack London and Tangerine. Mrs. Moore has added to her entry a son and daughter of Marcus, Princess Royal, a beautiful odd-eyed kitten, Brownie, an orange-eyed male, and Teddy Bear, an orange-colored cat, so named because of his resemblance. There will be several other entries from Sunshine Kennels.

Mrs. A. F. Ower has entered two beautiful cats, a white and blue, and a white trick kitten. Mrs. G. O. Brownbury has entered a Silver cat. Mrs. A. Fenner has entered two, Angora and Persian; Mrs. John T. Mercer, three; Mrs. W. H. Stoddard, a beauty, Pan Pinacate; Mrs. B. Fisher has added a beautiful white, Romeo, to her list of entries. Mrs. H. A. Stearns has also entered several fine cats. Her kennels boast of such splendid stock as Lord Lorne and a noted blue-eyed male, Zal.

Fife's Paris, a dainty white cat, will again grace the show. Mrs. D. Houston of Glendale will show some of her cats. Mrs. H. M. Ingals will have two of her beautiful queens at the show. Mrs. George Murray will exhibit a very fine blue and white queen; Mrs. W. C. Smith of Pasadena has entered her beautiful Laddie Adair; also her prize-winning male, Adonis, and several others.

Mrs. W. Phillips will show a very beautiful queen, and Mrs. Lansing will exhibit one of her beautiful blue-eyed kittens, 3 months old.

The fanciers' view of line-bred stock is solid color, such as white, black, orange and blue, bred for several generations to the same color, so as to assure like producing like, and by so doing a breeder may attain the best results.

IMITATION MANX.

TO BE ENTERED IN SHOW.

An imitation Manx of remarkable intelligence won a prize at the last annual exhibition, and is to appear among the rows of Angora and Persian beauties that will adorn the show. At that time it was a kitten, but now is a matured veteran, able to get its own living, and does so. It is a champion gopher hunter, and will sit at the edge of a gopher hole all day if necessary, sure of its prey. It climbs with the agility of a wild cat, and spends much of its time on the top of clothes-line poles, roofs and the extended branches of large trees. Its semi-wild life has not destroyed its affections.

Daily it returns to the home of its owner, E. H. Rydall, who nursed it from a foundling. It is shorn of tail, parts of its ears, and other adjuncts to a perfect masculine feline.

Toward the two Angoras of the house it maintains a distant reserve, but is both familiar and affectionate toward a big bulldog, with which it sleeps in peace.

BRADBEER IS MANAGER.

Marshall Chosen to Captain Prep Track Team in the Interclass Meets in February.

Chester Bradbeer of the third-year class has been elected manager for the Occidental academy basketball and track teams for the present season. William Marshall has been chosen captain of the Presbyterian "prep" track team to lead in the interclass meet which will be held February 8. Marshall is the best hammer thrower in school, and in practice is tossing the weight 120 feet.

The preparatory department will have a large number of athletes on the 'varsity track team this year. Carver and Gordon of the fourth-year class lead in the mile run and high jump respectively. Carver has run the mile in 4 mins. 40 secs., and Gordon is high jumping 5 feet 6 inches. Bradbeer is showing up well in the low hurdle race and will be a strong running mate for Thomson. Lowry is high jumping 5 feet 2 inches.

It is probable that the "preps" will organize a track team and compete with out-of-town high schools.

Insignias to Athletes.

Following the custom of the northern universities, Occidental students have decided to give insignias to the athletes who serve three or more years on any one college athletic team, provided one of the years is the student's senior year. The insignia is in the form of a watch fob, octagonal in shape, with a circular figure in the center in which is placed an appropriate emblem of the branch of athletes for which the fob is given. Above this central design is inscribed the name "Occidental," while the portion beneath is inscribed with a wreath of leaves.

Coronado Polo Tourney.

SAN DIEGO, Jan. 18.—According to to information at hand, six teams will compete for the honors of the pony polo contests at Coronado. Burlingame has served notice that it will have two teams in the field, one entering under the name of San Mateo and the other under the name of Burlingame. Riverside will also enter two teams, playing under different names, while Los Angeles and Santa Monica will also send teams.

HARVARD TRACK MEN HUSTLING.

Ten Veterans Form Nucleus of Winning Squad.

Hope to Capture Interscholastic Championship.

Twenty Baseball Candidates Out for Practice.

Harvard School expects to have one of the best track teams in its history this season. Of the strong team which represented the school last season, but two members, Cline and Crary, have been lost by graduation. The school will be well provided for in the sprints and distance events, but in the field few first-class performers have thus far been discovered, although there is much new material from which to develop athletes for the weak places in the team.

Ten veterans form the nucleus about which Trainer Hamilton hopes to get together a team which will capture the Southern California interscholastic championship this year. There are more than twenty candidates for the Harvard School letter, from which several good men are expected to develop. The squad of thirty-seven which turned out on the first night of practice has shown only a slight falling off.

No work beyond running the squad around the cinder path several times each afternoon has been done thus far. Capt. Ken Lee and Elt Brown are in charge of the preliminary work-outs, and lead the different squads in the running.

For the 100-yard dash, Thorpe, one of the speediest men who played academic football last season, is relied upon to win firsts for Harvard. Thorpe did not go out for track last season, but ought to have little difficulty in training down this year so that he will be able to do close to 10 1-5 seconds in his event.

Thorpe and Lane are the two most promising candidates for the 220-yard dash. Lane's record last year in the 220 was 22 3-5s., and if he goes that fast this season, will be good for points in all the track meets. Lane will also run the quarter, and is expected to do the course in 52 seconds or less.

Harvard's best quarter miler will be Capt Lee, who has a record of 51 3-5 seconds. This is the only race Lee will run, and he promises to be one of the sensations of the season. Robb, who did the 880 last year, will again represent Harvard in this event.

Jack Vallely, the crack miler, is in good shape for another season of first-place performances. His record in this event is 4:43, and it is confidently expected that he will clip several seconds from this mark before the season is ended.

Elt Brown and Otis, who will do the low and high hurdles, respectively, complete the list of veterans who will participate in the track events at the military school. Brown has a record of 38 seconds in 220 yard sticks, and Otis's best past performance over the high hurdles is 17 1-5 seconds.

In the third events, in which Harvard will be weak, McCauley, with a record of 19 ft. 9 in. in the broad jump, probably is the best performer. Duque and Godby, both members of last year's team, do 5 ft. 6 in. and 5 ft. 5 in. in the high jump. Mitchell will enter the pole vault.

Elt Brown will enter the shot put, and Heath will also try this event. Otis will be the best Harvard has in the hammer throw. New material for the weights is badly needed, and Trainer Hamilton will pay a good deal of attention to developing men for the heavy work.

Other athletes who are out and probably will make good this season, are G. Crary, in the half mile; K. Brown, who will try the middle distance; Proctor, in the hundred, and Koebig, a new man who has not yet been placed, but seems to be good material.

Harvard's first meet will be with U.S.C. on February 28.

PLUGUGLY ENTERTAINMENT.

Occidental Students Star Football Team in Burlesque Show Given by Students.

Students of Occidental College will give a "plugugly" in the Hall of Letters Friday night.

The affair will be an opera burlesque entitled "The Isle of Amperzan," and relates the adventures of the Occidental football team, which is shipwrecked upon the South Sea island of Amperzan. The island is ruled by King Hitemup, father of the lovely Princess Bazaza. His duller moments are enlivened by the antics of the royal jester, Tutti-Frutti, or by the sage advice of his counsellors, Thinkhard and Keepthemun. The team generously assists King Hitemup in repelling the attack of a neighboring tribe, but complications ensue when it is learned that the leader of the football team must wed the beauteous Bazaza.

The principal parts will be played by McKenney, Morgan, Bird, Holley, Crane, Goheen, Rush, Brower, Pugh, Bradbeer, Smith, and others. The whole cast will number about forty persons. The play was written by a committee of students, and is replete with popular songs. A "female" dancing shorus will be a feature of the "plugugly."

'Varsity football sweaters, the gift of Dr. Baer, will be presented to the football men after the show, and the trophies of the various class competitions will be presented to the winning classes.

FIFTEEN ENTER IN TOURNAMENT.

SEVEN EVENTS ARE CARDED TO COVER THREE WEEKS.

Local Boys May Be Pitted Against the Crack Swimmers of Coast in Bimini Contests—Brown, Watlington, and Mitchell Show Great Form in Practice.

Entries for the indoor swimming tournament of the Southern California Swimming Association, which will begin on January 31 at Bimini Baths, and extend over the two following Friday evenings, are coming in steadily. Fifteen local swimmers have filled out the blanks issued by Lee Henry, secretary of the association, and it is expected that more will be heard from before the tournament begins.

Among the cracks who are now enrolled are Stan Mitchell, Ben Watlington, Elt Brown, Baker and Crawford. Abeg, the Swiss amateur champion, has not yet entered, but expects to, and Wilbur Kyle of San Diego probably will enter, also.

Seven events have been carded, and in all of them Southern California championships will be decided. Especial interest attaches to the races, as the winners probably will be given an opportunity to enter try-outs for the American swimming squad, which will compete in the Olympic games in London next summer.

Wilbur Kyle and Scott Leary have generally been conceded as California's best swimmers, but local men consider Watlington and Brown their equals, and are anxious that the Los Angeles boys be given a chance to compete with Kyle and Leary.

Both Brown and Watlington showed great form last summer, and the latter has several times defeated the San Diego crack. With the improvement of the last six months they should be able to make a strong bid for the Coast championships in any of the events from the 220 to 880-yard races.

These indoor races will be the first that have been attempted in Southern California for many years. Gold and silver medals are offered for first and second places, in addition to the Southern California championships, which each winner will acquire.

Athletes who enter the tournament are required to produce or take out membership cards in the P.A.A. of the American Athletic Union, so that none but pure amateurs will be able to compete.

The seven events will be contested in the following order: Fifty-yard dash, 100-yard dash, 220-yard dash, 440-yard dash, 880-yard dash, fifty-yard dash for juveniles, and long distance under water.

Will Increase
Your Business

Contrary to popular belief the business of selling goods through catalogues is steadily increasing.

Even houses which make no great specialty of mail-order business appreciate the direct and indirect benefits of a catalogue.

There are few houses which could not profitably publish a catalogue—an ever-ready salesman, which will visit the remotest towns at an expense of 1 cent.

A catalogue not only creates direct orders, but it advertises your business and permanently establishes in the minds of possible customers just what lines you carry.

This is the great catalogue house—every detail of the work produced under one roof, including drawings, cuts, printing, binding.

impulses, ambition may take a right set. The vital question is in what does to outrank others? Leaving out of desire of the pugilist to excel in brute criminal to surpass in vice, there are of excellence in force among men. common measures of worth set up by us misleading. Rank on account of birth is and therefore false and misleading. Lady Vere can claim no merit for a title ac- long-dead ancestor, unless she lives up which won the rank, and we know that arrogantly lay claim to superiority live which would dishonor a semi-savage. most common standard of rank, is as as a title unworthily worn. This as the title, and moreover may patent of nobility, because it may have acquired.

a title nor wealth necessarily lifts of living and of personal character as a decent day laborer whose wealth is Many who have a title of nobility and are degenerates in body as well as in morals.

of rank is a person's own achieve- in the simple days of this republic of personal worth was the standard and it is largely so still. Washington was of the most "aristocratic blood" in the country. Benjamin Franklin was a mere mechanic, the son of a mechanic. But in the days that tried men's souls, the "landed gentleman" stood higher than the printer only in so far as his military rank and the high office to which he was chosen exalted him. It was not birth, nor wealth, which in any place or presence gave Gen. Washington precedence over his Cabinet minister and his Ambassador to foreign courts. Both men met on a plane of absolute equality, excepting in so far as the services of one to his country exalted him above the other, and that was not a great exaltation in the estimation of their countrymen.

There was blue blood in plenty in America in the days of the Rebellion, days again which tried men's souls, and there were rich men among us, too. But not one of those who boasted their "line of long descent" nor one of those whose wealth required seven digits to write could step in front of the "Rail Splitter," Abraham Lincoln, nor while history is printed and read by men will a name ever grace its pages which because of noble title or great wealth will ever gleam in brilliancy like that of the President, of great mind, great heart, great soul.

The late Carl Schurz in his reminiscences tells of the poverty in which he was born, of the lowly estate of his people, of his own hard struggle to get an education. In speaking of the time he spent in acquiring a familiar acquaintance with the Latin and Greek tongues he raises the question of their usefulness as means of fitting a man for gaining a livelihood. While he points out the superior influences of the living languages in this respect, he does not fail to bear high testimony to the uplift of taste, mental acumen and personal character gained from close study of the great masterpieces in prose and verse of the ancients. He sums it up with the conclusion that if left to his own decision in old age he would not exchange the influences of Homer and Virgil, Plato and Horace, on his taste and heart for all the power to make money inherent in the fabled power to transmute the metals or in the touch of Midas.

And is not here the standard of rank, after all, set up by Franklin, Lincoln and Schurz, and by multitudes of others—Agassiz, Gladstone, statesmen many, as well as great lawyers, doctors, men of science, teachers and authors? For while birth is a pure accident, so far as the individual goes, while wealth is often fortuitous, and sometimes dishonestly gotten, or inherited as the patent of nobility, and again while fortune plays a large part often in the life of the business man, Franklin's philosophy and knowledge were personal achievements dependent directly on his own efforts. So were the statesmanship, legal acumen, high patriotism and great-heartedness of Lincoln. Like thousands of others, Schurz's knowledge of literature cost him a world of personal struggle, self-denial, and devotion to his studies. Gladstone's learning was not inherited, nor was the science of Agassiz. These achievements all stand as personal achievements, and all the honor they confer is due to their possessors directly and entirely.

And from Moses, learned in all the erudition of the Egyptians, to Plato, Aristotle, the most learned of the Athenians, to Saul of Tarsus, whose much learning seemed to make him mad in the eyes of the worldling, to Francis Bacon, who came nearer than any modern to being a walking cyclopedia, on to Franklin, Lincoln, Huxley and Agassiz, to what other class of men does the world owe more than to the men who have made the knowledge of books and nature the objects of their ambition?

THE POINSETTIA.

When the sun warms farthest southlands
  And the dusky night stays long—
When in dark blue skies in splendor
  Winter's constellations throng;

When the air gives hints of nearness
  Of a subtle, dreaded foe,
And the winds, released from bondage,
  Promises of rainstorms blow;

Then appears the gay poinsettia
  In its velvet dress of red,
Brightening with its vivid beauty
  Many a lawn and garden bed;

Cheering with its timely presence,
  Warmth of color, grace of mien,
Reigns this flower, from the southland,
  In our hearts, a dazzling queen.

LAST BATTLE OF THE REBELLION.

The last battle of the Civil War east of the Mississippi River was fought just opposite Columbus, on the Alabama side of the Chattahoochee River, and terminated on the Georgia side, where there was some firing and one or more fatalities, a distinguished Confederate officer being killed just after he crossed the river. The city of Columbus is preparing to mark the scene of the ending of the battle with a large, rough boulder taken from the battlefield, a suitably-engraved bronze plate being attached to the stone to explain its significance.

The battle of Columbus was fought on April 16, 1865, beginning late in the afternoon and continuing until some time after nightfall. The attacking troops came from the west, being a branch of Gen. Sherman's celebrated army and under command of Gen. Wilson. The home defenders were small in number, but gallant in the resistance they offered. Breastworks were erected on the neighboring Alabama hills, and it was thus across the State line that most of the battle was waged. The result, the capture of the city, was almost inevitable.—[Columbus Correspondence Nashville Banner.

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

SAFETY OF THE MIDDLE COURSE.

"DANGER lies in extremes," is a warning note with which we are all familiar, but which on that account we do not the more readily heed. Both moral and physical excellence alike may be destroyed by excess and defect. It is well, therefore, to be neither too elated with success, nor too depressed over the reverse; not too timid or too bold, but wisely brave under any circumstances. For the whole burden of man's social, economic, moral and religious life is to find a mean from which to project his endeavors; to arrive at a safe middle course by steering clear of the rocks and reefs of dangerous extremes.

Not error and evil only are located in excess, but excessive virtue itself is evil. The transition from an excess of good into evil is thus shown by an eminent scholar in a study on the psychology of prejudice: "An excess of humility being abjectness; of courage, rashness; of prudence, cowardice; of patience, indifference; of economy, parsimony; of generosity, waste; of deference, obsequiousness." Likewise says the same author, "an excess of learning is pedantry; of ease, indolence; of comfort, self-indulgence; of zeal, fanaticism. Right and justice are found in moderation—in the golden mean, in the true balance—between overdoing and underdoing, between going too fast and too slow."

It is not too much food or too little, not an excess or lack of exercise that builds the strong and healthy body; but the just amount requisite for a given organism. And so, too, for the best interests of the moral nature is neither excess nor deficiency, but the safe, preserving, middle course. Here Aristotle thus reasons in his Nichomachean Ethics: "If you run away from everything, and are afraid of everything, and stand your ground against nothing, you become a coward, whereas if you fear nothing at all, but make for every adversary, you become foolhardy. Similarly he who takes his fill of every pleasure and abstains from none becomes intemperate, whereas he who shuns all becomes stolid, like the stupid rustic of the stage. For temperance and courage are destroyed by excess or defect, but preserved by moderation."

Hence if a boy becomes so enamored of his favorite sport as to work himself an injury by excessive enjoyment of it, we are not helping him to acquire a positive moral virtue, nor are we teaching him to exert practical moral power over himself, by simply debarring him from the athletic field, gymnasium or other place of sport. The principle involved is that of regulation, correction, ethical education, to the end of attaining the mean—moderation; whereby the enjoyment or exercise not evil in itself is by the rationalized individual used for good.

It is easier for the doting parent to gratify every whim of a spoilt darling, or for an austere teacher or sponsor to inflict excessive punishment upon an innocent-minded offender than for either calmly to consider the case before him in the light of greater experience and superior intelligence in order to discover the right middle course, which it is their duty and their province not only to find for, but with the child. They must lead him into unknown paths of self-discovery with his active coöperation. Then, and then only, is a decided moral advance made in the control of desire or appetite of the child when, having the whole within his reach, he will be content with half; having an opportunity to do wrong, he will without coercion or threat do right.

Children, fools, and "those who having eyes will not see," are most inclined to lean toward extremes, or are most prone to acts of excess or deficiency. Certainly, it is no simple thing always to strike a happy medium. Nor is it such an easy matter to be unfailing in our efforts to discriminate fairly between normal and abnormal conditions. But we must not either silently or expressly consent to tilt recklessly on the equally dangerous extremes of excess or defect, when a steadfast and solid center is available; when we have access to a safe middle course.

Hence the futility of attempting, as in various lines of reform, to correct one extreme with another; or, the waste of effort, when certain well-meaning persons would take one who is treading the paths of error and, by a single bound, set him straight in the way of virtue. There may be rare instances in which reforms or cures, mental, moral or physical, have been effected by sudden leaps, but as a general rule the process of change, to be lasting and of real value to the individual and society, must, in the nature of the case, be gradual, thus affecting the entire fabric of the man, his tastes, temperament, his moral or religious convictions and evictions; and through him modifying the structure of society, thereby making a man master of the law which, by his omissions or commissions, he has infringed; for we master the law when we learn to fulfill it, and thus obey the mandate that proceeds from ourself. It is therefore not enough to restrain a man from committing an injury to himself or to society, nor is it enough to reclaim him from a consuming condition of vice or erroneous mental and moral habits, unless at the same time that we wrest obedience from him, or exact readjustment to a new moral or social order, we also see to it that he obtain or regain possession of himself. For no work of moral redemption or social reform is complete unless it be founded on a sound and equable basis. Not until a man is able at will to say "Yes," or "No;" not until he fully realizes the dangers of extremes in thought and action which have encompassed him, is he competent to avoid excess and to find a safe foothold in the preserving middle course of moderation.

BERTHA HIRSCH BARUCH.

In Mombasa. By Frank G. Carpenter.

QUEER CAPITAL.

BRITISH EAST AFRICA AND ITS CURIOUS INHABITANTS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MOMBASA.—I have left the rocky desert of Arabia and am now on the Island of Mombasa, half-way down the coast of East Africa, and just below the equator, where old Mother Earth is widest and thickest. If I should stick a pin in the old lady's waist and go westward in a straight line I would soon reach the upper end of Lake Tanganyika, and a little later would come out on the Atlantic just above the mouth of the Congo. Crossing that great ocean, my next landing place would be South America, at the mouth of the Amazon, and, going up the Amazon Valley, I should pass Quito, in Ecuador, on my way to the Pacific. From there on, the trip to the pin stuck in at Mombasa would comprise sixteen or more thousand miles of water travel. I should cross the Pacific and Indian Oceans, and the only solid ground on the way would be the islands of New Guinea, Borneo and Sumatra.

East African Steamship Rates.

This place is far below the latitude of the Philippines, and is just about a day by ship north of Zanzibar. It is thirty days from New York, and yet it may be reached easily and cheaply. The through fare from the United States on the best steamers would not be over $300, and there are boats from London that make the trip in twenty-one days, at a cost of $250. The German East African line, which has vessels going around the whole continent of Africa, has a rate of $200 from Hamburg to Mombasa, and the Austrian Lloyd has a service from Trieste which costs just $25 less. In addition there are French boats that call here on their way from Marseilles to Madagascar, and there are occasional steamers from Aden and the Suez Canal which are still cheaper.

My trip here was made on the German East African line, and the accommodations were fairly good. Our decks were covered with canvas; we had electrical fans in the cabins and other arrangements for modifying the heat of tropical travel. I bought my ticket to Mombasa, but afterward arranged with the captain, by the payment of a few dollars more, to make it read to Beira, in Portuguese East Africa, which is about two weeks south of here. This allows me to stop off at the ports and saves more than $50 in the passage money. The buying of through tickets with stop-over is the best way to travel along this coast. The German East African line has boats every two or three weeks, and I shall not be delayed by the transaction.

The Horn of East Africa.

Have you ever heard of the great Horn of Africa? It is the easternmost point of the continent and it ends in Cape Guardaful. It begins at the Strait of Bab-el-Mandeb and runs for seven or eight hundred miles out into the Indian Ocean. It was along the Horn that I traveled in coming here. Leaving Aden we first skirted British Somaliland, a thinly-populated desert country as big as Georgia, and then sailed for hundreds of miles along other deserts belonging to Italy. The Italian possessions begin some distance before one reaches Cape Guardaful. We went quite close to the cape and rounded it, starting south. It is a mighty bluff rising almost straight up from the blue waters of the Indian Ocean. Its sides are of black rock, ragged and rugged, and its top is covered with sand. There is sand at its foot, and the sand has lodged in the crevices, making yellow streaks against the black background. Beyond the cape extend sandy hills, which roll over one another until they are lost in the distance. The country all about is desert, and neither trees, bushes, habitations nor animals are to be seen. The clouds hang low over the cape, and out at sea the air is as moist as that of Virginia in April. Going a little farther on, we rounded the horn, and looked back. The great bluff had now assumed the outlines of a sleeping lion, with its tail in the sand. Later still the lion's head was lost, and there was only a great rock rising like a fortification the sea.

Sailing southward we steamed along a dry and desert coast, before River, where the British possessions maliland is about as big as Montana strip of desert as wide as from New York as long as from Philadelphia to Chicago is made up of nomadic Somalis and black people, who live largely in tents flocks about from place to place as I can learn the country is practically this is also true of Eritrea, on the Red other possession on the continent Abyssinia, but her soldiers were defeated and I am told she has now her eye lies just over the way from Sicily.

The Island of Mombasa.

I find Mombasa refreshing after desert. So far the most of my way tinent has been in the sands, with now and then. I was close to the and I traveled many hundreds of down from Lake Victoria and other parts of Central Africa on the heads of slaves, selling both slaves and ivory here at Mombasa. This business has all been done away with, and the ivory now comes in on the railway.

As to the East Indians, they are mostly retail merchants and traders. There are Parsees, with tall hats, Hindus in white sheets, and other East Indians who wear little round gold caps, gay vests and calico trousers. Indian women are to be seen everywhere, and some of them, the wives of Mohammedans, go about clad in yellow from head to foot. I saw two women on my way across the island who were apparently moving without seeing at all. Their yellow dresses were fitted over padded skull caps, covering the head and face and falling clear to the ground. I could not see how the women could make their way along without stumbling until I observed a little veil about the size of two postage stamps sewed over a hole in front of the eyes. These women never go on the street except when so clad, and they are the strictest of the Mohammedans.

The African Village.

The most of the population of Mombasa is African. There are people here from all parts of the interior, some of them as black as jet, with a scattering few who are chocolate brown or yellow. These natives live in huts off by themselves, adjoining the European and Asiatic quarters, and comprise a large village. Their houses are of mud plastered upon a framework of poles and thatched with straw. The poles are put together without nails. There is not a piece of iron in any of them, except on the roof, where here and there a hole has been patched up with a rusty Standard Oil can. Very few of the huts are more than eight feet high, and some are so low that one has to stoop to enter them. They are so small that the beds are usually left outside the house during the daytime, and the majority of each family sleep on the floor.

Among the Swahilis.

I find this African village the most interesting part of Mombasa. Its inhabitants number 20,000 or more, and they comprise natives of perhaps 100 tribes, each of which has its own dress and its own customs. The most of the women are bare-headed, bare-shouldered and to a large extent bare-legged; and some of the men are clad in little more than breech cloths. Now and then one sees a girl bare to the waist, and the little ones wear only jewelry. On the mainland all go more or less naked.

The most numerous of the natives here are the Swahilis. These are of a mixed breed which is found all along the central coast of East Africa. It is said to have some Arab blood in it, and for this reason perhaps its people are brighter and more business-like than the ordinary native. The Swahilis are found everywhere. They have little settlements in the interior in the midst of other tribes and the Swahili language will carry one through the greater part of Central and East Africa. The British officials are required to learn it; and one can buy Swahili dictionaries and phrase books. I shall take a Swahili guide with me during most of my journey, or rather a black Swahili boy, who will act as servant and also as guide.

I wish I could show you a picture of the Swahili women as I see them here. Their skins are of a rich chocolate brown and they shine as though oiled. They have woolly hair, but they comb it in a most extraordinary way, using a razor to shave out partings between the rows of plaited locks, so that when the hair is properly dressed the woman seems to have on a hood of black wool. I took a snapshot of two girls who were undergoing the process of hairdressing yesterday, trembling the while for fear that their calico gowns, which were fastened by a single twist under the armpits, might slip.

A little farther on, Jack made a photograph of another giddy maiden clad in two strips of bright-colored calico and numerous earrings, while I gave her a few coppers to pose for the picture.

At the same time on the opposite side of the street stood a black girl gorgeous with jewelry. She had a brass ring as big around as the bottom of a dinner bucket in her nose; and her ears had holes in their lobes so big that a hen's egg could be put through them without trouble. Not only the lobes, but the rims also were punctured, each ear having five little holes around the edges of about the size of my little finger. These holes were filled with rolls of bright-colored paper cut off so smoothly that they seemed almost a part of the ear. The paper was of red, green and blue, and it looked very quaint. As I started on, the girl looked at me out of the tail of her eye and smiled.

THE CHEWERS.

"Tobacco ain't the only thing chewed," said the cigar store man. "I wisht is was. But I'm writin' up a story about chewers for the Sunday paper.

"In the Far East they chew the betel. They wrap the nut in a bit of leaf and, for seasonin', they add a little lime. It's a tart-tastin' chew, not bad, and it has, like tobacco, a soothin' effect.

"Coffee experts and dealers chew coffee beans, and tea dealers chews tea. Very exhilaratin'', both chews, but ruinous to the nerves and digestion.

"Jockeys and trainers chews oats, hay, straw—anything horsey. Horse feed makes a cheap and harmless chew.

"In the spice trade the hands often git the habit of chewin' ginger, or cinnamon, or a clove; but spices is bad for the teeth.

"Seamstresses chew bits of thread, and athletes chew gum."

THE REASON WHY.

"Say, pop," said the tourist's little boy in London, "why does that there soldier wear an eyeglass only on one eye?"

"So's he kin use t'other one to see with," Mr. Scrapple answered.

NETHER SIDE OF COURT.

RUSSIAN SAYS THE IMPERIAL KITCHENS NEED A PURE FOOD LAW.

[New York Sun:] A writer who signs himself S. R. G. has contributed to the Revue of Paris some revelations of the nether side of court life in Russia. The Revue says that the writer is a Russian prince and belongs to the suite of the Czar.

He begins with a reference to the Czar's attack of typhus fever in 1900 and the wonder expressed throughout Europe that a potentate whose life was so carefully guarded should have contracted the infection. There would have been no wonder, he says, if the secrets of the imperial kitchens were known.

These are managed with inexpressible disorder and are unsanitary beyond belief. Their unhygienic condition is only equaled by their dishonesty and extravagance.

The alleged prince writes that Gen. Tyrto, brother of a former Minister of Marine, called in his doctor one day. He was fearfully ill.

"Where have you been dining?" asked the doctor.

"I had luncheon with the Czar yesterday, and I came right home and went to bed, I was so ill," was the answer.

The doctor treated him for ptomaine poisoning and pulled him through.

The Czar's table is financed on a scale of enormous extravagance. Each dish provided is put down at ten roubles, or about $5, and each single article of food counts as a dish, though it may be only a few olives or a bunch of celery. At great state dinners the figuring is still higher.

For instance, if there are 500 covers set and lobster patties are on the menu, the account put in will be for 500 lobsters at four roubles apiece, though one lobster easily suffices for four or five guests. Or if ducks from Rouen are provided, 500 ducks are paid for at five roubles apiece, though each duck affords four portions.

Withal the lobsters are apt to be of doubtful freshness and the ducks do not come from Rouen. The champagne which is served on these great occasions, except perhaps at the imperial table, is sure to masquerade as the choicest brand in the imperial cellars, but the real quality is worse than suspicious.

There is a man in St. Petersburg who is famous for his dinners and his wine. As he is not wealthy his friends wonder how he does it. One day the writer solved the mystery.

He was sitting in a café with the dinner giver when a servant in court livery popped his head in at a rear door and beckoned. The prince thought the signal was for him, but the dinner giver put in with a dry laugh:

"Never mind. That's my purveyor-general. He has something for me. We'll have good wine to drink His Majesty's health in tonight."

They went out into a rear corridor, where they found the servant had a big basket. It contained twenty bottles of the finest wines, which the dinner giver paid for at from 50 kopecks to a rouble a bottle and then sent them to his house by a public porter.

It was far from a unique case. A regular traffic in choice delicacies, including fruit, poultry and confectionery, is constantly going on between the Czar's pantry and the back doors of epicures of the capital, some of whom are well able to pay for their supplies at market prices, but who have the ingrained Russian love of graft.

The tableware is also taken out of the palace and sold by kitchen servants and waiters. In the reign of Alexander III his artist friend Bogoluboff, prowling about in search of curios, came on a beautiful Sèvres plate, emblazoned with the imperial arms and monogram, in a junk shop. He bought it for a trifle and then the dealer said:

"If you care for rubbish of that sort, I can get you lots of it."

"Do, by all means," said Bogoluboff.

In a few weeks he had accumulated several dozen specimens of fine china and glassware, all stolen from Tsarkoe-Selo. One day he asked the Czar to come and see his newest curios.

The Czar was enraged when the matter was explained to him. There was considerable clearing out of servants, and the police grabbed the old junk dealer. Then Alexander devised a plan to prevent further looting.

He ordered that a catalogue of every article in the palace be prepared so that the imperial property could be checked up at intervals. In Russia there is always a way to carry out a reform in appearance and beat it in effect. The palace officials selected a nice learned old man to make the catalogue, an author named Gregorowitz. He is dead and the Czar is dead and Bogoluboff is dead, but the catalogue is still unfinished.

One day the writer saw a painting with the imperial stamp of the Hermitage Museum on it for sale for five roubles in a second-hand furniture store. He made some discreet inquiries, and the guardians of the museum told him that it was very hard to keep the pictures. Grand dukes and court officials and ministers had a habit of borrowing pictures for the decoration of their houses for special occasions, and they very seldom came back.

HE WAS SATISFIED.

When he came home to dinner he brought her a box of candy as a peace offering.

"John, dear," said his wife, "I am so sorry that I lost my temper this morning."

"Well, I'm not," responded her husband, "that is, provided you never find it again."—[Chicago News.

On the Isle of Wight.

A VISIT WITH PROF. JOHN MILNE, THE GREAT SEISMOLOGIST.

By a Special Contributor.

YOU can leave London soon after breakfast in the morning and reach Cowes, on the Isle of Wight, in time for afternoon tea. But be certain that your luggage is put in the compartment going to the wharf at Southampton, in place of the one simply bound for Southampton city, if you would not call down the wrath of the conductor on your innocent head. A single question asked by one of our Pasadena party of five not only stopped the train in the suburbs of Southampton, but entangled us in what seemed for the moment a riotous discussion. "Need we transfer our baggage at Southampton?" was the simple query, of a conductor who for the tenth time was punching our ticket. "Where is it?" he asked in a tone of irony that boded ill. One of us put a head through the glass door of our carriage and indicated the car. The reason we knew it so well was because we had spent a mortal hour before it at the station in London, having mistaken the hour of the departing train, and fearful of the miscarriage of our baggage. "It's the wrong one," he snarled, and at once signalled the train to stop with a promptness that would have done him credit if he had suddenly discovered a burning bridge. Thereupon the trunks were transferred as quickly as possible by two baggagemen, and then the three—the baggagemen and the conductor—came to our compartment and berated us while the train still waited. We defended ourselves on the ground of ignorance, but to no avail. "You should have known better," was the declaration from the three, as if we were five members of a newly-organized kindergarten.

Meanwhile the train proceeded, stopping in Southampton long enough to allow us to purchase the ubiquitous post cards.

The boat that carried us across to Cowes in an hour's time was a comfortable affair, much smaller than those that ply between San Pedro and Catalina, and the bay at Cowes as we approached was very much like that at Catalina, and the amphitheater-like situation of the village reminded us of our own Avalon, though the population of the former is many thousands more than the latter; and Cowes is a veritable antique, the houses being moss-covered and ivy-clad. There are many surprises abroad, and Cowes is certainly one of them!

When it is remembered that the royal regatta takes place here each year, during which time the King of England occupies his residence; that Princess Henry of Battenberg, mother of the Queen of Spain, and honorary governor of the island, resides in Cowes the year round, and that royalty from all parts of the world gather at this famous resort during the summer season, to say nothing of the rich Americans who come annually, its plain country airs and simple unpretending manners are something to marvel at. And speaking of the Americans: On returning from Ventnor one afternoon we heard the royal salute—the firing of twelve cannon in front of the King's palace, and thinking to see the arrival of the King, we hastened from the station, but to behold the Stars and Stripes floating from a magnificent yacht entering the bay. This was excitement indeed! No doubt Mr. Roosevelt had run over on a little cruise we thought, but greater still was our amazement to see the swan-like yacht sail up to the King's landing, where our landlady had repeatedly assured us none but royalty was allowed to land, and to be informed that the faultlessly-attired gentlemen just stepping ashore and later walking along the King's highway, was Mr. Armour of Chicago. All this is but an illustration of the fact that the world moves, and that Americans have ingratiated themselves into every corner of the world.

It turned out that Mr. Armour, who had been at Cowes during several yachting seasons, had become very popular, sufficiently so to receive a bon voyage as described.

Our landlady, who had entertained royalty before Mr. Armour was born, she said, brought forth, to impress us, her guest-book from some sacred corner of her habitation—I think it must have been the big tin box where she kept the spiced tea cake, as it had the same odor. And then she spent the better part of a perfect afternoon when we would liked to have been out on the bay, telling us stories of His Lordship This or Her Ladyship That. Her house had been particularly honored by the Germans, and if she had not spoken the names of each as she turned the pages we would have been left in ignorance as to their identity, as the well-ing for the most part walking over the plate makes a record.

Prof. Milne told us that for some time he was completely mystified by records made when he was certain no earthquakes had occurred. "One day," he said, "I discovered the cause. It was a tiny gnat, walking over the plate, and since then I keep it covered with a screen of infinitesimal mesh."

Prof. Milne has recorded over 1200 earthquakes in nine years.

"At one time," he explained, "I had a bell in my room fixed to a cord, the other end of which was attached to the seismograph, but the bell rang so frequently and caused us so much annoyance we were obliged to have it disconnected.

"Likewise," he continued, "I do not record tremors that occur at home, as I once did. If there should be an earthquake today on the Isle of Wight my instruments here at Shide would make no record of it. As it used to be every milk cart passing along the road was recorded."

We asked Prof. Milne what had first prompted his interest in the, comparatively speaking, new science of seismology. "It was in Japan," he answered, "years ago, that the frequent occurrence of earthquakes attracted my attention, and I became interested, not only as to their cause, but as to the methods of measuring their extent, and I straightway began experimenting. Of course, it is my life now."

Prof. Milne is an extensive traveler, having gone the world over, not once, but many times. He goes to study conditions where earthquakes are liable to occur and to look after the seismographs under his supervision.

His recreation is superintending his beautiful estate at Shide. In fact Shide appears to be simply an adjunct to his estate.

Prof. Milne impresses one as a cosmopolitan. He flies the English and Japanese flags from his housetop, and personally he appears more like a successful American banker than a noted English scientist. He is of medium height, rather inclined to stoutness, with light hair and mustache and frank blue eyes. His manner is simple, almost boyish, and his quick movements indicate the nervous temperament. As to his age, it would keep one guessing—anywhere from 40 to 50. His keen interest in the world at large, his broad outlook and kind sympathies will ever keep him young.

After we made our adieus and had waited at the station some ten minutes for the train, Prof. Milne appeared around the corner unexpectedly, and quite out of breath. He came to apologize because he and his wife had forgotten to serve us tea—two Americans whom he had never seen before. "I was so interested in showing you about," he said, "I entirely forgot it." This extreme courtesy to perfect strangers suggests the character of the Wizard of Shide. UNA NIXON HOPKINS.

FAMOUS "RUSSIAN BALL."

A NOTABLE INCIDENT IN THE HISTORY OF CALIFORNIA DURING THE CIVIL WAR.

By a Special Contributor.

The meaning of the term "clearinghouse," which has so often appeared in our journals of late, may not, perhaps, be familiar to all people outside of banking and commercial circles. An incident which occurred during our Civil War may give a clear, though homely, idea of what a "clearinghouse" is; while the recital of the stirring events of those days which called it forth, and which are now a part of our national history, may be interesting and instructive to the younger generation of Americans.

The occasion was in 1864, when the citizens of San Francisco gave the famous "Russian ball" to the officers of the Russian fleet of warships in San Francisco's harbor, which had been sent to the Federal government by the Emperor of Russia to the assistance of the Northern States in that war.

That ball was the most brilliant affair of its kind that has ever taken place in California. It was attended by the Governor and all the State and municipal officers, the members of the Supreme and Superior Courts, all the foreign consuls, and the officers of the army and navy within reach of San Francisco, besides many of the old and wealthy Spanish families from Southern California, all handsomely dressed and resplendent in diamond ornaments. The large hall was splendidly decorated with Russian and American flags entwined. The flags of the foreign consuls and lines of cages of singing canary birds were hung around the gallery. A military band and a string band supplied the music. On the stage of the hall were stacks of arms and accoutrements of war, while the rich dresses of the ladies and the uniforms of the officers of the navy and army, together with the grand official regalia of the foreign consuls, made it a scene of splendor, and a wonder and delight to the Russian sailors.

After the supper, which was served in keeping with the rest of the ball, the Russian officers, the consuls and many of the guests of honor retired, but "the dance went on." Soon afterward, it was seen that the waiters in the hatroom had become confused in their deliveries and gentlemen, finding their hat checks useless, were obliged to go inside and search for themselves, which resulted in soon covering the floor with articles of clothing from which each man took that which fitted him best and went home.

The following day a notice appeared in the newspapers, inviting all persons who had lost their overcoats or hats and had taken others instead, to return them to a place designated in the notice and receive their own. The result of this move was a success, for every man who had lost his own and had brought the article he had taken, recovered that which belonged to him, the writer being one of them. This, then, was California's first "clearinghouse"—though not a financial one—in so far as the basic principle of the bankers' "clearinghouse" is concerned.

The Russian warships came to San Francisco at a period that seemed dark and almost hopeless to the people of the Northern States. The long struggle at such tremendous cost of blood and treasure was disheartening, and to this was added the fear of European interference, for it was known that England and France sympathized with the Confederacy, and only awaited an opportunity to give it recognition and material aid to continue the struggle for secession; and also, that the Confederacy had appointed ambassadors to represent it at the courts of England and France. So, when Mason and Slidell sailed for their posts on a British ship for England, Commodore Wilkes, in command of a United States warship, gave chase, overhauled the Britisher and demanded the surrender of Mason and Slidell, as prisoners of war. This bold act, unless properly explained and atoned for, meant war with England. It was a critical time for the Federal government. England demanded an explanation. Our government showed to her satisfaction that the capture of the Confederate ministers was unauthorized by it, Commodore Wilkes having acted upon his own authority, and due reparation was made to the English government, which closed the incident.

Then Louis Napoleon of France, in conjunction with Austria, attempted to overthrow the Republic of Mexico, by the establishment of a monarchy there under the pretense of a call of the Mexican people. He sent an army under Marshal Bazaine to escort Prince Maximillian of Austria, and had him proclaimed "Emperor of Mexico." This scheme, however, eventually failed, for, at the close of the war, General Grant sent an army of 50,000 veterans down to the Rio Grande and demanded the withdrawal of the French troops. The French army was withdrawn from Mexican soil and Maximillian was urged to return with it, but he would not. The Mexican government arrested him, tried, and condemned him to be shot.

It was events like these that prompted our government to secretly seek the help of Russia, who had always been a firm friend of the United States. She responded by sending her ships to New York and San Francisco, armed and manned for active service if required by us. This action of the Russian government was a notice to the other powers of Europe that we had a strong friend in her, and it was a warning to all to "keep hands off" while we were engaged in that awful death struggle for the intergrity of our beloved Union.

The American people have never forgotten, nor will they ever forget the act of real friendship backed up by the guns and gallant sailors in the time of our greatest need as a nation!

UNPRECEDENTED.

Pierre Carter, a Parisian jeweler of the beautiful and gay Rue de la Paix, said the other night in Washington that American women wore jewels with better taste than any other women in the world.

"Can they be deceived on jewels?" a girl reporter asked. "Will counterfeit gems delude American women?"

"My dear young lady," said M. Cartier, "an expert, given the right conditions, can be deluded. Who, indeed, cannot be deluded—deluded in the matter of jewels, of furs, of anything?

"Here is a case in point—the deluding of a very sharp, smart, quick lawyer.

"'Mr. Barr,' a gentleman said to this lawyer at a dinner, 'I would like your opinion on a knotty point of law. An uncle of mine has a peacock, and last fall it got into a neighbor's garden and laid an egg there. The neighbor claimed the egg, my uncle claimed it as well, and the two have been fighting and squabbling over the matter ever since. Now, sir, what is the law on the question?'

"'It is an easy question to settle,' said the lawyer, with a patronizing smile. 'Admitting that the egg was laid on the neighbor's ground, the neighbor nevertheless has no claim to it unless he can prove that the owner of the bird took no steps to prevent it from straying. In a precedent case——'

"'Excuse me,' said the other man, 'but this case has no precedent.'

"'Well,' said the lawyer, 'you know more law than I, do you? I remember distinctly a precedent case where——'

"'No you don't,' said the other.

"'What do you mean?' exclaimed the lawyer angrily.

"'I mean,' was the firm reply, 'that you never heard before of a peacock laying an egg.'"

ANCIENT DENTISTRY.

A German doctor has established the fact that the Etruscans were accomplished dentists, and that our dentists of today know nothing that the old Etruscan "tooth doctors" of 2300 years ago did not—merely the details of workmanship showing any improvement. He has examined numerous Etruscan skulls, and found in some teeth which had been filled with wonderful skill. Four are covered with gold capsules, two covering natural teeth, while the other two were artificial grinders, a real piece of bridge work. Galli remarks: "The Etruscans were not backward about showing their teeth encased in gold, after the plan of English and American dentists. The Etruscans were also acquainted with our modern fillings, as one of the specimens which I examined clearly proves."—[P. T. O.

WHERE POLITENESS DOESN'T PAY.

"French and German hats," said a hatter, "last only half as long as ours. It isn't the poor quality of the hats, but the fine quality of the manners, that causes this."

"Lifting the hat in salutation is the hardest work that falls on the headpiece, and the French and Germans lift it to men and women equally, thus giving it twice as much labor as we do. Naturally, then, it wears out twice as quickly. It goes in the brim in no time over the water."

Custer's Last Battle.

CHIEF TWO MOONS' STORY OF THE AWFUL FIGHT.

By a Special Contributor.

THE first time I saw Chief Two Moons he was pointed out to me in a dance tent, while the Crow Indian fair was at its height last fall, at Crow Agency, Montana. Ragged and unkempt, and showing the poverty that is breaking the heart of his great tribe, Two Moons sat unmoved while the tom-toms were sounding and the Crows and Sioux were mingling in the "Owl Dance." Around him were grouped a few Cheyenne braves, veterans of many a hard battle with white soldiers. All were ragged and poverty-stricken in appearance, like their leader, but, proud and reserved, they sat apart from the festivities. Like most of the Cheyennes, the retainers of Two Moons were small of stature, their chieftain towering above them like a giant, yet our soldiers unite in declaring that these little Indians are like the Japanese—veritable demons in playing the fighting game, and the bravest of all the plains tribes.

Next morning I called on Two Moons, finding him in a ragged tent in the part of the camp ground preëmpted by the Cheyennes, 1000 of whom had trekked over from the Northern Cheyenne Reservation to partake of the hospitality of the Crows. Entering the tent, I found the chieftain surrounded by the same retainers who had grouped themselves about him the night before. A handshake all around, a few pulls at the long pipe that was being circulated, and under the magic of the sweet-smelling Kinnikinnick, which the Indians still smoke in lieu of tobacco, Two Moons' heart was opened and his tongue was loosened.

Two Moons, telling his experiences in Custer battle.

White [illegible]

In answer to a question, he gave me the briefest and most significant story of the Custer fight.

Briefly Summed Up.

"Big fight," said Two Moons, who talks little English, and who is under a heavy handicap in the absence of an interpreter. "Lots of Indians. Get around soldiers, so. Pretty soon, all gone—so."

To illustrate his description he had formed a circle with his hands, and then he passed one hand over the other to demonstrate how rapidly the fatal circle about Custer was closed.

A little later, with the interpreter present, the great chieftain of the fighting Cheyennes stood on the brow of Custer Hill, the central point in one of the most awe-inspiring panoramas in the West. Two Moons is nearly blind, but when directions and locations had been pointed out to him, he was living over again a scene that must be indelibly impressed on his memory. Every detail of the battlefield seems to be stamped on his mind as freshly as on that fatal June day in 1876 when the allied tribes slaughtered every one of the men under Custer. Standing on the brow of the hill, where the white headstones stretch toward the Little Big Horn from the great granite monument, Two Moons told of the Custer battle from the standpoint of one of the principal actors. In effect his story was as follows:

Unexpectedly Discovered.

"We Cheyennes were down there," pointing to the south, and thereby indicating that the Cheyenne braves must have occupied the lower part of the big camp which Custer intended to strike from the north while Reno attacked from the south. "We were not looking for the white soldiers up here. They got between us and our horses before we saw them, and our squaws' yelling told us what had happened. We jumped on any horses we could get and attacked. The Sioux were attacking from the north. One bunch of soldiers had black horses, another had gray horses, and one had red (sorrel) horses. The black-horse men dismounted down there" (pointing along the ridge toward the place where Keogh and his men made their last stand.) "We killed lots of them, and pretty soon they were all gone. The gray-horse men fell back along the ridge." (Evidently this was the group with Custer, who fell near the end of the ridge.) "Pretty soon they were all gone, too. The red-horse men were the last to be killed. They had dismounted on the other side of the ridge" (pointing where the ridge slopes to the north from the monument.) "Some of them tried to get away by running toward the river, but we killed them all. One got far off, but we got him, too." (This would explain the finding of bodies far down the slope toward the position of the camp in the Little Big Horn bottoms. Some military experts have maintained that these were skirmishers, thrown out ahead of the main body of Custer's men.)

An Expressive Spectacle.

As he stood on the brow of the ridge, with the Custer monument behind him, and surrounded by the white headstones and the big cross that denotes where the white chief and his bodyguard fell, Two Moons made an impressive spectacle. His face was lighted with the enthusiasm of battle, and he did not seem like the same silent, reserved Indian who sat like a bronze statue in the dance tent of the Crows.

It is estimated that there were 1000 lodges in the Indian camp along the bottoms of the Little Big Horn River. This means that there were from 4000 to 6000 Indians, probably half of whom were able-bodied fighting men—the best in the history of Indian warfare. The Indians consisted of Sioux and Cheyennes, under such leaders as Gall, Crazy Horse, Rain-in-the-Face and Two Moons. Crazy Horse and his Sioux were with the Cheyennes. Every brave in this great camp was a veteran, as all the faint hearts in both tribes had been left on the reservation, content to draw their rations and abide by the peace treaty. The allied fighters represented the determined spirits among the plains tribes—men who preferred the hardships and dangers of the warpath to a life of ease under the white man's dominion.

Gen. Custer had divided his regiment into three detachments, two of them, under Reno and Benteen, to attack from the south and west, while Custer, with Troops C, E, F, I and L, swept around to the east and north and surprised the Indians at the rear of the camp.

Reno Saved by Benteen.

Reno's desperate plight is well known. He found himself confronted by a large and determined body of savage fighters, and was beaten back to the bluffs, where he remained, not daring to change his position for fear of annihilation. Only the fact that he was joined by Benteen saved him from Custer's fate. Reno heard the firing that denoted Custer's engagement, and has been criticised for not going to the aid of his commander. But a person who looks over the Custer battlefield and hears from the Indians how advantageously the red men were situated and how eager they were for battle, cannot see where any censure of Reno is justified in this particular. His men would have been wiped out had they tried a march over the barren hills to Custer's aid, as the plains were fairly alive with hostile Indians seeking more of the divided white forces to slay.

From Two Moons' account of the battle, it is evident that the Cheyennes, and the Sioux under Crazy Horse, must have engaged Keogh (the troop with the black horses) at the opening of the battle. Then the rest of the troops, scattered along the ridge as the chieftain described, met their fate. Keogh and his men were found as they had fallen. There is a little cluster of white headstones about the cross that shows where Keogh fell. From this cluster, toward the monument on top of the ridge, extends a long, straight line of headstones. This shows that Keogh's men fell while in line of battle.

Keogh's Glorious Death.

Miles Keogh, who opposed Two Moons in this grim tragedy of the plains, was the oldest soldier in the Seventh. He had been an officer in the Papal Zouaves in early life and had a fine record in the Civil War. Discipline was his hobby, and he and his troop must have died gloriously. Keogh's horse, Comanche, was found several days after the battle, badly wounded. The animal's life was saved, and he was the pet of the Seventh Regiment for many years.

Since the day of the fight, Two Moons has not revisited the scene of Custer's last stand, until the day he told his story to the writer of this article. The old chief lives with the remnant of his tribe on a barren reservation in Montana. Their land is too poor to farm successfully, yet, under the Reading for the Blind.

PATHETIC FEATURE OF LIFE AT THE SOLDIERS' HOME.

By a Special Contributor.

[illegible] of the most pathetic features to be found in the National Home for aged veterans, near Santa Monica, is the daily reading to the blind. This [illegible] provision insures the men at least an hour [illegible] half each day in which to acquire knowledge of [illegible] world's affairs—that great, progressive world in [illegible] activities they can never participate again. And [illegible] and gratefully they look forward to the hour. [illegible] up on crutches and wooden legs, rolling in [illegible] chairs, trembling with palsy, or enfeebled and [illegible] with asthma; painfully groping their way along [illegible], or perhaps led through the hospital ward by [illegible] blind comrade, the blind veterans assemble in a [illegible] room where an attendant awaits them with [illegible] papers.

[illegible] are all there, ranged round the semi-circular [illegible] in big chairs, on tables or settees, in ev[illegible] lounging position, each face alert with a pa[illegible] longing and expectancy, which fortunately none [illegible] reader can see. Changing expressions come and [illegible] their features with varying subjects of the read[illegible] their eyes are ever blank, like eyes of sculptured [illegible] shutting in their thoughts and emotions as com[illegible] the scenes about them are shut out. Just out-[illegible] windows butterflies hover over beds of bright [illegible] trees and lawn birds bask in warm sunshine, [illegible] caroling and the floral perfume, only, [illegible] to the sightless group within.

WARD FOR THE BLIND AT SOLDIER'S HOME.

[illegible] sits near a window. As he shouts out [illegible] his lips near the ears of the deafer ones [illegible] about him, each man gives close attention, [illegible] this is their mental mealtime, and each must [illegible] food to last him until "taps," which, in[illegible] o'clock as for the rest of the post, in the hos[illegible] early lamplight.

[illegible] daily papers are read, occasionally some ex[illegible] good magazine article. Affliction has not [illegible] their patriotic ardor; consequently relations of [illegible] events of "the boys," equally of young or older [illegible] most interesting to them.

[illegible] of the reading lively discussions and [illegible] begin, notwithstanding they are against hos[illegible], and continue, without reference to the [illegible] Locke or Watts, all through the day whenever [illegible] encounter one another.

[illegible] not be inferred that these stricken men are [illegible] morose or unhappy. On the contrary, their [illegible] and contentment cause many a compara[illegible] healthy soldier to blush in contrast with his com[illegible] of his own inconsequent affliction. Strangely [illegible] nurses declare they are the cleanliest and give [illegible] of any patients in the hospital.

Lambert's career as a soldier was [illegible], his term having been one of the longest [illegible] war. He volunteered at the call to arms among [illegible], enlisting in Company B, Fifty-sixth New [illegible] Infantry, on August 11, 1861, and through re[illegible] served until October 16, 1865, thus making [illegible] Veteran Volunteer. During that time he fought [illegible] of the bloodiest battles of the war, among them [illegible] campaign, under McClellan, and the siege [illegible] Charlestown, led by those great generals, Gil[illegible] and Hunter.

[illegible] years ago sight was taken completely [illegible] in one brief moment by a premature explo[illegible] managing a street-blasting crew for a friend. [illegible] recovery, Lambert determined to be as indepen[illegible] possible for the blind. Taking up the work [illegible], he has followed it for the greater part of the time ever since. He became so familiar with the city of St. Louis that he was enabled to act as guide to other blind persons, at one time even conducting two of them clear into East St. Louis, across the river, and back. Coming to Los Angeles years later, he continued the same work until 1889, when he entered the Pacific branch of the National Home, where he still stays, enjoying its manifold comforts and pleasures.

THE HOTEL CLERK MAKES PERTINENT REMARKS CONCERNING IT.

By a Special Contributor.

"THERE'LL soon be another baritone in the resident chair of the Federal penitentiary," said the Hotel Clerk. "The paper says they're bringing back the latest bank defaulter to stand trial."

"They ketched him down in Mexico, didn't they?" asked the House Detective of the Hotel St. Reckless, with a touch of professional interest.

"Yes, and I guess it wasn't a job requiring the exercise of more brains than you could carry in a large tin bucket," said the Hotel Clerk. "It's very hard for a party who's been addicted to side whiskers and the lawn-tie habit for forty-odd years, to disguise himself in such a way as to deceive the casual eye. He may put on a slouch hat and the same kind of leather leggings that the villain wears at the beginning of the second act, but if you peel off the outer shucks, you'll find he's still faithful to his health underwear and his felt insoles. He's proper meat for the first correspondence-school detective that comes along wearing a brought-on mustache and a German-silver badge of office the size of a bock-beer sign, and carrying one of those $3 pistols that will put a bullet hole almost through a charlotte russe."

"This last one had blowed nearly all the swag, accordin' to what I seen about it," said the Houst Detective.

"Sure thing," said the Hotel Clerk. "They all do. It's according to the precedents. There are just two kinds of money in the world, Larry—money you get honestly, and money you get dishonestly—and one kind is very hard to get, and the other kind is very hard to keep. By judicious and praiseworthy violations of the Penal Code and the State Banking Law, a trust company accumulates a large and gratifying surplus. The cashier quietly creates a perceptible hiatus in the funds. He then passes it along to the boss copper of a downtown bucket shop, who in turn confers it on a struggling and dependent bookmaker that hasn't got anything except a few race tracks to support him, who in turn, hands it over to a low-voiced party that deals faro, who in turn, gives it to a member of a wire-tapping syndicate, who parts with it to a gentleman interested in the great indoor sport called poker, who presents it, under duress, to a rough person with a gas pipe, who pays it over to a criminal lawyer who uses it for the purpose of corrupting a juror, who puts it back into the trust company—and loses it. Swiped coin is the only circulating medium that really circulates, Larry."

"The one they just found down in Mexico had been having a lovely time ever since he fled. He was established in a semi-detached or two-family cave, living on the regular food of the natives, which consists of red pepper with a little black pepper stirred into it. Every time he heard a passing footstep, his vital organs moved up into his throat, where he could taste them, and every time any one sneezed in his vicinity, he goose-fleshed until he looked like a half portion of honeycomb tripe. He was having a perfectly lovely time, by all accounts. He couldn't have had a better time if he had been sitting in a red-hot stove.

"When the Pinkertons finally arrived, he ran to meet them with loud cries of joy. It would seem that he had been under some suspense. The first really restful moment he had was when they adorned him with that style of sleeve links which prevents a man from putting his hands into his own pockets, or anybody else's. But they only found the sum of $9.75 on him. He'd transferred the remaining $94,992.25 that he swiped, upon a number of gentlemen who'd interested him in a system for tying up Wall street into a true-lover's knot. It's truly astonishing how many of these fatal blows Wall street has endured."

"I s'pose he was a Sunday-school teacher, of course," said the House Detective.

"Yep, he ran true to form in nearly every particular," said the Hotel Clerk. "Tradition tells us that when he was a small boy he had pale young eyes, and those large, outstanding mother-of-pearl ears with opalescent shades playing in them when he stood in the sunlight. He always minded every word his dear teacher said to him, and there is no record extant that he ever mussed up his white collar or failed to have his recitation perfect of a Friday afternoon. A little later on, he rated 100 in mental arithmetic and zero in town ball. As a youth, he ever shunned the alluring rum holes of his native village, because wine is a mocker, and strong drink is raging, and it costs less, anyhow, when taken out of a bottle behind a closet door. All the mothers in town pointed him out to their daughters as a type of what a young man should be, and all the daughters promptly went and took up with the Colty boys who held down the ends in the amateur minstrels and belonged to the poker club that met upstairs over the livery stable every Saturday night. You take a lad, Larry, that's reached the age when he has a faint trace of camel's-hair paint brush on his upper lip, and walks like a pair of button-hole scissors on approaching the presence of the opposite sex—take such a lad, say, and let the report spread that he leads an absolutely blameless life, and you'll find that lad bringing his own sister to the play-parties and going sleigh riding with his aunt.

"But to resume. Our hero, having lived up to all the precedents was exactly fitted by training and environment to get a job in the bank when he left the high school. About the same time, he began to take an active interest in Sunday-school work—an interest which never languished until that bright morning last spring when he quietly and unostentatiously caught No. 4 going west at 3:45 a.m., leaving behind him a large palpitating vacancy in the available assets.

"But you don't want to be putting the black bean on the Sunday-schools just for that, Larry. It ain't the Sunday-school's fault.

"You know how it is in our own dear Wall street. Every now and then a piercing shriek of poignant anguish is emitted from that bosky dell where grows the dark-green to yellow fruitage. A void has been discovered in the cash in hand. It's the cruelest shock that can possibly befall a bank with eleven millions in assets, to learn that one of its employés has cut a gash to the extent of about $907 in the funds. A death in the president's family is nothing to it.

"So when the directors meet to hold the Lodge of Sorrow, they nearly always make the astounding discovery that the trusted clerk who is responsible for the deficiencies was a faithful member of Sunday-school.

"And, like you, Larry, they would blame it on the Sunday-school, which is very wrong. The trouble is that they will insist on hiring youths who haven't been acclimated to Broadway's fitful fevers. The temptations of a great city, or a small one, either, are not especially dangerous unless you take 'em in a lump. Wild oats easiest digested when served as breakfast food in the morn of life. It's later on that they get dangerous.

"Usually it begins like this. Domesticated Donald, the third assistant paying teller, starts for uptown some evening to take part in a debate at the Harlem Self-Help Club on the issue that intemperance has caused more suffering than war. As he crosses our Main street, he is astonished to note that many of our bright lights are still burning, with an utter disregard of cost, although it is nearly 8:45. Curiosity prompts him to stop off and investigate.

"The next time the Self-Help boys convene, a familiar form is missing from the front pew. There's a gap in the circle where Donald sits. Dear me! Can he be ailing? Not so as to be apparent to the eye. At that moment, Donald, better known as the New Boy, is seated at Sherry's gazing into the soulful, violet eyes of a winsome little keepsake from the chorus with a barber-pole complexion, and hair the color of the yolk of a four-minute egg, and he is buying for her a few of those edible knick-knacks that cost $2.15 a throw.

"About the same time, he finds a large working capital is needed. Dainty Blanche St. Claire, the coryphee pet, is ofttimes hungry. The boy financier knows the bank doesn't care anything about money, because it is willing to pay him as much as $9 a week with a promise of a raise to ten after the third year. So he draws a few clandestine dividends without mentioning the matter to any one

"Some fine afternoon, he starts up Broadway on a car and gets off in Canada. And then, Larry, they spring that Sunday-school discovery, just as they sprung it on the old guy that's now en route back from the subtropics."

"I wonder what they'll do with him?" said the House Detective.

"The jury will probably spend seven minutes convicting him and seven months petitioning the President to pardon him," said the Hotel Clerk. "That's the usual way of it."

JAPANESE SPREADING DOCTRINE OF ASIA FOR ASIATICS.

A Barber in India

An East India Dancing Girl

A Fakir or Priest

DISTURBANCES of increasing seriousness in India are gradually developing in England the fear that Britain got the worst of the alliance with Japan.

For five decades the possessions in the Far East over which King Edward rules as Emperor had been tranquil, but in the last twelve months the firebrand and fanatic have arrayed themselves against the ideal form of government which London has given the Orient.

All the material prosperity that had been gained, all the advance made have been forgotten in the wild cry of fanaticism: "Asia for Asiatics!"

Two thousand delegates to the Indian National Congress, held recently at Surat, Bombay, indulged in sentiments of such marked hostility to the British that the meeting broke up in disorder with a series of fights. The demand for home rule was so insistent that the conservatives were silenced and driven from the hall.

On all sides revolt against the British is being preached, and the seriousness of the situation actually put a damper on the recent reunion in London of those who survived the famous events of Balaklava.

Although the situation is one of great delicacy, diplomats do not hesitate to admit that the introduction of the Japanese had much to do with the trouble. The suspicion with which other foreigners in India were watched did not apply to the Japanese, for as allies of Briton they were regarded as cherishing only the kindliest feelings.

As a nation perhaps they do, but it is an undeniable fact that firebrands from the Mikado's country have turned peaceful parts of India into seething revolt. Hundreds of thousands of fanatics are arming themselves. It has been found necessary to try to deport many of the ringleaders. King Edward referred to the matter pointedly in a recent speech to Parliament, and now a commission of foremost English statesmen is investigating India to find out what measures must be taken to restore conditions that existed before the recent outbreak.

If slang were permitted in the polite parlance of diplomacy, it would appear as though the treaty between Britain and Japan saw the latter hand the former a lemon.

The British government expressly disclaims any idea that Tokio is responsible for the conditions of rebellion in India. London professes to believe that the Mikado's government is loyal to its treaty to the point of honor. But Japan, like every other nation, must deal with firebrands. They are many and virulent in Japan, and they have based their campaign on the war cry: "Asia for Asiatics."

French, German or American agitators in India would have been promptly rooted out and dealt with by the British government, but the Japanese went about their work with such craft that they were never suspected till they had sown the seed of discord.

The Japanese are intensely, madly patriotic. They have lately come successfully through two wars which have lifted them from a place of insignificance into one of prominence. The religion of the country teaches that the most fortunate fate than can come to a man is to die for his country. Then without preliminaries he is at once lifted into heaven, no matter what may have been his sins of the past.

With this for incentive, agitators, disregarding consequences, have gone boldly into Asia. They have organized a veritable bureau of agitation, with missions in India, Siam, Burmah, Persia, Indo-China, and even Thibet. Everywhere they have taught the creed that the white face is the curse of India, that every motive of patriotism, religion and profit calls upon the Asiatic to drive the European from the land.

Such a propaganda moves swiftly in this country of wild passions, and the Japanese are crafty enough to pick out the right times and places to tell their stories of the wrongs inflicted by the hated Britishers.

When the devout are prostrated before the car of Juggernaut, which ceremony now has to be attended by British magistrates to prevent the fanatical worshipers from throwing themselves under its ponderous wheels as a sacrifice to the gods, adroit, fiery-tongued speakers are ever there urging the populace to revolt. As hundreds of thousands, multitudes such as are never seen in any other part of the world, come to the Ganges at Benares to wash away their sins, the agitator is ever present to prey on their feelings at times when religious fervor has them most ready to listen. When the devout Hindoo is taking his final sacred ablution before starting his annual pilgrimage to Mecca, he must hear the passion-inspired Japanese telling the grandeur to come for Asia when the swarthy people

Old-Time Sugar Bush.

THE MAKING OF MAPLE SYRUP HALF A CENTURY AGO.

From New York Sun.

THE first run of maple sugar comes into the New York market shortly after the beginning of the new year. It runs from the melting kettles into the molds and appears on the store shelves as new maple sugar.

Some of it is good maple sugar of another season, melted and recast into new cakes, and some is a mixture of other sugars, with enough old maple sugar in it to give to it something of the maple flavor.

The best maple sugar sold in New York is produced from the sugar maple trees of northern Central New York State and New England. The sap begins to flow when the sunshine of the coming spring on the branches of the trees starts it moving.

This is usually while the snow still lies deep in the woods, when it thaws during the hours of sunshine and freezes sharply in the night. Allowing for the time required to make it and get it to market, the first new maple sugar of the season should be on sale in New York City shortly after the first of April.

The term for a wood in which there are enough sugar maple trees to make it worth while to tap them, and make sugar in quantities larger than those needed for the family, is in sugar bush. In the sugar bush are other trees besides the sugar maple—beech, birch, ash, basswood, hickory, butternut, elms of various varieties and sometimes a few hemlocks. Tracts that run largely to pine, cedar and hemlock do not produce sugar maple trees.

It is a good sugar bush of thirty or forty acres that has 200 trees fit to be tapped. A sugar bush that lies on a sidehill sloping toward the east or south can be tapped earlier in the season than one sloping in another direction, but its run of good sap will be over earlier.

Old trees yield sweeter sap than new trees. Trees in their prime will stand more tapping than young or very old trees.

Young trees and old trees are not tapped every season by owners who are careful of their sugar bushes. Such owners invariably plug up the taps after the season's run is over.

The first of the season's run of sap is the best for sugar and for syrup. The sugar cakes hard and granulates readily, and the flavor of the syrup is perfect.

Toward the last of the season's run the syrup before sugaring off has a muddy taste. Boiled down, it is not brittle but is sticky in the cake, and the syrup is stringy. Sugaring off is the final boiling-down of the thin syrup to the consistency for casting it into cakes or putting it up for use as maple syrup.

Before the days of evaporating pans, patent spiles, buckets, hangers and other contrivances, the sugar-making season was a time of unique interest to the youngsters on farms that comprised sugar bushes. That was a good while ago, for none of the newer appliances is of recent adoption.

In the old days the sugar-making season began with getting out the troughs and spiles and seeing how many of them were suitable for the season's use. The troughs were made of sections of a basswood log, each section about three and a half feet long, split in half lengthwise and each half hollowed out with an ax until it would hold about twelve quarts of sap.

The troughs were then placed hollow side down over a bed of hardwood coals until the inside was charred. This charring kept the new sap from souring in the trough or tasting of the sap of the basswood.

The spiles were made of the wood commonly known as cedar, which is a variety of juniper. The cedar blocks were cut into lengths of about one foot and split into sticks somewhat more than an inch and a quarter thick each way.

About three inches from one end the stick was sawed a little less than half way in two and the stick was split down to this saw cut from the farther end. A hole was then bored in the big end of the stick until it came out at the shoulder, and from this hole in the shoulder a little trough was cut with a pocket-knife to the other end of the stick. The big end of the stick was then whittled down until it would drive tightly into a three-quarter-inch hole, and the sap spile was ready for use.

After the farmer had looked over his stock of troughs and spiles and had made new ones in place of those that were unfit for further use, the big caldron kettles were taken from their housing and cleaned. For a sugar bush of 200 trees two such kettles would be required. They were of heavy cast iron, with ears or trunnions at the sides of the rims, and of from thirty to forty gallons capacity each.

Then a road was broken through the snow from the farmhouse to a central point in the sugar bush, where the arch was located. For this purpose a yoke of oxen hitched to a heavy sled were usually employed. A team of horses would have floundered in the deep snow until they became hopelessly cast and broke the harness or injured themselves; but Buck and Bright would wallow in the snow up to the brass acorns on the tips of their horns, would not become excited and would get to the arch all right.

The arch was a rude fireplace of such stones as could be gathered up in the woods, walling in the two big caldron kettles and leaving a fireplace in front, a flue beneath and a stubby chimney at the other end. In this the caldrons were set and everything was ready for tapping the trees.

The heavy ox sled was piled up with sap troughs and baskets of spiles, and an ax and a three-quarter-inch brace bit were taken along. The farmer knew the location of most of the 200 trees he was to tap.

Through two or three feet of snow the ox team arrived at a maple tree. The farmer took a look at the large branches and noted the location of the larger roots. Then he examined the bark for plugs and scars of previous tapping.

Having satisfied himself as to the best place to insert the tap—if possible close to the enlargement of the trunk of the tree above a big root—he chipped off the rough outer bark and bored a hole about two and one-half inches deep at a slightly upward slant and high enough above the roots to admit of placing the trough beneath the spile. As his bit came out a trickle of sap followed the shavings. The run of sap had begun. The spile was driven in and the trough was set beneath, often blocked up with sticks of deadwood.

Thus the outfit went from tree to tree until the desired number were tapped. Then arose the question of getting the sap to the boiling place.

If the snow was deep the farmer cut a small log, perhaps a foot and a half in diameter and ten or twelve feet long, hitched his oxen to it by a log chain, and starting from the arch made various paths by drawing the log through the snow, by which every tree could be reached by a man carrying two twelve-quart pails on a neck yoke.

Thus the sap was gathered in those days, the men very busy during the day saving the sap. Sometimes when the sun was warm by day and the freeze was sharp at night a tour of the trees in the evening was necessary to keep the troughs from overflowing.

When the trees began flowing so that the caldrons had to be kept boiling all night as well as all day, it was a season of delight for the youngsters. In front of the fireplace of the arch was a rude hut made by setting up two posts, putting a ridgepole across and siding and roofing it with big slabs of hemlock bark.

The end toward the fire was open, and a sledload of straw made the floor. The heat of the roaring hardwood fire in the arch kept the hut warm. A lantern or two hung on the forward post for use in gathering sap on dark nights.

A stock of torches made of the soft, curly outer bark of birch trees was at hand, and by touching one of these to a blazing log in the arch a light was made by which the condition of the sap in the steaming kettles could be examined. These torches burned with a clear yellow flame. By their light one could see whether the sap was getting low in either caldron and whether a new chunk of fat pork should be dropped in to keep the sap from boiling over.

This boiling sap in the night was hungry work for the youngsters as well as for the others. There was always a plentiful supply of bread, coffee, eggs and sliced ham in the camp. Some tin plates, a coffee pot and cups and a six-quart tin pail with a long handle of green birch commonly used for bailing sap from one kettle to the other, were the culinary outfit.

The coffee was prepared over a bed of coals raked from the arch, the ham was broiled on a forked stick over the coals, the eggs were boiled by dipping some boiling sap in the pail, putting in the eggs and holding the pail partly immersed in one of the bubbling cauldrons until the eggs were cooked, and the night repast was eaten with relish. Then the youngsters usually fell asleep on the straw with their feet toward the fire, in true Indian fashion.

After the sap had been boiled down to a dark syrup it was put in cans, usually milk cans of from five to fifteen gallons capacity, and taken on the ox sled to the farmhouse for sugaring off. This syrup was not any too clean-looking. In it were bits of twigs and of leaves from the woods, cinders from the fire, and other sediment.

It was allowed to settle and was strained. Then it was put into a big kettle hung on the fireplace crane, and while it was boiling the scum was removed with a skimmer. It could be still further clarified by filtering it through charcoal.

Of the early part of the run some was saved for choice syrup, some was further boiled down and cast into cakes that would stand a year without dripping and some was taken off and stirred while cooling until it was like a fine quality of light yellow sugar such as used to be sold under the name of coffee sugar.

In the sugaring off the younsters had their delight as well as in the night boiling in the sugar bush. What person who as a youngster ever assisted in a sugaring-off can forget the taste of maple syrup dipped from the kettle at just the right stage and trickled onto a snowball?

ONE KIND OF MORALITY.

Senator Beveridge, during a recent address in Boston, illustrated a moral idea with a story about a financier.

"Let me show you," he said, "what this financier's morality was like. An acquaintance noticed one day that he turned his head aside as a young millionaire was passing.

"'What is the matter?' the acquaintance asked. 'Don't you speak to young Currantsea any more? You used to do a lot of business with him.'

"'Indeed I don't speak to him,' the financier shouted. 'Hadn't he the audacity to say I swindled him out of $60,000?'

"'Oh, dear, no, he didn't,' the other objected. 'He only said $40,000.'

"'Well, that's different. I've been misinformed,' said the financier in a mollified tone; and turning he bowed to the young millionaire very graciously."

A TRUE EPITAPH.

Marie Lloyd, the famous English music-hall star had been describing, at a dinner in New York, an actor whose career drink had ruined.

"Yes, he," said Miss Lloyd, "was a frightful drinker. As hard a drinker, in fact, as an old ancient Yorkshire tavern-keeper on whose tomb is inscribed:

"'He has lost his best customer.'"

Theodore Tilton.

REMINISCENCES OF A ONCE FAMOUS AMERICAN ORATOR.

By a Special Contributor.

IN the Greek mythology the crab was made a constellation from having bitten Hercules on the heel. Something like this happened to Theodore Tilton from having assaulted Henry Ward Beecher, and who, damned to invidious fame, died in Paris a few months ago, a withered, broken exile, with a "great future behind him."

A little more than thirty years ago no other young American had apparently so great a future before him as Tilton, nor perhaps, at his age, had ever had, since Alexander Hamilton. In fact, no American of his generation had so glorious a present. I recall no man who so strongly illustrated Goethe's sententious saying that "when youth, beauty and genius appear the world bows down." By several inches over six feet tall, straight as a pine, a mass of golden hair waving to his shoulders, and with the face of an Apollo, he walked among men, and especially among women, like a young god.

Seeing him for the first time in the middle sixties, as an entire stranger, on one of his visits to Washington, I followed him for squares to learn of his personality, for, in addition to his splendid physical presence, here, as seemed to my still youthful judgment, was a very remarkable man, the beauty and refinement of his face betraying the poet, orator and man of letters of whom, I supposed, I had not known. Pursuing him to Willard's where he registered, the mystery was explained and my judgment was confirmed, for it was Theodore Tilton, the still youthful editor of the New York Independent, with whose name, as lecturer and writer, the country had been familiar for years. Tilton was then but 30 years of age, and had been really famous for years.

On a succeeding day, since I am here speaking of personal recollections of him, as I sat in the spacious frescoed apartment, in the office of the secretary of the United States Senate, Tilton stalked in with his commanding figure and air, as if a familiar guest. And such in fact was the case. No man was better known in Washington or more cordially welcomed by the leading officials and distinguished political personages there, since, in addition to the interest of his remarkable personality, he was accustomed, in his leaders in the Independent, with a twist of his wrist and a stroke of his brilliant pen, to make and unmake political reputations.

I was then introduced to Tilton by Col. John W. Forney, but became better acquainted with him in the following summer at the Philadelphia convention, of which I have spoken in my article on Beecher, and where I felt highly honored on seeing his glass, with those of other guests at the hotel table, tipped toward me in recognition of my reply to the great clergyman's approval of the policy of Andrew Johnson.

Still six months later a great fair and meeting was held in a monster pavilion in Washington in honor to the incoming Congress. It was the crucial winter of the Reconstruction era when the country, through its representatives, was to decide whether it would indorse or repudiate the reactionary policy of the Tennessee tailor who, by the death of Lincoln, had become President of the United States.

Tilton happening in the city, was present at the opening of the fair, and was demanded for an impromptu speech, in which, as always, he was extremely felicitous, his dashes of wit being as brilliant and striking as those of Sidney Smith or Walpole. In retort to the invidious interruptions of an audience he was more than happy. On this occasion his excoriations of Johnson were so severe that he was hissed by a portion of the audience composed of the older inhabitants of the city tenacious of their southern prejudices and in full sympathy with the Presidential policy. Pausing for a second at one of these savage bursts of disapproval, he said: "Why, you hiss the President of the United States every time I pronounce his name! I would not have believed it here in Washington, where he is known. I never hissed a man in my life, not even Andrew Johnson." He had his objectors at disadvantage, and was allowed to proceed with even bitterer castigations of the President. He was even more caustic in his attacks on Johnson in his editorials in the Independent. In reply to an editorial manifesto in a prominent Democratic journal, asserting that the "hands of the President in his policy would be upheld," he wrote at the end of a brilliant leader, excoriating this policy for its effects in the South: "When Andrew Johnson's hands are held up, they will be found to be covered with blood." These remarkable weekly editorials of Tilton were for years looked forward to by the reading public as political events. In the excited state of the popular mind of that time over political matters, they in fact constituted a series of sensations. They were always double-leaded and did not exceed a short column in length, but for each of these leaders Tilton was paid $120, receiving from the management of the Independent a salary of $7000 a year.

By reason, however, of his radical opinions on religious and other matters, his brilliant career on that journal was at length brought to an abrupt close, the Independent being orthodox in religion and on social questions a conservative newspaper, and its proprietor not apt to tolerate the advocacy of heretical opinions. But these were Tilton's perihelion years, when he shone at his utmost glory, gathering about him a coterie of brilliant worshiping spirits, male and female, in his Brooklyn home and being everywhere gratefully received as a popular lecturer; and it is upon these years of his glory that he must have dwelt with peculiar sadness and regret in the long, withering years of his exile. It was during this period, also, when he was especially acceptable to the political public in Washington, where he was a frequent visitor to study public men and proceedings in the two houses of Congress. Having improved my acquaintance with him, he was generally my guest during these visits at the capitol, in my spacious committee-room above the Senate chamber, from the upper gallery of which he could most conveniently watch the proceedings on the Senate floor. Though self-absorbed, he was a brilliant and interesting companion, and when admired, as he then was in my case, a most congenial one. It was curious to watch him in his personal intercourse with Senators, by whom universally he was more than cordially received, particularly during the impeachment trial of Johnson, which he ardently advocated and supported in his editorials for the Independent, these being frequently composed or revised in my room. These leaders bearing on the conduct or opinions of Senators in that crisis frequently made or damaged, as I have said, their individual fortunes. Their headings, or titles, like their text, were always striking. The one on Chief Justice Chase, who sat at the head of that notable tribunal, and who, although a lifelong enemy of the slave power, was known to be inimical to the prevailing sentiment of the Senate and its probable decision of the Johnson case, was headed, "A Folded Banner!" causing by its pungent criticism a deep depression on the mind of that eminent man and a final break in his previously warm personal relations with the editor. I had more than once met Tilton at the small informal social gatherings of friends at the house of the Chief Justice, and, by the way, he was the only human being in whose presence I ever saw that brilliant social queen, his daughter, Mrs. Kate Sprague, stand abashed by superior intellectual address. It must be confessed that, in the final analysis, Tilton was a poseur with a keen eye for effect. But his talents, like his figure, were genuine and commanding. His vogue at the Capitol, and particularly at the Senate, was extraordinary. He was the only stranger that I ever observed enter that chamber independently of the prescribed regulations for certain officials. Tilton had only to appear before its exclusive doors with his handsome striding figure for its janitors to obsequiously bow as he walked through like a chartered potentate. It was this sort of indulgence and the vanity of a spoiled brilliant child that later ruined him. Consciously or unconsciously he carried the air of immunity and superiority wherever he appeared, making by this assumption even more than from jealousy of his unusual talents enemies both open and concealed. His journalistic peers and rivals, like Whitelaw Reid, Charles Dana, and others of solid intellectual parts and of nearly equaly, if less showy, talents, would hardly stomach this "blooming" gait and, when the day of his misfortune came, he was without real sympathy and strong sustaining friends. Even with his admirers there was a certain feeling that he was not substantial and genuine, the brilliant authoress and woman of generously charitable judgments, Harriett Prescott Spofford, saying of him to a friend: "He suggests veal meat."

THEODORE TILTON.

Tilton's poetry had a high order of merit. He attempted, as I remember, nothing of a highly ambitious cast, but his lyrics, or verse in "lighter vein," had a unique beauty and gracefulness, especially appealing to the esthetic sense.

I have omitted to record in connection with his intercourse with public men his famous telegraphic correspondence with Blaine consisting of just three words on each side. Blaine, as Speaker of the House of Representatives, had given some decision not entirely to the approval of the bright editor of the Independent. Tilton wired him a message: "Oh, Mr. Blaine!" to which the equally alert Speaker telegraphically retorted: "Ah, Mr. Tilton!"

As a lecturer, with his commanding and powerful melodious voice, he was almost superb. His sparkling wit was very attractive. I know in fact of no platform orator, save Ingersoll, equally effective with audiences. His power and brilliance, however, although assisted by a poetic diction, did not equal that of Ingersoll. He had, besides, a theatrical manner as if studying for effect, and which detracted from the impression of reality always present in the highest oratory. His apparently extemporized, but always studied [illegible] nevertheless extremely happy. Scared the Englishman.

HILARITY IN WHICH "BILLY" FLORENCE PARTICIPATED.

By a Special Contributor.

THERE were tears in many eyes; and in the eyes of manly men, too, when "Billy" Florence died

For many years William J. Florence was the foremost comedian on the English-speaking stage. The few who knew him intimately knew a very noble, charitable, generous, manly, loving and lovable man. He was always bubbling over with wit and humor, and was one of the best story tellers in the whole world.

In the company of four newspaper men, A. C. Buell, Fred Mussey, Lou Megargee and the writer, Mr. Florence one evening told in detail how some actors and intimate friends entertained an Englishman in this country. He was Philip Lee, the husband of Adelaide Neilson, the best "Juliet" ever seen on any stage. As Florence told the story:

"Lee was an English gentleman, the son of a clergyman, modest and gentle, but exceptionally inquisitive concerning America and our ways. He came over here with his wife; not as her business manager, but as an unobtrusive, affectionate and proud husband.

"In those days the elder Sothern was famous as 'Lord Dundreary,' a part created by himself and never imitated, because imitation would be impossible. Nobody but Ned Southern could raise the roof by telling that 'Of course birds of a feather must flock together. How funny they must have looked with only one feather. They had to flock together, because no one of them could flock off all alone, by himself.'

"One night Sothern, Lee and I met at the Lotus Club, which was then far downtown in New York, and we invited the Englishman to go with us to Brown's chophouse to peck at something, before going to bed. As we were opposite the Glenheim Hotel, our attention was drawn to a commotion on the other side of Broadway, in which a policeman figured. Lee, who was very inquisitive, exclaimed: 'Is there a fight going on, over there?'

"'Only another dead man,' replied Sothern, as we continued walking. 'That's where John Doe killed Richard Roe, last night.'

"'Another dead man?' exclaimed Lee, with a shudder. 'For Gawd's sake, Mr. Sothern, what do you mean?'

"'Oh, that's nothing,' muttered Sothern. 'They are killing men here every night. Very often I stumble over them on my way home, but I pass right on. If men want to live in this country, they must keep out of trouble, that's all.'

"'Dreadful, dreadful,' said Lee. 'I should be afraid to go out alone at night.'

"'No danger at all,' said Sothern quietly. 'All you have to do is to go along and attend to your own business. If any one stops you, just shoot him down, and go ahead home.'

"Our English guest became thoughtfully silent, as we wended our way to Brown's, where we soon had a chop dinner before us, with some ale in our bottles and glasses. Ned had not prearranged anything, but he gave me a wink which I knew meant fun of some kind, and I was ready for whatever might happen.

"Just as I was cutting into a fine chop, Sothern reached over and jabbed his fork into my chop. I held on with my fork, and laid my knife over the chop also, and sternly said: 'Ned, I don't like this interruption. Take away your fork instantly.'

"'I don't care whether you like it or not,' shouted Sothern. 'I like the looks of that chop, and I'm going to have it.'

"I jumped up immediately, and grabbed my best-beloved friend by the throat, while he grabbed me likewise, and made desperate efforts to cut my throat. I was big enough to throw him down, and I did so. The table went over, too, and everything flew over Lee—chops, gravy, coffee and side dishes. Brown, the proprietor, knew both of us, rushed in and succeeded in separating us, just as I was about to draw my sharp knife across Sothern's throat. He supposed that we were entirely in earnest, and stood between us, urging us to make up. I refused to accept any peace overture except a complete apology from Sothern; and he refused to apologize, unless Brown should agree to prepare chops for him, and furnish as big and good ones as mine. Brown agreed to do this, went out and prepared another dinner with his own hands. When it was placed before us, we shook hands, and made up. In fact, we kissed each other very affectionately,' while Lee looked on in amazement.

"Finally, after midnight, we escorted Lee home to his wife. He was afraid to go home alone, even in a cab, on account of people being killed every night on Broadway; and he didn't want to be a victim.

"That was the beginning of the subsequent dinner hoax which was played on Lee. I don't know who originated it, but I suspect Sothern. He came to me the following week and informed me that he intended giving a dinner in honor of Lee at the Gramercy Park Hotel. He said that the only part I would be expected to play would be to produce Lee; bring him to the dinner. I kept that agreement, and brought our English visitor to the hospitable table, in the banquet-room. I was told afterward that the doors and windows had been padded and covered, so that no sound could be heard outside. The room was beautifully decorated and lighted with wax candles. There were present actors of eminence; the best living—John McCulloch, Harry Montague, Charlie Gaylor; Bryant (Dan,) and Seylour (Nelson,) the great negro-minstrel team; Commodore Dickinson of the New York Yacht Club, George Brown of the chophouse, several others whose names I cannot now recall, Sothern, Lee and myself.

"We had disposed of cocktails and oysters, and the soup had been placed upon the table when Gaylor arose and addressed the company, thus:

"'Gentlemen, I think that this is an auspicious occasion to bring about peace between two gentlemen, who were once devoted friends. To be sure, some of you may think I am not the proper person to act as peacemaker, because you all know that I have shed human gore. You all know that my right hand has been dripping with rich red blood. But, gentlemen, you all know also, that I was acquitted by a jury of my peers, on a plea of self-defense.

"'What has he done? Has he killed any one?' was the query of the startled Lee, as he whispered to me. Lifting my fingers to my lips, I shook my head and whispered:

"'S-sh-sh. It was nothing. Only his mother.'

"'Heavenly Father!' muttered Lee, as he shrunk into his chair.

"Then he leaned over and whispered:

"'Of whom is he speaking?'

"'I don't know,' was my truthful reply. 'It might apply to any two of us; for every one has killed his man.'

"Lee turned pale and shivered, while Gaylor went on. Pointing first at Dan Bryant and then at Nelse Seymour, America's greatest negro minstrels, he indicated his purpose. Seymour, you must remember, had the longest legs in the world. He looked as if he had been split clear up to the neck. His favorite trick on the stage was to throw one leg around Bryant's neck and drag him around the stage, that way. Pointing to those gentlemen, Gaylor went on:

"'Gentlemen, you all know that I want to bring about peace between Mr. Bryant and Mr. Seymour. They should be friends and not deadly enemies. It seems to me that it ill-becomes such a famous man as William Cullen Bryant, the great American poet, and Nelson Seymour, the brilliant son of the famous Governor of New York and Presidential candidate, Horatio Seymour, to be strangers, when they were friends from boyhood.

"'Is that really William Cullen Bryant, the author of 'Thanatopsis?' inquired Lee. I told him that it was, and Gaylor went on:

"'I want to make this entire company happy, and I want to make these eminent gentlemen happy, by inducing them to shake hands and again become friends.

"Bryant was smiling, but Seymour was scowling. I never saw such a look of mingled disgust and hatred as he manifested. Bryant leaned across the table, offering his hand, when suddenly Seymour shot out that dreadful long right leg, caught Bryant back of the neck and drew him onto the table. In an instant they were both on top of the table, striking each other in the face, and snarling and biting like a pair of ferocious bulldogs. Commodore Dickinson and a couple of the others who were not in the secret, crawled under the table. I held Lee in his seat by main strength, until broken dishes began to fly all around us. The table was upset, over on Lee's side, and the gentle little fellow was almost drowned by the soup. Wetting his fingers, Seymour got some blacking from his shoes, and therewith gave himself and Bryant pairs of black eyes. Then all of us threw ourselves onto the fighters and separated them. Handkerchiefs were bound over their blackened eyes; and they were compelled to shake hands, and be friends. This ending pleased everybody: and we shouted.

"'Fine! Fine! Once a gentleman always a gentleman. A true American always shows his breeding in settling a difficulty amicably.'

"'This is shameful and disgraceful,' whispered Lee to me.

"'How can you say that?' I inquired with some show of displeasure. 'Nobody has been killed.'

"'Well, at any rate,' he whispered, 'I am very sorry it happened.'

"Well-trained waiters soon put the table into good condition again, and the dinner proceeded beautifully. But, in a short time, Ned Sothern and John McCulloch got into a heated argument about the merits of the North and the South. They continued raising their voices higher and higher, attracting the attention of all of us, and finally McCulloch called Sothern a liar.

"Instantly Ned whipped out a big revolver and fired it off right over McCulloch's head. McCulloch drew a big Roman sword from his hip pocket and began slashing at Sothern, who retreated, still firing his revolver. In less than a minute, twenty revolvers were cracking across that table. The terror of Lee was almost pitiable. He begged to be allowed to go; but his friends were so devoted to him that they would not let him go. There was a large dish of asparagus on the table, covered with drawn butter. While the combatants were shooting and slashing, they crawled over the table trying to do murder, and each of them dipped his fingers in that drawn butter. They took turns in placing their hands on Lee's shoulders and begging him to keep his seat, telling him that the trouble was only trifling, and would soon be over. In their repeated manifestations of love for him, they covered Poor Lee from head to foot with drawn butter. He was a sight!

"Seymour had disappeared. But, he suddenly distracted all of the combatants by coming to the door, attired in the white cap and apron of one of the waiters. He announced that the proprietor demanded that every 'gentleman' leave the room at once. He had scarcely finished his warning, when everything on the table, including heavy dishes and cut-glassware, was hurled at him. For a wonder, he escaped unhurt.

"'On the plea of keeping another dinner engagement, Lee finally secured permission to depart. I escorted him to the street and put him in a closed vehicle, to conceal his pitiful condition. Once outside, he told me that he would not keep that other dinner engagement, nor go to any other dinner in America.

"We paid the Gramercy Park Hotel $600 for that dinner." The item for breakage was $130. But we had lots of fun.

"Lee never went anywhere after that, without his wife, as long as he remained in this wild and half-civilized country."

ow a Business Man's Dreams Came True at Last.

By a Special Contributor.

O night when he could not sleep, Bloss began it in a bare-faced attempt to keep the office out of his mind. of pearls brought a smile of vague mean- face; he had been pearl fishing the night before, and his memory of it was half-regretful and half-mocking. If this wideawake speculator could know how he passed his evenings——! He smiled again, and with a slow shrug abandoned such unprofitable thought. But because the island still shadowed his inner consciousness, he did not see as clearly as usual; and he became the financier of the Franklin Ranch Egg Company.

Summer heat and embonpoint are not good friends at night; Bloss slept less than usual, and as a consequence fancied more. The cannibals returned in July, but when their fearful orgies were over instead of once more embarking in their war canoes, they roamed the Garden of Eden and found the bower there. The long-delayed spring of youth had entered the soul of 40-year-old Bloss, and, quite unwittingly, he was making for himself companions to share his private hours. All through the hot months he conscientiously toiled in the city, returning at night to his fancied people. He subdued them, domesticated them, reclaimed them. Like other adventurers, the lust for power grew into him; he made himself a king. The wildest fancies of boyhood were not too wild for Bloss, the Dreamer; an independent and absolute monarchy was the result; Bloss became a chief, a lawgiver, a god; and he ruled his people with a stern yet loving hand.

Autumn brought its melancholy to his soul; a melancholy burdened with the instinct of mating youth. Women had never been part of his life, but now they became so; noticing them daily, he began to remember them, to criticise, admire, study, and as a consequence brown women entered his island. Of course, there had been many women there since the cannibal settlement, but they were merely the complement of the men, the necessary adjuncts to a state. Now, however, they became personal, their characters developed, and one in particular—though he did not realize it, she was an adumbration of the girl he had known back on the boyhood farm—began to take on a reality quite incompatible with the fanciful world where she moved.

Bloss permitted this dream habit to get full control of his evening life, whence it was in danger of usurping other hours, and, like all habits, growing into an insistent menace. He did not understand this, and the only prick of conscience was caused by a secret shame at himself for his absurd childishness; or so he termed it. Yet the nightly world continued to exist, and, in the business world, eggs did much more than that. Hens, long after the summer was over, seemed bent on retrieving their damaged reputations, and very early in the winter Franklin's face grew worried and lined, though Bloss failed to see the gravity of the situation, even when the weather bureau prophesied warm rains instead of snow.

Franklin's fears were more than justified; eggs remained at almost impossible prices; and if there were any reasoning, sensitive hens, they are dead now. Bloss took the blow quietly, though at one time it would have whitened his head; his bank account was almost wiped out; he had nothing left but his commission business, and even that had seriously felt the shock.

Business acquaintances condoned with him. Bloss waved them aside; sympathy would have been very welcome, but words were not; and sympathy no man had for him, for no one ever thought of him long enough at a time to germinate the least spark of kindly feeling toward him. Bloss retired farther into his soul, said nothing, and met the world with an immobile cheek. And yet, if anything, his eyes grew kindlier, he was more patient with his people, and a ghost of humor began to make itself manifest about his closed lips. The change, though scarcely noticeable to the average man, was becoming more pronounced; dreams were dominating his business hours.

A clerk, one day, hastily entered the little cubby hole which Bloss called his private office. Bloss, hunched up over his desk, started guiltily, glanced up into his employés eyes, and flushed a vivid scarlet as he clumsily thrust something underneath a sheet of blotting paper. The clerk reported to his fellows; curiosity became aroused, and a clandestine search revealed on a shelf in the clothes closet, a bundle of books; not technical books, law books, or books of any earthly value; not even essays, philosophies, metaphysics; no, not even poems; they were yellow-backed, their type was broken and uncertain, their bindings parted crackling. And they were all stories of dreadful, ecstatic, and miraculous adventures on coral reef, by waving palm, down southern seas. Thereafter the clerks respected their employer, for they fancied an adventurous dare-deviltry hidden under his imperturbable exterior; they too were readers of lively books, and a bond of unspoken kinship seemed to them established between master and man. But suddenly the books disappeared, and Bloss at the same time became his old self. His eyes were hard, his lips never parted, he saw everything and was everywhere, determination lined his cheeks, and business energy frowned on his forehead.

Simultaneously with this change, the employés became possessed of an open secret; Franklin's egg speculation had been deeper, heavier and more disastrous than even he imagined; it bid fair to ruin every one connected with the egg company. Bloss worked energetically; he toiled far into the night over the tangled mass of papers; he bullied, berated, stormed, but through it all he rapidly brought order out of chaos; for he had business genius. His associates left everything in his hands, nor did they have cause to regret it. But with all his manifold duties, Bloss still had time to dream.

A brown man, small, wiry and foreign, began to come and go through the commission house; he was always impatiently expected, and reluctantly dismissed. Once another brown man, smaller, darker, and more foreign, accompanied him, and this man Bloss met at the door, and ushered, hat in hand. And a third time Paris, in an immaculate dress suit, as Parisian etiquette demanded, descended from its carriage and daintily threaded the dark storeroom, gazing with unfeigned astonishment at the grotesque quarters of this American business man.

Misfortunes pour. Surely there is an occult connection between them; they are invisible vultures, patroling the cloudless skies, and when one swoops down upon some heart, others follow until earth darkens under them. Bloss's cashier absconded, and the business, painfully built through twenty years, fell in an instant. Extra editions announced it, and Franklin, more lined than ever, rushed into the office, where he found Bloss composedly superintending an accountant's preparatory work. The other speculators who had taken flyers in the egg industry, quickly gathered, and for the first time in his life Bloss felt the melancholy pleasure of being observed with sincere pity.

"Well, gentlemen," he observed, "does any one want a good commission house for the debts?" A smile lurked on his lips, and his eyes twinkled. The flush of color on his cheek seemed caused by pleasurable excitement, rather than by despair.

Look here," Franklin began abruptly, "you have saved us a good deal by untangling the egg muddle, and we are willing to get together and fix up a little loan for you, if it will help you renew your notes."

Bloss rolled his stogie and repeatedly nodded. "Thanks," he said, "but it's no use. I'm done. Mortgage due tomorrow—that's the money I borrowed for my share in the second cold-storage lot of eggs. Another note falls in a week, and a third before long. I can't make it. In fact, the third one would have caught me, even if my man had not skipped with everything."

"Sorry," Franklin mumbled. And then, after a silence: "Well, what are you going to do?"

The smile grew more pronounced on Bloss's heavy face, until it both strengthened and lightened it. "I am going to my island," he soberly said.

"Your what?" Franklin demanded.

"I own an island, down—far down—yonder, under the sea somewhere; an island, and a people, and—yes—a girl. A little, slim, brown-limbed girl, with kitten hands and a clean soul. I'm going there—to live."

Franklin stared; amazement grew into his face. Finally, "Are you crazy?" he gasped.

For answer, Bloss took a packet of papers from his desk and passed it across. "My assets here will just about meet my liabilities," he said. "The courts can attend to that. I've bought a coral atoll from the French government," he quietly continued; "there are fifty people on it, and cocoa palms. I've picked up a little trading schooner at Honolulu by wire, and I'm going into copra. I sail tomorrow."

YOUNG TURKISH ATHLETES.

"Oriental people are very averse to physical exercise of any kind. Their idea of enjoyment is to sit under an awning and play backgammon," said Edward O. Donaldson of Constantinople, Turkey, the director of an American and English wholesale importing house in the capital of the Sultan. "That a man should go out and run around a track in shameless nakedness, and this with no hope of gain, only confirms them in the belief that all Americans are mad. But they are imitative people, and some years ago the influence and example of the younger teachers got a few of the preparatory boys out for footraces.

"That day, for Ben-Beirut, at least, the deathblow was struck to the picturesque dress of the Orient. You can't run a 100-yard dash with long, baggy trousers and a silk gumbez that flops around your ankles. Even if you tuck your skirts into the sash the effect is more startling than speedy. So one by one the students ordered European trousers from the city tailors.

"At first they were poorly cut and viewed with suspicion, but today there are not three men in the collegiate department who wear the old costume, and many of the students dress with taste and an elegance that their professors cannot afford to emulate. Tennis and basketball soon won their place in the students' favor, and now we have gymnastic apparatus and a regularly graduated athletic director, who has learned physical culture and boy nature through a long experience in the gymnasiums of America.

"But it was football that did the most toward unification. The value of team work is a new idea to eastern college men. The old ideal was that of 'every man for himself.' It has been so since the time of Alcibiades and Absalom. If it had not been so, the history of the world might have been different. It was comparatively easy to see the joy of winning a footrace or a tennis match, but to play an untheatrical part in a football game, obeying a captain and working for the good of the side—that was a different thing."—[Washington Post.

HOW ENOLA GOT ITS NAME.

Enola, the famous Pennsylvania Railroad yard on the west branch of the Susquehanna, got its name in a strange way.

A telegraph operator who spent the lonely hours in the little watch box, with no more than half a dozen trains a day to disturb him or break the monotony, before the big yard was built, called up the Baltimore office and asked to be relieved from such a lonesome place. In sending the message he signed "operator in charge of the tower all alone." There was some trouble on the wire, and the last word could not be understood. He was asked to repeat, and then to spell it backward. This he did, first "alone," then "Enola." In this way the town, which was built to order in a little more than two years, got its name.—[Philadelphia Record.

A STRONG VOICE.

"Did my voice fill the hall?" the soloist inquired.

"It more than filled the lobby," the manager retorted. "The whole house went out for a smoke while you were on."

"Talk is cheap," said Uncle Rooster.

"But no wonder," he appended, "ain't most of it done by female labor?"

RUSSIAN LIFE AS SEEN FROM A CAR WINDOW.

By a Special Contributor.

TO independent Americans Russia has always seemed the living prototype of the Wicked Ogre in the fairy tales. Siberia has many satellites of associations and the mere word is suggestive of ravenous wolves, clanking chains and dark, dreary dungeons. Imagine our surprise, then, to find it in July a sunny, blossoming country much more deserving of the name "Flowery Kingdom" than Japan. In fact, it is monotonously, stupidly pretty, with its miles and miles of white birches, and great fields of yellow mustard and varied wild flowers glowing in the sun.

A street in Vladivo

Manchus on Gobi Desert

We left Japan at Tsuruga, a small western port near Kyoto, and crossed the Yellow Sea, reaching Vladivostok in a little less than two days. The boat was owned by an English company, chartered by the Russians, had a German captain, a Chinese crew, and carried twenty-five passengers of about eight different nationalities.

Vladivostok is a muddy, sticky, oriental city, and one feels that all of the "great unwashed" must have originally emigrated from here. Japan seemed like a dream of cleanliness in comparison. Vladivostok has no first-class hotel accommodations, and most tourists leave as soon as possible. Along the main street are large stone business blocks which suggest occidental enterprise, but a step inside is a great disallusionment. Foul air and unswept floors make one seek the street on all occasions.

There are four express trains every week running through from Vladivostok to Moscow, two belonging to the Chinese Eastern Railroad, or the Russian government, and the others to the International Sleeping Car Company. We left on the Chinese Eastern Railroad one evening at 7 o'clock. A motley crowd gathered at the depot; large Manchus (so unlike our Californian Chinese) searching for baggage to carry; Cossacks, swaggering in brightly-colored uniforms; a few handsome Russian officers, and here and there little Tartar beggars in graceful gypsy costumes. Round, blue eyes and the Caucasian features predominated, yet the lazy movement of the crowd, the bright colors, and the general atmosphere of the place spelled "Orient." A little group of American people gathered around our American Consul made the finest appearance of them all. Our train was not crowded until we reached Harbin, one day out, where other passengers were transferred from the Japanese line coming up from Port Arthur and Mukden.

Although the scenery of Siberia becomes somewhat monotonous at times, yet we have never traveled with so little effort, with such relaxed nerves, and, as the advertising agents might well say, "with all the comforts of home." Our compartment held two long couches, an adjustable table and a full-length mirror attached to the door. At the head of the couches were buttons for turning on the electric lights, for ringing up the car porter, and, most important of all, for calling a waiter from the dining-car. Here we fortified ourselves for eleven days, locking our door and resting in bed until noon if we liked, while the Chinaman brought us a hot American breakfast to be eaten in our cosy apartment. Many of the meals were eaten in this sweet seclusion, and here 5 o'clock tea was served to the English-speaking passengers.

Occasionally the dining-car had attractions, where, instead of stiff tables and chairs, we found leather upholstered couches and arm chairs scattered casually about, with tables to be adjusted to one's fancy, and, city. Irkutsk is said to be a modern little Paris where one may buy the latest of everything. We could only judge by the architecture of the roofs and the view of the surrounding hills, but we were charmed. It was hard to imagine that those white-globed church towers and Mohammedan-looking minarets belonged to Christian churches, but we finally accepted the fact, for throughout Russia the church architecture was the same. The sixth day we reached the junction for Tomsk, and another day brought us to Omsk. Between these cities are many miles of dark, rolling prairie land which makes fine pasturage. So many cows were seen along the line that her bovine majesty finally became a joke on the trip.

Approaching some low hills, great was our astonishment to learn they were the Ural Mountains. Farther north they are probably much higher. However, Siberia being such a vast expanse of flatness, a little hill must seem enormous to a native.

Over the mountains into European Russia we soon noticed the change in scenery. Clustered villages became more frequent, and small grain and vegetable patches more numerous. Men and women were working side by side, slowly and carefully cutting the grain by hand. They were sunburnt and poorly-clad, but they certainly did not look so thin and underfed as the poor in many European cities.

On the tenth day we reached Samara, a thriving little city, and crossed the Volga, the first river flowing south. Its wide expanse, even so far north of the Caspian, is dotted with puffing little steamboats and immense rafts resembling floating towns.

The next day the train pulled into Moscow, just ten days and twenty hours from Vladivostok. Moscow is a delightful city, and quite original, being neither oriental nor European. It is not a city existing especially for the benefit of tourists, nor is it so barbarian as to be [illegible] without the pale. It is intensely itself, religious to fanaticism, with its churches and shrines on every block. We gained a vague idea of what Catholicism must have meant to Europe in the middle ages. The streets were crowded with men who constantly removed their hats and crossed themselves before the shrines. Even the cab drivers were kept busy with their devotions. This intense faith was reflected in their [illegible]. We attended services in the various churches of the Kremlin, and found that more than two-thirds of the [illegible] were men.

The ever-increasing popularity of the Siberian Railroad is well deserved, and since our trip we have threatened several times to give American railroad managers hints on traveling easily and comfortably. It is reported that the Russian government is losing several million dollars a year on this line, but surely the future will bring rich returns when the country is more densely settled.

Jules Verne's vision is a thing of the past. Now one may go around the world in forty days (if necessary) and this fact we owe entirely to the Siberian Railroad.

AN UNLUCKY COIN.

"The quarter-dollar," said a numismatist, "should be a very unlucky coin. It is nothing but one mass of thirteens.

"There are thirteen stars on it. There are thirteen letters in the scroll that the eagle holds in its claws, there are thirteen feathers in the eagle's tail, and there are thirteen feathers in its wing. On the shield there are thirteen parallel lines, thirteen horizontal stripes, and thirteen arrowheads.

"Finally, in the word 'quarter-dollar' there are just thirteen letters."

CIGAR "LEAFERS."

Cigar "leafers" have been busy up and down the country during the past few weeks, collecting dead chestnut leaves for the making of cheap cigars. Armed with a long spike, the expert "leafer" seeks the most perfect specimens of chestnut leaves, selecting only those of a golden-brown color. The leaves are soaked in tobacco juice and made into cigars, which sell at a penny each. The outside leaf of these smokes—which rejoice in some such cognomen among the élite of Whitechapel as "Flor de Cabbage"—is generally of real tobacco. During the "leafing" season an expert "leafer" can make 50 shillings a week.—P. T. O.

"In God We Trust."

How This Motto Came to Be Placed on Our Coins.

By a Special Contributor.

EVEN despite all the attention directed to the motto "In God We Trust" by President Roosevelt's much-discussed order of removal, the story of how the sentiment first came to be placed on Uncle Sam's coins has been curiously overlooked.

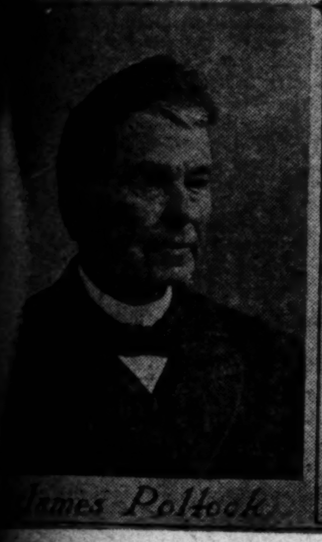
It was in a crisis in the national life, at a time of never-to-be-forgotten strife, that a devout and patriotic official in the Treasury Department, James Pollock, made the suggestion, and with the full approval of Salmon P. Chase, at that time Secretary of the Treasury, and of Lincoln himself, the motto was adopted.

Pollock, author of the suggestion, was one of those useful citizens who, while their services are many and varied, never force themselves sufficiently into the limelight to get the measure of credit due them.

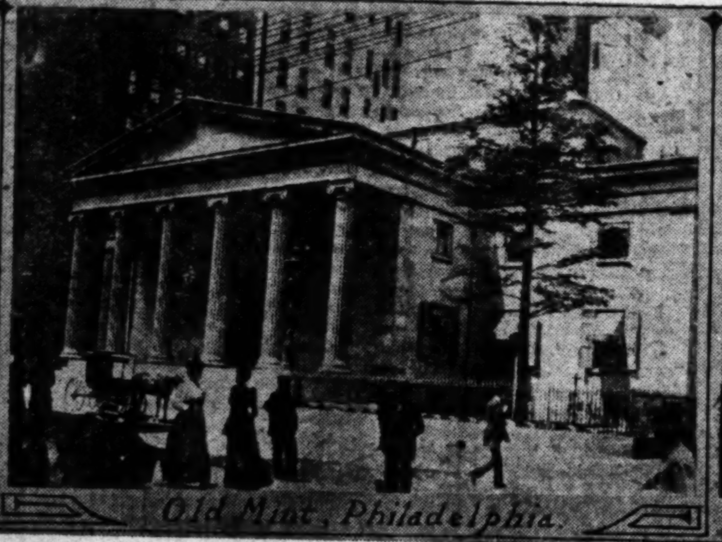
Born in Milton, Northumberland county, Penn., Mr. Pollock took up the law as his life calling, graduated from Princeton, and was forced into the stream of politics by the obligation which every northern man then felt, to take sides in the struggle then developing.

Pollock was a Whig, and as such went to Congress. He left the legislative halls to take a place on the bench. The demand of his party that he run for the office of Governor drew him from the obscurity of judicial life and put him in the thick of the excitement that beset the existence of every executive of a State.

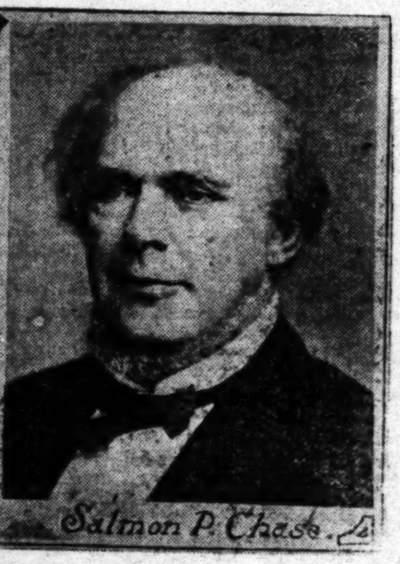
Pollock's studies had especially adapted him for a proper comprehension of finance. Next to the great issues of slavery and State rights, the problem of money was the biggest that called for attention.



James Pollock.



Old Mint, Philadelphia.



Salmon P. Chase.

The virtual certainty of war had completely upset all values; currency had been scared into retirement, and business was prostrated at the time when Pollock went to Harrisburg.

A man of less power might have avoided the tremendous responsibilities that came with attempting to deal with the issue, on the score that it was a national question not a state one, and that no action by a Pennsylvania Governor could better conditions that needed action from Washington.

But Pollock addressed himself to the task of forcing the State banks to a resumption of specie payment. In 1857 he rammed this reform through, and at a time when currency was almost unknown throughout the remainder of the country it was paid out unhesitatingly by the banks of the Keystone State.

This piece of patriotic work, ably driven through, made a deep impression on Abraham Lincoln, then just coming to the fore as one of the nation's destined leaders in the great conflict to come.

During all the period before the war Lincoln always insisted that much of the misery, especially that resulting from disturbed financial conditions, could have been averted if men in places of power had only taken responsibility. When he became President later he had a chance to see how much harder his own herculean task had been made by the burdens which others allowed to pile up.

What Pollock did in Pennsylvania, Lincoln contended could have been done elsewhere, and when he became President one of his first acts was to summon to his aid the able Pennsylvanian.

In 1861 Pollock was appointed to the post of Director of the Mint.

Most of his time the new director spent in the famous old building in Philadelphia, which has now been torn down, but which for seventy-five years was the main minting place for Uncle Sam's coin.

It was early in 1864 that Mr. Pollock first conceived the plan of putting some religious sentiment on the nation's money. As a devout Christian he constantly felt the need of appealing for divine aid, and his thought was that a declaration of faith placed on the medium of exchange, which is ever circulating from hand to hand, would help to give men courage in godly guidance, would make them more often lift their thoughts to the supreme arbiter of all destinies, man or nation.

Mr. Pollock at once wrote to Mr. Chase and asked his opinion as to the propriety of putting on the coins one of two sentiments, "In God We Trust," or "God Our Trust."

"We didn't mean any sectarian god," explained Mr. Pollock. "There was no bias in this reverent sentiment. We meant equally the God of the Protestant, the Catholic, the Jew. We wished an appeal directed to that Superior Being, which in one form or another is the basis of all creeds."

Secretary Chase immediately approved the idea, but his preference was so entirely for the first mentioned of the mottoes that the second was dropped entirely.

The President was consulted and interposed no objection. In fact, his trust in Secretary Chase in all matters relating to finance was so complete that it was almost out of the question to expect any protest from him. But it was more than an acquiescence that came from the Martyr. He felt that a recognition of God on the nation's coin was a national as well as a personal religious duty.

But in those days executive desire was not enough. The matter had to go through the lawmaking channels before being incorporated in the nation's statutes.

To Mr. Pollock was delegated the task of drafting a bill to be introduced into Congress, which provided that the motto should be placed upon all coins of the United States, gold or silver. The only exception was made in the case of coins not large enough to contain the motto. In this latter class naturally come the dime, and the now forgotten 3-cent piece, which in that day was as frequent as the nickel of today.

In neither body of Congress was there raised the faintest hint of opposition, and the bill was passed unanimously.

In 1865, before the final passage of the bill, coins were struck off to be used as specimens in order to show the legislators what the currency would look like with the devout words included.

The design was heartily praised. President Lincoln signed the bill, one of his last official acts, and from 1866 the motto appeared on all coins without interruption until President Roosevelt recently ordered its removal from the new gold coin.

Naturally this action did not escape criticism. It was inevitable that the religious sentiment of the community should be moved to protest.

In explaining his action, President Roosevelt said that his motives had not been lack of religious deference, but rather an objection to irreverence. He told of how the phrase had come into flippant use.

Under these conditions Mr. Roosevelt argued it was far better that a cause for profane use of the sacred name be removed.

Undoubtedly much of what President Roosevelt said in his letter is true. The stress of war times past the custom of invoking divine aid in matters involving the nation's financial system has been almost forgotten, and the unthinking make sorry jests out of what was projected and put through in purest reverence.

But the sentiment in favor of the motto will not die in spite of the admitted force of the objections. Born in the midst of the terrible experiences of the war, it has a historic appeal entirely apart from its religious one, and the discussion is likely to continue.

Appropriately, it was a Pennsylvania man, Representative J. Hampton Moore, who introduced the bill to restore to the nation's gold coins the motto that another Pennsylvanian originally put there.

Mr. Moore is a great admirer of the Chief Executive and a consistent advocate of his policies, but in this case he felt that an error had been made, and that the motto should not have been discarded.

It is not probable that should this prove to be the sentiment of Congress that President Roosevelt will veto a bill to restore the motto. He has said that he would be glad to hear what Senators and Representatives thought on the subject, which is not far removed from intimating that he will be guided by their wishes.

Pollock passed out of his office just after accomplishing his plan to make each coin speak the nation's confidence in the Maker. But he was only allowed to stay out of the office briefly. In 1869 President Grant appointed him again, and he served ten years till 1879. Later he became naval officer of Philadelphia, and died in 1894.

THE STORY OF AN ABDUCTION AND A CURE.

By a Special Contributor.

THE waiting-room of the great doctor was crowded and the late-comers had difficulty in finding seats. From her corner of the big divan Isabel Mitford looked out over the room and marveled at the familiarity of the scene. It had all been depicted so many times; she herself had described just such a scene once in one of her stories. The same types were here; the same anxious faces and straining eyes; the same hushed quiet and the same glances turned hopefully upon the great doctor every time he opened the door of his inner office and ushered out a patient, glances which were pathetic in their childlike dependence upon the great man. Would she, after she had had her interview, leave with the same look of despair which she had seen on so many faces during the brief time she waited? She shivered a little at the thought, and the moisture gathered in the palms of her hands. Anyhow, she would not have long to wait, for the next turn was hers.

The examination which followed was soon over. It was hard, but it taxed her mental rather than her physical strength. But if it was hard for her, what of the specialist? They had hearts, these giants of their profession, even if people generally did not concede this to be the case, and how was he to tell her that he could do nothing for her; that she had come to him too late? An operation, six months, yes, even three months ago, might have saved her, but she had not the strength now to endure it.

Circumstances had placed him in the position of a judge pronouncing the death sentence, and yet unlike the man of the law, he would pronounce it upon one who had sinned only against nature. The laws broken had been simple ones: too little nourishment, too little sleep, too much work, too close confinement—laws which are broken in countless numbers every day in the great battle for existence. Sometimes nature is lenient and suspends judgment for a period, or grants a reprieve, but here she was inexorable, implacable, executing her sentence of doom almost as soon as rendered.

Ah, if only he had been her family physician! The old-time doctor had the advantage at such crises as these. He would have known her soul as he knew her body, and could have comforted her, but what did a specialist, who had never seen her until she had come to him a scant half-hour before, know of the real woman, her circumstances or her surroundings? But she wanted the truth, and so he gave it to her as gently as he could, but frankly, and she received it as he had expected. There were no hysterics, no collapse, not even tears; only a dull apathy which surprised even herself.

For a moment she sat staring straight before her, then she rose and held out her hand. "I must not keep you," she said quietly; "there are many others waiting.

He took her hand in both of his. "Let me know what you decide. If you insist upon the operation, I will perform it for you, but remember, I cannot advise you to have it done."

"And if I do not—how—long—will—it—be?"

"About three months."

And with these three words echoing in her ears she passed out to give way to another of the waiting throng.

Some one was waiting for her in the parlor of her boarding-place. She tried to slip past the door so as to gain the staircase and escape to her room—for how was she to talk and jest with this horror in black peeping over her shoulder?—but a gentleman stepped out into the hallway and intercepted her. It was John Sherwood! he of all men! He had been so persistent in his attentions, and she cared so little for him, in fact, almost disliked him.

But she followed him obediently back, then in a burst, without knowing why, or understanding the instinct which prompted her, she told him of the judge's verdict. His face went white; she noticed that distinctly. He must have cared deeply, then. What a pity she could not have loved him. It was strange this fashion she had of thinking of herself in the past tense as already out of existence. But he was speaking; she must at least pay some attention.

"I know they do make mistakes, sometimes," she found herself answering him; "but not in this case. I have felt it coming for a long time, and see," she said, stripping off her glove and holding out her palm, "my lifeline is completely severed at a third of the distance up."

He tried to tell her that she was wrong; that palmistry was not an exact science; that she was superstitious; that doctors often made grave errors; but he could not alter her way of thinking. Her attitude scared him, for her apathy was so profound. And while he studied her he noticed for the first time the transparency of her skin, and the unnatural brightness of her eyes. Could the doctor be right after all?

At last he rose to go. She was so thankful that he had not proposed again. It would have been romantic; they always did that in novels, and the heroine either immediately recovered, or else breathed her last in her husband's arms. But he did nothing of the kind; he merely asked her to give him one day of her company, to go with him on the morrow to the Country Club at Bala. She had never been there, and he seemed so to want her; perhaps it would distract her mind until she had become accustomed to the new order of things—and he had gone so white in the face. Surely, even if she disliked him, she could do this little. So she thanked him and accepted, and then promptly forgot about it until he came for her the next morning.

She was dressed not as she would have been if she had remembered the engagement, for the Country Club was a fashionable place, but he would not give her time to change; they would miss the train now, he said, unless they hurried, so she merely ran upstairs for her hat and jacket and gloves.

At the station all was confusion, the orderly confusion of incoming and outgoing trains depositing and taking up their vast throngs, and as she was very weary from her sleepless night, she allowed Sherwood to pilot her through the crowds, past the gatekeeper with his hand outstretched for tickets, and to place her safely in her seat in the car by the open window. A moment or two and the train rolled out, but to her surprise it did not stop at Bala. When she fully realized this, they were stations beyond, and the train was running at the full speed of the "Limited." She turned to Sherwood.

"We have passed Bala!" she cried excitedly; "the train did not stop; we must be on the wrong one!"

"Pardon me for misleading you," he answered quietly, laying down a paper he had been scanning, "but we are not going to Bala. Instead we are bound for Chicago, where I have telegraphed a friend to have a clergyman awaiting us."

She stared at him confusedly, unable to grasp his meaning. "Then Bala—the Country Club——?" she stammered.

"Was simply a ruse. As long as you would not marry me, I am determined to marry you, so I am abducting you."

Isabel's eyes flashed. Her breath came and went in sharp, short gasps. "I won't marry you!" she stormed; "you can't compel me to!"

"I'm well aware of that," Sherwood replied calmly, avoiding her eyes," but I think before we reach Chicago you will see that under the circumstances it is the only thing to be done."

"But I will not stay! I shall leave this train and you at the first station!"

Sherwood's smile was maddening. "I have told the conductor and porter that you are slightly deranged; nothing serious; nothing dangerous; but I am taking you to a specialist in Chicago; that you are my wife, and in short, I have paid them to watch you and to explain the situation to any inquiring passengers."

It took her a full moment to comprehend the situation; then she burst into a paroxysm of weeping. Sherwood made no effort to stop her, but went on with his paper and left her to quiet herself. What was she to do? Should she take the first opportunity offered and dash out of the car and, like Anna Karenina, throw herself under the wheels and meet death so? No, that was too horrible! It took more courage than she had to give. She must think of something else.

Their first stop would be at Harrisburg. She would manage to escape then and beg the agent at the depot to protect her, but when that station came at last Sherwood never left her for a moment, and the train pulled out again carrying her still a prisoner.

Twice when Sherwood had gone for a few moments, she leaned over to appeal to the people in front of her, but they looked at her with frightened eyes and drew back in alarm. This, then, was how the insane were treated; yet she could not blame the people, for she, herself, had the same deadly fear of the mentally unsound.

Anything was better than to have people so shrink from her, and after all, what did it amount to—three months was such a very, very little while. What did it matter whom she belonged to or what she did during that brief period? But it was late in the afternoon before she turned to Sherwood. "I will marry you," she said quietly, "but never shall I cease to hate you for what you have done."

With the morning came Chicago, and a quick ride across the city. Then followed a confusion of memories; of standing up between three men and answering sullenly to questions almost as old as Time itself; of being hurried into another train; of many people saying farewells and settling themselves for their journeys; of crying children and soothing mother-words, and of officious porters and boys nasally intoning their wares of candy and current magazines. Then it all slipped into a great gray blur. Finally when things became distinct again, they were in a little private compartment, she and Sherwood, and there was a pile of pillows back of her and Sherwood was leaning over with a face almost as white as when she had told him the judge's verdict, but the anxious look died away when she sat up and glanced around. She was soon glad to lie back again and let the prairies and cities and little country towns slip past her like pictures on a slide. She was too weary even to wonder where she was being taken.

By and by—it seemed days and days, but she knew it could not have been—the train stopped, for them this time, and Sherwood lifted her up carefully and carried her out and placed her at the bottom of a big, primitive vehicle which seemed to be waiting for them. It was the kind she had seen in pictures depicting the very far West. But her horizon was limited. Overhead was the canvas roof, dirty and gray-looking and patched in various places, and in front were the backs of two men sitting up on the seat. One was her husband—how strangely the word sounded! the other, the man who drove the horses, but between them and the sides of the wagon she caught glimpses of the most wonderful sky she had ever seen, so bright and blue that she shut her eyes at times to rest them. The talking of the men soothed her; she could not hear them distinctly, for they conversed in low tones as if fearing to disturb her, but she judged that they were old acquaintances.

After a long time, the blue grew pale and turned to the most beautiful colors, delicate mauves and purples with touches of gold; then this faded, and one by one the stars came out. Presently the quiet jogging and jolting ceased, and she slept as she had not slept for months.

But in the morning they went on again, and as they journeyed the air grew warmer, then hotter, until the canvas roof seemed as if one great oven must be above it. Great clouds of white dust rose from the horses' hoofs, and made its way in to her. Sherwood was very kind; he came in and bathed her face and piled blankets on the roof of the wagon to keep the heat from her, but it sufficed very little. She had never felt such heat. It was everywhere. There was no getting she seemed bathed in it; with each breath until it seemed as if every part of her ing up. The blue was brighter and more ever, but she put her arm over her

Somehow it mocked her, as though it

When the sun went down there came a noon when the sun was the hottest, and she must surely die, she felt the wagon

as if the sand was giving place to harder

They crossed a small ravine; she could

The air changed, and a faint, pure breath

Upward the horses toiled slowly all and at dusk drew up before a little house edge of a tiny plateau. Then again Sherwood in his arms. This time he placed her with the perfume of broken pine boughs, child she fell quickly to sleep.

Would she ever forget the days
Would she not carry a faint recollection into that faraway country she was so
There were weeks when all she did was out on the crude couch Sherwood had which he placed every morning before the

to the same exquisite mauves and purples seen from the wagon floor, and to them now

saffrons.

And the mountain range far to the west changing. Sometimes the peaks stood out the sky as if cut out of paper and pasted of blue; then the outlines would grow away and leave only indistinct blurs; mountains would be disclosed just as they their rugged beauty, and she could almost

so. Far beyond, but only once in a while, ranges, with their glistening caps of snow, always came to her as a revelation of purity, of soul that only the very few can reach, failed to inspire her with fresh hope thoughts.

In this silence she lived on until the to want her back in the old days, but now that had he brought her out to this place to die?

her feeling of resentment gave way to one of

Sometimes he left her for hours at a time, in the direction of the setting sun for clothing less and unmerciful sun beat down upon her hard, blue sky. The glare of the alkali blinded the heat blistered her tender skin until with pain. All day she wandered, around as do those who the desert have maddened, at night Sherwood found her and took her back.

Thereafter the white cruel sands showed azure mist and spoiled her vision, and she turned stretches of pine-clad mountains above her, terrified her with their moaning trees and sounds, and she was afraid to seek a path through Then once more the love of her work returned the work she had nearly forgotten and thought to take up again. The desert and the mountains swept cold across her couch did she remember remembrance brought no fear, for it no longer

Then one day Sherwood took her away
They left the little cabin and the pines and of distant mountains, and once more crossed of burning sands, and the screaming, puffing ried them back to civilization. On the train time in months, for there had been no cabin, Isabel saw the reflection of her own

she had seen in the glass, but she did as Sherwood and the doctor wanted her to—she was used to obeying after so many months of forced obedience, and somehow the terrors of an operation did not seem so great as they had six months before.

Again there came the great, gray blur, and she felt herself slipping out into the unknown with all its mysteries, all its untold secrets; but it held her only for a little, then gradually she came back to see by the dim light the form of a nurse sitting by the bedside, and in the distance where the shadows lay dark sat Sherwood as she had seen him for so long—watching, ever watching. The gloom returned and claimed her, but when it again disappeared, it left her vision clearer, and this time Sherwood was bending over her, and into her awakening eyes shone such a wealth of love that she grew ashamed. Then from the depths of her soul came out to meet him something she had never before been aware of. She was too weak to speak, but it was mirrored in her eyes, and he, looking down into them, saw and understood.

COWARD CONSCIENCE.

I'm glad that Towser cannot speak
A single word himself,
'Cause when I stole cook's jelly cake
From off the pantry shelf
And ran off to the barn and hid,
He watched me all the time, he did!

When mother questioned if I knew
The thief (oh, horrid word!)
I kept quite mum, and p'raps she thought
I hadn't even heard.
But Towser rolled his eyes at me,
Just like a tattle-tale, you see!

So, when I go to bed tonight
I'm going to confess,
And, anyway, I feel so bad
I'll have to tell, I guess,
Because that stolen jelly cake
Has given me a stomach ache!

WARNING TO TROLLEY CAR DRIVERS.

Every time we went into Damascus, whether from our tents on the terrace above an ancient and dilapidated pleasure garden or from our red-tiled rooms in the good Hotel d'Orient, to which we had been driven by a plague of sand flies in the camp, we stepped at once into a chapter of the Arabian Nights Entertainments.

It is true there were electric lights and there was a trolley car crawling around the city, but they no more made it western and modern than a bead necklace would change the character of the Venus of Milo. The driver of the trolley car looked like one of "The Three Calenders," and a gaily-dressed little boy beside him blew loudly on an instrument of discord as the machine tranquilly advanced through the crowd. A man was run over a few months ago; his friends waited for the car to come around the next day, pulled the driver from his perch and stuck a number of long knives through him in a truly oriental manner.—[Henry van Dyke, in Harper's Magazine.

A SOLITARY WALK.

Nature—so cruel in thy loveliness,
The cloud thy chariot, every wind thy choir,
Each skylark's ecstacy thy siren lyre,
What carest thou for mortal loneliness,
The griefs of Empires, or heme's lost caress?
Thou can'st not give me back my heart's desire,
No spark still flickers on Hope's altar fire,
Not thine the will, my saddened heart to bless!
I heard a Footstep linger at my side,
I saw the Nail Prints in His hands Divine,
Nature henceforth by Him was glorified,
The key to all her parables was mine,

Wisdom unveiled to me God's vast design.

An Irishman was hurrying along past a ten-story building recently, when suddenly the falling body of a man struck him from above and knocked him to the sidewalk.

"What did ye do thot fer?" demanded the Irishman, rising painfully to his feet.

"You saved my life!" cried the other man in return, following the Irishman's example and scrambling to his feet. "I fell out of that second-story window up there, and you broke my fall."

The Candidate.

TRUE STORY OF THE DOLL THAT ELECTED A MAYOR.

By a Special Contributor.

THE rain had ceased, but the roads were still muddy, as two men in a buggy drove up a quiet street in a suburban part of the city.

They were talking of the chance the elder of the two had of being elected Mayor, and they agreed the chance was small, for the candidate in the buggy had a formidable rival who was the nominee of a corporation that was seeking a franchise from the city; moreover, he was wealthy and belonged to the popular political party, and besides was descended from a family that for four generations had been prominent in the State.

Now, our friend in the buggy had no ancestors worth speaking about. He had risen by his own efforts to his present position of modest affluence and assured business. Being an honest man of sturdy independence, he possessed the esteem of his fellow-citizens; therefore, unambitious by temperament, he was in a measure content with his success; but there was one honor he coveted, and this was the post of chief magistrate of his city. It had been a far-off goal when he was a young man, but as he advanced in years and prosperity it appeared to grow nearer, until at length it seemed almost within his grasp, when suddenly a man of wealth and position rose up to contest the honor with him.

It was true that the honest hardware man was held in greater esteem than the corporation's nominee, for although he had for many years taken part in municipal politics, he had worked with clean hands, and it was well understood he could never be made subservient to any trust or syndicate; yet, as the newspaper reporter who was the other occupant of the buggy pointed out, it was to be feared that money would talk so loudly as to render the voters deaf to worthier claims.

"I fear so, too," answered his friend; "and although I shall be disappointed if the election goes against me, yet I am still young enough to hope for something different by-and-by."

"In the near future, perhaps," replied the reporter, "for there are signs that people are getting tired of being ridden rough-shod over by corporations."

Just then the horse shied badly at something in the road.

"I wonder what that was?" exclaimed the driver.

"A paper parcel of something, I think," remarked the other, "but it was so covered with mud it is hard to say."

The driver at once reined in his horse. "Just hold him a moment, please, said he, "while I go and see."

The reporter laughed. "That is so like you, Mr. Johnson"

"I always pick up everything that comes my way," said the would-be Mayor.

"Did you ever find anything to reward you?"

"No," acknowledged the searcher.

"Then why go on wasting your time?"

"Habit is second nature,' rejoined the older man, getting out of the buggy and disappearing.

He returned with a pretty doll, which he had divested of its soiled covering.

"Some poor little girl is sorrowing for this," he observed, holding it up to view, "and I mean to try and find her."

The reporter laughed again. "I declare, Mr. Johnson, you sometimes remind me of the elderly knight who went tilting at a windmill with a brass wash basin on his head for a melmet!"

"Who in thunder was he?" inquired the doll finder.

"Too fine a gentleman ever to have lived, but in the book that relates his adventures he is called Don Quixote."

"Never heard of Don What's-his-name," said the hardware man, jogging his horse's reins," but I know the history of one who advised us to cast our bread on the water in the hopes it may return to us sevenfold."

And the reporter was silent.

Presently they overtook a plainly-dressed, everyday sort of woman going along the sidewalk holding the hand of a little girl who was crying bitterly. At sight of her, Mr. Johnson drove his horse up to the curb.

"I must trouble you again," he said, handing the reins to his friend, "for I believe this is the child I am looking for."

Getting down in front of them, he stopped them, saying:

"Excuse me, ma'am, but may I inquire what your daughter is crying for?"

"She has lost the doll I bought her downtown," answered the woman. "The package must have dropped from her arms as we stepped off the car, but we did not miss it till now."

On hearing these words, Mr. Johnson turned to the young mourner, saying: "Dry your eyes, Sissy;" producing as he spoke the doll from his pocket. No sooner did the child see it than, uttering a scream of joy, she seized it and clasped it to her bosom.

Then the woman, with such a sweet smile as almost made her pretty, inquired the name of the kind stranger who had rescued her daughter's plaything.

"Oh, that does not matter," said Mr. Johnson, turning away; but a voice called from the buggy: "He is Mr. Henry Johnson."

At the mention of the name a surprised expression came over the face of the woman and, addressing Mr. Johnson, she said: "Then, sir, you must be one of the candidates for Mayor?

Looking down on her with an answering smile, he acknowledged that he was.

She went on to say: "I have heard of you, sir, from my husband, who believes if you were elected you would be the right man in the right place, and he would vote for you if only you belonged to his party. He is on the fence at present, and is being urged not to scratch the ticket, but I think I will make him vote for you."

An awkward pause ensued, very much to the amusement of the listening reporter, who was thinking of "copy."

The aspirant for civic honor was a bachelor, and it was a new thought to him, this working of politics behind the matrimonial curtain.

At length he answered with some hesitation: "Pardon me, madam, but I do not think you ought to interfere with your husband's politics; believe me, these subjects are beyond the feminine horizon; women do not understand how men look on such matters; it may be a point of conscience with your husband to vote with his party."

These words of Mr. Johnson seemed to transform his hearer, for at once the pleasant smile left her countenance, and it became grim with the force of the will power that is the dominant characteristic of the American race. She had the narrow, sallow face and the high forehead of her type, also its regular features and thin straight lips. Her slight form quivered with the nervous, high-strung nrgy of many gurations of hard working men and women, as she replied: "He shall vote for you, or he shall not vote at all; for excuse me if I remind you that a straw shows which way the wind blows, and such consideration as you have shown in lessening the sorrow of a little child tells me that you would not be indifferent to the welfare of your townspeople. This is not the only good act of yours that I know of; there are many besides; but I have never heard of any to t' credit of the other candidate except such as would further his own advancement. I do not agree with you that politics are beyond what you call 'the feminine horizon,' for I am the president of a Rebecca lodge, and a member of the W.C.T.U., and in both societies we are accustomed to debate on such matters, for we believe that legislation should be equally beneficial to both men and women; it is lopsided if it is not, and against the best interests of he country. I will in future use all the influence I possess in both our sisterhoods, to induce every wife I am acquainted with to make her husband vote as I intend mine shall, and if you are not elected, I'll know the reason why."

Now, when women with such vim proclaim their intentions, what can poor men do? If they are wise, they will either acquiesce or remain silent. Mr. Johnson chose the latter course, so, lifting his hat with a profound bow, he smilingly bade the lady adieu.

"Good for you, friend Johnson!" cried the reporter, slapping his companion on the back when he rejoined him. "I confess I have now more hope of your election than I had before, for I am a married man myself, and I know when a woman sets her foot down like that, things begin to move."

"Mind, this is not for the newspapers," said the would-be Mayor with a warning look at the other man, who promised not to "write it up," and he kept his word; but he told his wife, and—well, that is another story.

The reporter's expectations were realized, for at the polls the good and honest citizen was head and shoulders above the nominee of the corporation.

Although the Mayor refused to let the incident become public during his term of office, yet in after years when he had retired to live on the moderate fortune he had acquired with much labor, he was fond of repeating the story to his friends, and he always ended by saying: "It was the doll that elected me."

THE POLITE TOOTHPICK.

The clubman, having finished his turkey dinner, picked his teeth.

"It is provincial," he explained, "to regard the use of a toothpick as impolite. The world's most fashionable restaurants—the Ritz, the Savoy, Paillard's and so on—set toothpicks on every table, each toothpick sealed in a little paper envelope.

"We have a town in Michigan, the town of Harbor Springs, which is devoted to the toothpick industry. Here a huge factory turns out 7,500,000 white birch toothpicks a day.

"The process is simple. The logs are sawed into bolts twenty-eight inches long. The bolts are steamed, and then sliced as thin as cardboard. The slices are cut into ribbons three inches wide, and the ribbons are run through a machine that drops into a basket on the right the finished toothpicks, and into a basket on the left the refuse splinters.

"Quill toothpicks mostly come from Joinville le Pont, a town near Paris. This town takes the quills of 2,000,000 geese, and produces 20,000,000 quill picks a year.

"If you ever see a man sneer at toothpick users, set him down at once as a provincial, as one ignorant of good form as it is conceived of in London, Paris, Cairo, the Riviera."

The old soldier, propped on his crutch in the snowy park, called:

"Here, Buster! Here, Buster!"

Half a dozen squirrels rattled down the bare trees and ran to him, but he drove them away.

"Git," he said. "I want Buster."

And finally Buster must have appeared, for the veteran allowed the seventh squirrel to run up his crutch and to take nuts from his coat pocket.

"Say, how can you tell one squirrel from another?" a bystander asked. "How do you know that's Buster?"

"By his face, of course, same as you know your friends," said the old soldier. "If you like 'em, you can tell squirrels by their faces, and sheep, and robins, and even Chinamen."

Across the Line.

LOWER CALIFORNIA, OUR LITTLE-KNOWN NEIGHBOR.

By a Special Contributor.

MAGDALENA BAY, with its miles of sheltered water, is, by the courtesy of Mexico, the favorite practice range for our war ships when on the Pacific Coast, and yet the country back of it is a terra incognita, although it is next door neighbor to our own California. It has recently been announced that the United States will be allowed to maintain two coaling ships at Magdalena Bay for a period of three years, provided a like concession is made by the United States.

Many are the tourists who take the short trip from San Diego, California, down to the little hamlet of Tia Juana, Baja California, in order that they may say to their eastern friends when they again see them that they have really been "abroad," for, in fact, they have been in a foreign country which, while the close neighbor of the United States on the south, is but little known to a great number.

While Tia Juana is thus the Mecca of the sightseers and souvenir card hunters, it is one of the smallest settlements on the peninsula of Lower California. It is the seat of some petty officers of the northern district of the Territory, but its curio stores and bull-ring are its chief claims to attention. The first port on the west coast, going south from San Diego, is Ensenada, which boasts of a population of about two thousand. Located on the beautiful bay of Todos Santos, it affords an excellent harbor and is the touching point for numerous steamers and coast-wise sailing vessels. From Ensenada many hunting parties go back into the interior, after the various kinds of game which abound there. The city is also the outfitting headquarters for prospectors and mining companies.

Lower California was the first land to bear the name that has since become almost a synonym for golden wealth. It was explored by Cortez only forty-three years after the discovery by Columbus of this continent, while our own portion of it had still been hardly stepped on. Then when the coast farther north became known, that was called Alta, or Upper, California. Gradually, however, as the more newly discovered land surpassed the former in importance, it arrogated to itself the title and left only the subordinate name to the peninsula.

It is small wonder that Lower California so soon yielded precedence to the smiling, fertile land of the north, for its main aspect is forbidding and dour. A small portion of its northern Pacific slope has productive plains that respond to a rainy season with crops sufficient to hearten the people over three or four dry years, and in the far south are some streams that carry water enough for limited irrigation, and at Mulegé and San Ignacio support a few groves of date palms and other fruits; but the gulf side for a distance more than half way down from the north is desert, pure and simple, and in the middle of the peninsula a broad belt of desert stretches from gulf to ocean. The occasional cases of struggling fertility only serve to emphasize the great barren wastes.

There is only one wooded mountain, great San Pedro Martir, near the northern end of the peninsula. The other mountains of black slate, of hard, biting lava, or of cold, gray granite stand out naked with nothing to hide their outlines. Huge San Pedro rises to a height of nearly 10,000 feet, and its top presents miles of fine timber. It is high enough to intercept summer rains and winter snows, and in the spring the rancheros of San José de Manriques, Rosarito and San Juan de Dios drive their herds to its summit and pasture them there till the fall cold of that high altitude drives them down again.

The fastnesses of San Pedro guard numerous streams, some of which on the eastern side start out bravely from the mountain, but are immediately sucked up by the sands of the desert. On the western side, however, the streams flow with somewhat greater assurance. One of them is turned from its channel and carried along the skirt of the mountain for twenty miles to wash gold from the placers of Socorro, but it is a clear case of robbing Peter to pay Paul, for by diverting the water the bread was taken from the mouths of the farmers of the San Rafael Arroyo.

San Antonio Creek for a short distance is a fairly typical mountain stream, a rushing little river, flowing through its own dense growth of alders and alamos. It proves the mountain quality of its water, too, by sheltering speckled trout that reach the very respectable size of twelve inches, the only trout, I am sure, on the peninsula. Indeed San Antonio is the only stream in the northern half of the peninsula that can successfully resist a long drought, and even that fails by many miles of reaching the ocean.

In the arroyo of Santa Tomas and San Vicente water rises and flows for two or three miles in quantity sufficient to irrigate quite respectable fields, and at Rosarito and San Juan de Dios it comes in smaller volume and flows for a shorter distance.

In short, the streams that really flow, even for a very short distance, may be counted on one's fingers. It is quite possible that intelligent effort expended along the foothills of San Pedro might develop water in greater abundance, but farther south the mountains are too low and the rainfall far too scanty to make such a result probable. There most of the waters that rise are nauseous with salt, soda, alkali or other minerals, and in the real desert portions of the peninsula even such waters are perhaps fifty or seventy-five miles apart.

In these regions the only really potable water is found in rock "tinajas" where it is conserved from the very infrequent rains. Of course, these tinajas are usually small and their store can only be used by the casual traveler for himself and his animals. Even then they may become dry if rains should be delayed for a couple of years or so longer than usual. Among the laval mountains of the gulf slope, however, there are large tinajas; one was observed some fifteen feet across and as many feet deep. This one was in a narrow cañon, so situated that the sun never reached it and it was always cool. Strangely enough its water was swarming with tiny fish not more than half an inch in length, though there were no streams for many miles and this rock basin was filled wholly by rains.

Lower California has encouraged golden dreams ever since its Spanish discoverers imagined that the new land would overflow their coffers with wealth. Their hopes were dashed, as have been the hopes of most other expectant searchers. A brilliant exception is presented by the great copper mines of Santa Rosalia, owned by the Rothschilds. The gold mines of Alamo, Real de Castillo and Calmalli have also yielded considerable bullion. More recently marvelous tales have come from placers on the gulf shore, near Santa Maria. As these placers, however, are located in a difficult desert, and the most ready communication with them is had by way of the gulf and Sonora, it is quite safe to tell marvelous tales about them. Indeed, I think that most of the wonderful stories about Lower California have been encouraged by the fact that the peninsula is so little known, and so difficult of access, that verification of the stories is almost impossible.

Besides the gold and copper mines an excellent quality of onyx is quarried at Marmol, the name, by the way, itself meaning marble. But the treasures that have been most attractive to all, from the days of the Spanish discoverers to the present time, are the pearls that are taken from the waters of the gulf. Formerly they were numerous and not infrequently very valuable ones were found, but from lack of intelligent protection the fisheries have been almost destroyed. They still, however, yield the most valuable black and gray pearls known to commerce.

As Mexico interposes no restrictions to the hunter, Lower California is as yet an ideal field for the sportsman's operations, that is, if one could get along without drinking and his pack animals without grazing. The bighorn, which is the game par excellence of the Rockies, and is abundant in portions of the peninsula, seems to care nothing for water, and his pasturage must be ghostly, for he enjoys most rocky, lofty pinnacles, where he skims up and down perpendicular cliffs as though he were winged.

The northern bighorn is a beautiful animal with gray sides, white haunches outlined with black, and black over the shoulders, with the crowning glory of the enormous horns, which are carried in so regal a manner. There are sections where these animals, so rare now with us that their killing is prohibited, are so numerous that the veriest tyro with a gun could not help shooting some of them. To enter where the mountain sheep live, however, one must be well used to deserts and know how to hunt for their hidden waters, and even then he would run great risk unless he had with him a man who was familiar with the region he expected to traverse, or unless he possessed such a knowledge of Spanish that he could get explicit directions from some native who knew the country well. But difficult as the country is, the pot-hunter in search of meat and hides found a way of entering. At a little soda spring in the Arroyo Asamblea there was a barricade from behind which some butcher had murdered at least one hundred sheep, as testified by the skulls lying about. Not all who entered there succeeded so well, for at the rancho of San Luis, which is the nearest good water to the best of the bighorn stamping grounds, I was told that three men had at different times been found in the last stages of exhaustion from thirst, and that one of them failed to recover.

Lower California was a pioneer also in another direction besides in the matter of name; it offered a field to the Franciscans before they established missions that now stand as interesting monuments of their courage and perseverance along our own portion of the coast. There is a string of these missions, reaching from San José del Cabo to La Mision Vieja, a distance of nearly eight hundred miles, and greater than the entire length of the State of California.

Except in the southern part of the peninsula these buildings were constructed entirely of adobe and are now in ruins. San Vicente, probably the largest of them all, is now but a great collection of mounds of earth, and at Santo Tomas there is nothing whatever left. Even the acolytes and converts who went to rest in the old cemetery now serve to nourish a modern vineyard.

Santa Maria, also ruined, is in a beautiful but almost inaccessible cañon. Above it is a rough mountain of bare granite, down which an apology for a trail has been worn through hundreds of years. In the narrow and deep cañon below are crowded huge boulders, which would be as impassable to the horse of the East as though it were a perpendicular wall. But the little mules and burros of the country are daunted by nothing that yields to man. Here, past the ruined walls of the mission buildings, flows a little stream of water which nourishes a magnificent palmar, a forest of great trunks bearing royal crowns, any one of which would put to shame the finest specimen of the Washingtonia filimentosa growing in California.

Legends of buried treasure cling to many of the old missions. It is supposed that the Frailes, when they were driven from Mexico, buried the wealth which they dared not attempt to take with them. At Calamogé this treasure is said to consist of a great hoard of pearls, and in a giant cardon growing at [illegible] of the main building is driven a peg which is supposed to indicate, in connection with certain [illegible] cryptic numbers, the exact spot in the [illegible] where the riches repose.

Magdalena Bay is not the only fine harbor which the peninsula possesses, for the coast of the gulf is indented by numberless bays, at least one of them, the Bay of the Angels, being big enough and deep enough to shelter a whole navy, with room for [illegible]. Indeed the narrow and tremendously long gulf is really a great harbor in itself, and its entrance might be defended against an enemy.

The Bay of the Angels is almost landlocked by the great island, the Guardian Angel, which, with its numerous attending islets, lies across its entrance. Its waters are swarming with fish, from huge whales whose booming is never silent, to savage sharks and down to tiny sardines.

On the shore of this bay is a spring which is almost the only pure water for a distance of more than a hundred miles in either direction. In its seepage some early philanthropist planted two date palms whose feathery crests show graceful applique upon the [illegible] mountain.

This, the Angel Spring, completes the heavenly [illegible], and is a favorite camping place for Yaqui Indians who live on the abounding fish, turtles and clams of what is a very Paradise for the indolent.

The fleet of vessels which now operate between [illegible] Diego and Lower California numbers five, of which the chief is the St. Denis, a steel hull steamer of 515 [illegible] tonnage.

Of this fleet, the St. Denis belongs to the Lower California Development Company, a company composed of English capitalists, whose object, as outlined in its charter from the Mexican government, is to colonize and develop the peninsula. The St. Denis makes seven or eight trips each month between San Diego and Ensenada, the port of entry in the northern part of the territory.

Among the mines being developed are those of the San Fernando Mining Company, located about 225 miles south of Ensenada, in which the Brophy interests predominate. Six hundred tons of copper matte have been shipped thence the past year. On the bay of Santa Rosalia, another southern port, is the shipping place of the Beryl Mining Company, whose mines are known as the Columbia. At this company's camp a ten-stamp mill has recently been installed, and the prospects look bright for those interested. About forty tons of ore is being handled daily by the large force of men employed by the company.

At Calmille, still farther south, are the mines of the Ibarra Gold Mining Company, whose output is handled by the Beryl Mining Company.

During the past year there has been increased activity in the onyx industry, one of the features of Lower California which is bringing its name more and more into public notice. The chief promoters along this line are the men connected with the New Pedrara Mexican Onyx Company. This corporation, holding a charter under northern laws, buys the output of the Pedrara Mexican Onyx Company, which is the corporation whose charter permits it to do business below the line.

The quarries are located sixty miles back in the interior from the little port of Santa Catarina, about two hundred miles down the coast from San Diego. At this port the company has recently extended its wharf to 350 feet further into the water, so that its lighters can be loaded in any stage of the tides. Until this was built it was impossible to work for many hours at a time at this part of the handling of the raw material.

From the quarries, it is necessary to haul the blocks of rough onyx by an eighteen-mule team on a wagon and two trailers to the port. The trip makes necessary two night stops each way.

The company's force of thirty men at the quarries has, during the past year, made a total output of close to 18,000 cubic feet, of which 16,000 has been shipped to San Diego. As some of the blocks weigh two tons, it can be seen that the work of handling them in a heavy sea is no small one, and the men who operate the lighters have to exercise great care. At its factory in San Diego the company has recently installed much new machinery.

Numerous islands dot the seacoast of the peninsula. Besides their valuable metals and minerals, some of them are making wealth for the enterprising men who are shipping from them. Taken altogether, Lower California offers an attractive field to those men who wish to carry on prospecting and mine development, as the Mexican government at present is willing to grant concessions to any legitimate operators, in order to bring more residents into the territory. The present population is estimated at from forty to fifty thousand. There is room for many times that number, and it is probable that the next few years will see a large increase.

WHERE WOMAN EXCELS.

"Woman's sense of color is better than man's. While one in thirty women are slightly color-blind, one in five men are so."

The speaker, a physician, continued his experiments with the tintometer, or testing machine.

"You," he said, "can't tell green from blue, and are therefore defective, sir. But you are not absolutely color blind. Absolutely color-blind persons are very rare. I have met but one. He couldn't tell [illegible] from yellow, or yellow from blue.

"Why are men's eyes less reliable than women's as regards color? Some say it is the tobacco smoke that dulls and weakens them. This may very well be, for I have noticed that non-smokers have a somewhat [illegible] vision."

Good Short Stories.

BRIEF ANECDOTES GATHERED FROM VARIOUS SOURCES.

Genuine Indifference.

JACK ABERTHENEY, the Rough Rider, can catch a wolf alive by grabbing its lower jaw with his bare hand.

Mr. Abertheney, on his last visit to Washington, was asked by a reporter for his opinion on a certain political question.

"I can't give you an opinion on that question," the Rough Rider replied, "because it's a question I pay no attention to. I am indifferent to it—as indifferent as the backwoodsman's wife.

"That lady, you know, looked on while her husband had a fierce hand-to-hand tussle with a bear, and afterward she said it was 'the only fight she ever saw where she didn't care who won.'"

A Mark of Genius.

AT the recent sale of the superb and priceless Stanford White collection, Miss Elsie De Wolfe, the well-known actress and connoisseur, told a not inappropriate architect story.

"A gentleman stopped an architect on the street," she began.

"'Good morning, Mr. Blank,' the architect said. 'Are you thinking of building again?'

"'No,' said the other. 'I stopped you to inquire if you could take my son into your office as an apprentice. With training I think he would some day prove a magnificent architect.'

"'He has shown some talent, has he?' said the architect, a trifle glumly, for he was disappointed at not getting another contract.

"'Talent? Genius, sir; positive genius!'

"'Humph. What's he done?'

"'He designed a garden for our Christmas tree.'

"'Well, what is there remarkable about it?' said the architect impatiently.

"'Why, sir,' said the other, 'he designed that garden for $2, and it cost $37.'"

She Saw Her.

"THE late Clara Bloodgood," said a theatrical manager of Chicago, "was as witty as she was talented and beautiful. Sometimes, indeed, her keen wit carried her rather far.

"I remember once, at a tea at the Auditorium, a remark that the brilliant actress made to a society woman.

"'You were at Bar Harbor, I believe, in the summer?' said the society woman.

"'Yes,' said the actress.

"'And did you see much of my daughter there?'

"'Rather!' was the answer. 'She wore a bathing suit in the morning, riding bloomers in the afternoon, and low neck at night.'"

Exposing a Thorax.

DR. LEOPOLD JACHES of Cornell's medical school recently returned from a study of the use of the Roentgen rays abroad. Pausing in an account of his tour, Dr. Jaches said:

"Abroad, as here at home, the great public's knowledge of the rays continues rather vague. Investigators receive all manner of queer letters and requests. Thus I heard in Berlin of a man who wrote to a specialist:

"'Dear Sir: I have had a bullet in my thorax for seven years. I am too busy to come to Berlin, but hope you will come down here with your rays, as my case should be worth your while. If you cannot come, send a packet of rays, with instructions as to use, etc., and I will see if I cannot manage to work them myself.'

"The specialist replied:

"'Dear Sir: I am sorry that my engagements prevent my coming to see you, and that I am out of rays just now. If you cannot come to Berlin yourself, send me your thorax by express, and I will do the best I can with it.'"

A Bachelor on Marriage.

PETER Y. HAINES, a rich bachelor of Duluth, gave a New Year's dinner to seventeen bachelor friends, whereat each guest had to give a good reason against marriage.

"My own reason against marriage," the host said, "is embodied in a remark that I overheard this morning at the railway station.

"A strong, masterful-looking woman was bidding farewell to a small, slender man. The man's manner was meek, but it changed slightly as the woman got safely ensconced in her seat in the train, and before he hurried away, he shouted through the car window at her in quite a vindictive way:

"'And be sure, my love, to send me a nice long curtain lecture from time to time. I shall hardly manage to get to sleep without one, you know.'"

Crabbed Age.

AT the dinner that the Chicago Press Club gave last month in Edward Payson Weston's honor, the veteran pedestrian said of old age:

"Age is no crime, but you would think so from the way some people try to conceal it. We can give the lie to age by being gay, vigorous, buoyant, and it is foolish of us to resent our burden of years in any other manner.

"The aged Ben Davies of St. Joseph resented his years in a foolish, crusty, surly way.

"'Hello, old man Davies!' an elderly St. Joseph lawyer said to him one morning.

"'Old!' Davies snarled. 'Old, hey? Well, how about yourself? I'm no older than you are. What's your earliest recollection?'

"The lawyer grinned at old man Davies and replied:

"'Well, let me see. Yes, I think that's it. My earliest recollection is hearing folks say: "There goes old man Davies."'"

Scarcer There Than Here.

MISS BLANCHE BATES, the eminent actress, in the course of a luncheon that she gave at Sherry's, in New York, to her sister artiste, Miss Geraldine Farrar, said a witty thing about marriage.

"In heaven, we are told," she remarked, "there is no marriage nor giving in marriage."

She smiled and added:

"No wonder, when there are not men enough even here to go round."

Economy in Excess.

JAMES J. HILL, the well-known railway magnate, was talking in Kansas City about railway economy:

"Economy is excellent," he said, "but even economy must not be carried to excess. Railways must not be managed as a certain New York necktie manufacturer manages his business. A drummer in this man's employ showed me the other day a letter from the firm. It ran thus:

"'We have received your letter with expense account. What we want is orders. We have big families to make expenses for us. We find in your expense account 50 cents for billiards. Please don't buy any more billiards. Also we see $2.25 for horse and buggy. Where is the horse, and what did you do with the buggy? The rest of your expense account is nothing but bed. Why is it you don't ride more in the night time?

"'John says you should stop in Boston, where his cousin George Moore lives. John says you should sell Moore a good bill. Give good prices—he is John's cousin. Sell him mostly for cash. Also John says you can leave Boston at 11:45 in the night, and get to Concord at 4:35 in the morning. Do this—and you won't need any bed. And remember, what we want is orders.'"

The Impudent Waiter.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN, at a theatrical dinner in New York, told some reminiscences of theatrical deadheads.

"Then there was Blank," said Mr. Hammerstein. "Blank's impudence was second only to that of a waiter I heard about the other day.

"'Look here, waiter,' said a guest, 'this fish is not cooked properly.'

"'I know it, sir,' said the waiter, 'but you told me it was for your wife.'

"'Well, what of that?' asked the surprised guest.

"'Why,' said the waiter, 'I knew that if the lady was your wife she couldn't be very particular.'"

Speculation's Ups and Downs.

TO a reporter who recently consulted him about his many charities, Charles M. Schwab gave some good advice on speculating.

"Ignorant as you are of the stock market," said Mr. Schwab, "you would be more than foolish to speculate. You would have to rely on others for advice, and you know what other people's advice comes to. For instance:

"'You bought that stock on Smith's advice, didn't you?' said one man to another.

"'Yes,' said the second man. 'Smith gave me five excellent reasons why it had to go up.'

"'And what has he got to say now?'

"'He now gives me five excellent reasons why it had to go down.'"

Very Aristocratic Indeed.

SIR CLIFTON ROBINSON, the head of the London tramway system, said at a railway dinner in New York:

"There is a class in London that will not use the cars—hence our abundance of hansoms. This class is aristocratic. It cannot mingle with the vulgar herd. But it is not foolishly aristocratic, like the Italian countess I heard of recently.

"This lady sat in her salon in the Corso in Rome, watching a footman dusting a collection of old family portraits.

"The footman, naturally, under his mistress's eye, worked very hard and got very warm.

"The countess noted this, and said haughtily:

"'Ascanio, I perceive that you are becoming overheated. You may go outside and perspire a bit.'"

A Nature Faker.

W. E. D. STOKES, the New York capitalist, was laughing, at a dinner, over the way he had hoaxed the naturalists of the New York Zoo with two ducks.

The ducks were hybrids; Mr. Stokes dropped them in the Zoo pond, and then wrote anonymously to the authorities that he had seen a pair of rare Arctic ducks there. The authorities, deceived, announced gravely that two Arctic ducks in some strange way had come to New York and kindly taken up their quarters at the Zoo.

"Now that the authorities know I hoaxed them," said Mr. Stokes, "they are vexed and disappointed, eh? Disgusted with themselves, don't you think? Like the Yonkers woman.

"A Yonkers woman upbraided her husband because, notwithstanding a New Year's resolution to drop the club, he put on his hat one night and said he would not return till late.

"'The club again, eh? What of your resolution? Oh, George, you have no stability. You are a very reed in the wind. Shame on you, sir!'

"So the woman went on, but her husband shrugged his shoulders sulkily and trudged out of the room.

"She resolved to wait up for him. She sat by the radiator with a book till 2 in the morning. It was dull, chilly work. The book was stupid, and the fire got low. At length she gave in, and went drowsily upstairs to bed.

"There, snoring like a hurricane, her husband lay. He had changed his mind about going out, and had retired early instead.

"The woman, as she looked at him, was, like the Zoo authorities, rather disgusted, eh?"

A Disappointment.

"I WAS talking, on my trip West, to Luther Burbank, the plant wizard, about the thornless cactus he has sent to the National Museum in Washington," said a Washington journalist.

"Mr. Burbank said that he had changed the aspect of many plants, but not so much, perhaps, as people thought. People expected greater changes than he could give. His achievements sometimes disappointed them—even as a lawyer of Los Angeles had been disappointed one day.

"This lawyer said to a friend:

"'Would you believe it? Today I round out my sixty-ninth year.'

"'Impossible!' exclaimed the friend. 'Why, you scarcely look 68.'"

Where Prices Run High.

"THE late H. O. Havemeyer," said a sugar jobber of New Orleans, "possessed in a marked degree the kindly virtue of charity.

"On my last visit to New York—it was some months before the panic—I spoke harshly of a millionaire who had been accused of double dealing in connection with a bank.

"'Well, now,' said Mr. Havemeyer, 'let us not condemn this man unheard. Remember that his guilt has not yet been proved, nor has he yet told his own side of the story.'

"Then Mr. Havemeyer laughed and said that in the most untoward conditions accused men were often able to clear themselves. He said a young girl a week or so after Christmas complained bitterly to her mother:

"'Mamma, I doubt if I shall be happy with George. I fear he is deceptive and false.'

"'Why, darling, what do you mean?' the mother asked.

"'Well, mamma,' said the young girl earnestly, 'you know that collar pin he gave me for Christmas? He swore to me that he paid $25 for it, but in Biffany's today I saw its exact counterpart for $5.'

"'Ah, but, my child,' said the mother with true charity, 'you must remember how very religious George is. Undoubtedly he bought the pin at a church fair.'"

A Quaint Compliment.

ON Mark Twain's seventy-second birthday a Hartford clergyman said of him:

"No wonder he finds happiness in old age. All the aged would be happy if they were as sympathetic and as kind as he. He is continually going out of his way to please others, and the result is that he is continually pleasing himself.

"Listen, for instance, to the quaint compliment he paid me the last time he came to hear me preach. He waited for me at the church door at the service's end, and, shaking me by the hand, said gravely:

"'I mean no offense, but I feel obliged to tell you that the preaching this morning has been of a kind that I can spare. I go to church, sir, to pursue my own train of thought. But today I couldn't do it. You interfered with me. You forced me to attend to you, and lost me a full half-hour. I beg that this may not occur again.'"

The New York Idea.

LANGDON MITCHELL, whose brilliant comedy, "The New York Idea," makes a slashing attack upon divorce, was recently asked at the Franklin Inn, a Philadelphia literary club, what his attitude on divorce was.

"Oh," said Mr. Mitchell, "there are cases where I believe divorce necessary and right. There are cases for instance, where the very young are hurried into marriage by their parents.

"'But do you think your daughter and I are suited to each other, madam?' a prospective bridegroom of this class once asked.

Rather Injurious.

SURGEON-GENERAL RIXEY was talking in Washington about his recent statement concerning the harm that cigarettes do sailors.

"Let them defend the cigarette as they please," he said; "whenever I hear these defences I think of the sick horse and the turpentine.

"Tom met Bill on the road one day.

"'Bill, I want a word with you,' he said.

"'Be quick, then,' said Bill. 'I'm in a hurry.'

"'What did you give your sick horse the other day?'

"'A pint of turpentine.'

"Tom hurried home, and poured a pint of turpentine down the throat of his own ailing nag, which at once grew worse, and in an hour was dead.

"Then Tom, dusgusted with Bill's veterinary ability, sought him out.

"'Why, Bill,' he said, 'I gave my horse a pint of turpentine, and it killed him.'

"'So it did mine,' said Bill."

The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

NATIVE PLANTS.

THIS SEASON EXCEPTIONALLY GOOD FOR SECURING THEM.

By Ernest Braunton.

IT has been quite a lapse of years since we have had such a splendid season for securing native plants for our gardens as in the present one. The early rains were not sufficient to start the hardwooded plants into active growth, and the subsequent long dry spell has left them fairly crazed for a chance to grow. In such a condition they may be moved with more chance of success than under any other circumstances. It is well to remember that all our foothill trees and shrubs need a well-drained soil, so that the place prepared should be deeply stirred that no stagnation of water about the roots will occur when we have copious rains (now expected daily.) Some attention should also be paid to shade and sun. Shrubs taken from northern slopes should not be planted in the garden where the hot sun of summer will bake the earth about the roots; it matters less if the tops are in a heated atmosphere.

When moving these plants secure the smallest ones you may find, dig up all the roots you can secure within a reasonable distance from the trunk and prune back the largest only to a convenient length for handling, leaving all the small feeders possible. These roots should either be put in a pail of water, puddled in mud or wrapped in wet moss, paper or cloth. Under no circumstances should they be allowed to dry, not even for a single minute. Your success will depend largely upon keeping all roots moist from the time you uncover them until you replant them in the garden. Few of our shrubs and trees but prefer a free friable soil and native plants should not have heavy adobe or soil containing fertilizers put close around the roots. All this feeding is a matter to leave until the plants are well established in their new home and therefore in a condition to assimilate plant food. Under no circumstances should stable manure be brought in contact with the roots of any plant, and if this is done with our native vegetation, death usually results. A good thorough watering should be given after planting and the earth firmly packed about roots and stem so that wind will not loosen the anchorage before root action starts.

There is a peculiar appropriateness about our native plants that should appeal to all garden owners. We have a climate unique, no other just like it, and while we may grow plants from every quarter of the globe, many of them with us need special treatment, soil, situation, etc., or they do not grow satisfactorily. Not so our native plants; they are always in their native element and unless man violates some of the natural conditions nearly everywhere present success is assured. Their strongest and most needed qualification is that once firmly established they will stand six months of drought without manifesting the lack of water; no drooping or dropping of leaves or dying back of branches. Should we have an unusually hot spell of weather or hot, drying winds, they do not become scorched and unsightly for the rest of the season, and they are strong and sturdy under any stress of weather or rapidly-changing conditions. They all appear to be so perfectly at home that they give to many a garden a charm of the woodland which but for these natives would not be present. In a garden of pampered exotics they have a harmonizing influence so that the whole appears somewhat Californian and therefore fitting and proper. Time will more and more bring a proper appreciation of native plants and it is pleasing to note that many public and private gardens are now being planted, in whole or part, to native vegetation.

THE CANARY ISLAND DATE PALM.

Plant Bulbs Freely.

Keep on planting bulbs in variety; no risk is run, as few perish at any season of the year or under any ordinary garden conditions; nearly all multiply annually so that each succeeding year brings a larger and more satisfactory crop of blossoms. No class of plants give better returns for care bestowed and the small space necessary for full development than the bulbs most common to our gardens.

A Plant for Ingrates.

A yellow-flowering Mexican shrub with a flower of buttercup blossoms present over a long period is Casia tomentosa. For people who plant and neglect it is especially recommended, for it needs no care; in fact, if it is well watered and in rich soil it grows too rank with a consequent lack of flowers. For dry sterile soils it is one of the most satisfactory plants obtainable; it is at all times more showy than the average shrub on our long nursery lists.

A Long Season.

Owing to freedom from the visitations of Jack Frost, we have this season had a long flowering period for strictly tropical plants. Elephants' Ears still retain their perfect leaves and the canna continues blooming. No harm will result if both are now taken up and stored in a cool dry place for spring planting. If in need of division or planting in a new position storage at this time is particularly desirable.

IDEAL STREETS.

FINANCIAL AS WELL AS ESTHETIC SIDE TO BE CONSIDERED.

THE esthetic side of street building and planting has been harped on so much that at times we lose sight of the undeniable fact that the financial side is of equally more importance. Well paved or graded streets, flanked by broad parkways planted to suitable trees, are of far more value to a city or section than all other classes of public improvements combined. A comparison of our own streets with those of even small cities anywhere east of the Mississippi is apt to make the average Angeleno pessimistic, and we may as well come out with the statement that Los Angeles has not at present a single street running ten consecutive blocks that will at all compare with those to be found in hundreds of small Eastern cities ranging from 10,000 to 50,000 inhabitants. What time will bring forth no one may with any assurance say, but all we have at present is some good roadbed—we still lack the broad parkways and fine tree growths of uniform species so common to what we are pleased to term the "less favored States east of the Rockies."

Returning Californians are often quite bitter in their denunciation of our apparent shiftlessness as compared with other States. Mr. William M. Humphreys of the Los Angeles Park Commission has lately returned from a very extensive visit to the country lying between the Mississippi and the Atlantic and showed the writer some views of numerous little almost unheard of cities whose parkways of from ten to twenty feet in width planted to fine, large, arching trees, stretched throughout the municipalities from east to west and from north to south, each and every street closely approaching the ideal. One little city in particular was noted by the writer, Monmouth, Illinois, where several streets were shown that for beauty far surpassed any we have. It is folly to say that we cannot match them. All our citizens know we can produce equally desirable effects in much less time. The question then arises as to why we do not have them and why we are building none at present. Why do not our public officials exercise a little more of just good, plain, common sense in planning our streets? Streets which will always be maintained for traffic incident to residences only are laid out with the same narrow parkways and the same broad roadways as our busiest business thoroughfares. To cite an instance of this freakish street planning we may consider Elgin street, on which the writer lives. It is but three block long, will never be longer, is a "cross street" (at right angles with 90 per cent. of all traffic,) and is only used for the few delivery wagons necessary to supply the daily needs of the residents. Yet the paved roadway is of the same width of that of the main thoroughfare, on two of which latter there are double-tracked car lines. The parkways are but three feet wide. Ten feet could be added to each parkway and still there would be more street remaining than the traffic demands, and such an arrangement would add at least one-third to the property values for residential purposes. The parklike effects obtainable on such streets through coöperative planting would lend the charm of garden beauty to all frontage and do much to overcome the monotonous artificiality of city life, by proclaiming the section as one of home-owners and not of the landlord-and-tenant class. We shall never have a beautiful street unless the change is made.

Overcrowding Street Trees.

Do not over-plant streets. Allow each tree sufficient room so that when fully grown its individual beauty will not be lost. Trees so planted always make the most satisfactory growth; their root system starts forth equally distributed in all directions. If placed too close to each other, when of large size the space between trees is soon exhausted of plant food and completely filled with roots; then the feeders make a frantic rush at right angles to the row, seeking plant food wherever most easily obtained. In country districts this often results in these starving trees sending their roots into orchards, comparatively near the surface, and nearly destroying the nearest row of fruit trees.

A most thorough preparation of a deep soil bed for the young trees will start a rooting system down deep in the natural reservoir of plant food and the feeders will not then push up near the surface to forage because of short rations at home. Roots reaching into and interfering with orchard or garden may, in the case of old trees, be cut by digging a trench parallel with the row and cutting them off. If the tops are also properly pruned, the tree will not need such an extensive root system to support it. If the street tree is given an occasional feed and cultivation, as is always the case with orchard trees, they might be induced to board at home for all time. The need of ample room, if we are to secure the best tree development, is strikingly shown in the case of the common blue gum, a forest tree. When grown in commercial plantations or shelter belts it sends up a tall straight shaft with scarcely a branch of any note. When standing alone it develops a handsome, umbrageous form and often makes an ideal shade tree.

Boulevards Needed.

Both the Mayor and Park Commission have recommended a boulevard connecting Elysian and Griffith parks, the suggestion also appearing in this department in advance of their public recommendations, which only proves that several great minds often run in the same channel of thought. To be serious about the matter, the subject is one of great importance to our people, and did the abutting property owners but realize the value of such a highway, they would at once build it at their own expense, for a short time only would be needed to prove it a paying investment. This subject of connecting our parks with boulevards so that we may have a park "system" is one that has been too little agitated or discussed. Every municipal architect visiting our city has noted their absence, as has every intelligent student of our parks. During the past summer some fine road building has been under way in Elysian Park so that a connecting link along the scenic river route from Griffith park would give us a grand drive into the city by way of Fremont Gate on Buena Vista street. All who have driven over the proposed route are very enthusiastic in support of the measure.

Washingtonia Filifera.

It now appears, from a recent revision of the genus Washingtonia, by S. B. Parish, that the above is the correct name of the majority of fan palms now so much planted upon our streets. A careful perusal of all scientific literature on the subject, with equally careful inquiry into the source of supply of the seeds first sent to Europe from the resultant plants of which the descriptions were drawn, has convinced Mr. Parish (and other botanists) that our palms have simply been passing under the wrong names, merely a case of "swap." Much confusion has resulted from the unsatisfactory and insufficient knowledge of just what the palms are, and in a future issue we will endeavor to put the vexed problem at rest. As three species have been frequently treated in these pages, the proposed changes may be designated as follows: What has been known as W. robusta is W. filifera; the one the writer has thought Sonorae (the more slender of the three) is W. gracilis; the common California fan palm, native to this State, the stoutest and oldest of our palms, is the W. filifera variety robusta. Such an arrangement may temporarily add to the present confusion among nurserymen, but is satisfactory to our leading botanists (and it seems to be) and will for the first time place these palms on a sure and satisfactory base for easy determination.

A LONE BLUE GUM.

Privets for Street Planting.

Out at Montebello, on at least two streets, there is planted a species of ligustrum, of privet ,of a decidedly arborescent habit, that makes an ideal street tree. In addition to the general points of excellence common to our best street trees, this privet has the desirable qualification of being easily and safely moved when of a considerable size with a comparatively small ball of soil. Trees of two to three inches in diameter of stem and a height of ten feet will not wilt but readily take root and resume normal growth when moved with fifty pounds of soil. With a tree so easily handled we may have effective street tree alignment at the end of the first year after planting.

Confusion in Acacias.

Among the many blackwoods (Acacia melanoxylon) planted on our streets, we occasionally find one or more trees a little more robust in habit, darker green in foliage, more spreading in habit, leaves more nearly round and concave on one side (dish-shaped,) that the writer believes is A. latifolia. It is not one whit less desirable than the blackwood; quite to the contrary, it is a better tree in all respects. When small, in pot or can, these trees can scarcely be recognized as differing from the more common species, but with age the specific differences each year become more apparent.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

POMONA'S POULTRY SHOW.

THE ENTERPRISE AN EMINENTLY SUCCESSFUL ONE.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experiences with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

WHAT was possibly the first poultry show ever held in the central portion of the San Gabriel Valley was "pulled off" in Pomona during the week of January 4. In the character of its exhibits and the class of men who fathered the enterprise, it was essentially the Country Gentleman's Poultry Show. All told, there were cooped about 400 birds, embracing all the leading breeds in the American, Asiatic and Mediterranean classes, with a good showing of bantams and pigeons. The Los Angeles Poultry Association had kindly loaned its coops to the Pomona fanciers, thus making the undertaking feasible and at the same time self-sustaining. S. Tyler of Pasadena and Frank Thomas of Los Angeles officiated as judges.

The largest class were the White Plymouth Rocks, of which there must have been some fifty specimens. The quality was high, the first cock and hen being especially good. Plumage in all of the better birds was free from brassiness and the shape and head and leg points were all good. The first-prize pen was a beauty.

Barred Rocks came in as a close second in numbers, and were on the whole a fine lot. Some of the males were a trifle light in plumage, while a number of the hens were somewhat sooty in color of feather. Bean in the beak was also noticeable—a defect, but not a disqualification.

The Black Minorcas were among the best we have seen anywhere this year. The first cock, hen, pullet and cockerel were ideal, perfect in shape, fine color of plumage and good head points. A criticism applying to some of the birds was combs a trifle too large and beefy and wry or squirrel tails. The Minorca should be a somewhat long and keel-like shape with a graceful sweep to the tail.

In Wyandottes there were the Whites, Buffs, Silver Penciled and Silver Laced. Of these the Whites and Buffs were the best, the first White male being an exceptionally fine bird, good in shape, blocky and pure white in color.

The Leghorns were represented by the Browns, the Whites, the Buffs and R. C. Buffs. The whole lot impressed the writer as undersized. There were some fine specimens in each of the varieties, though the exhibits were rather limited as to numbers, the Browns predominating.

The Games were represented by a number of Pet Games, and in the Bantam by one lonely specimen of a male Black Breasted Red.

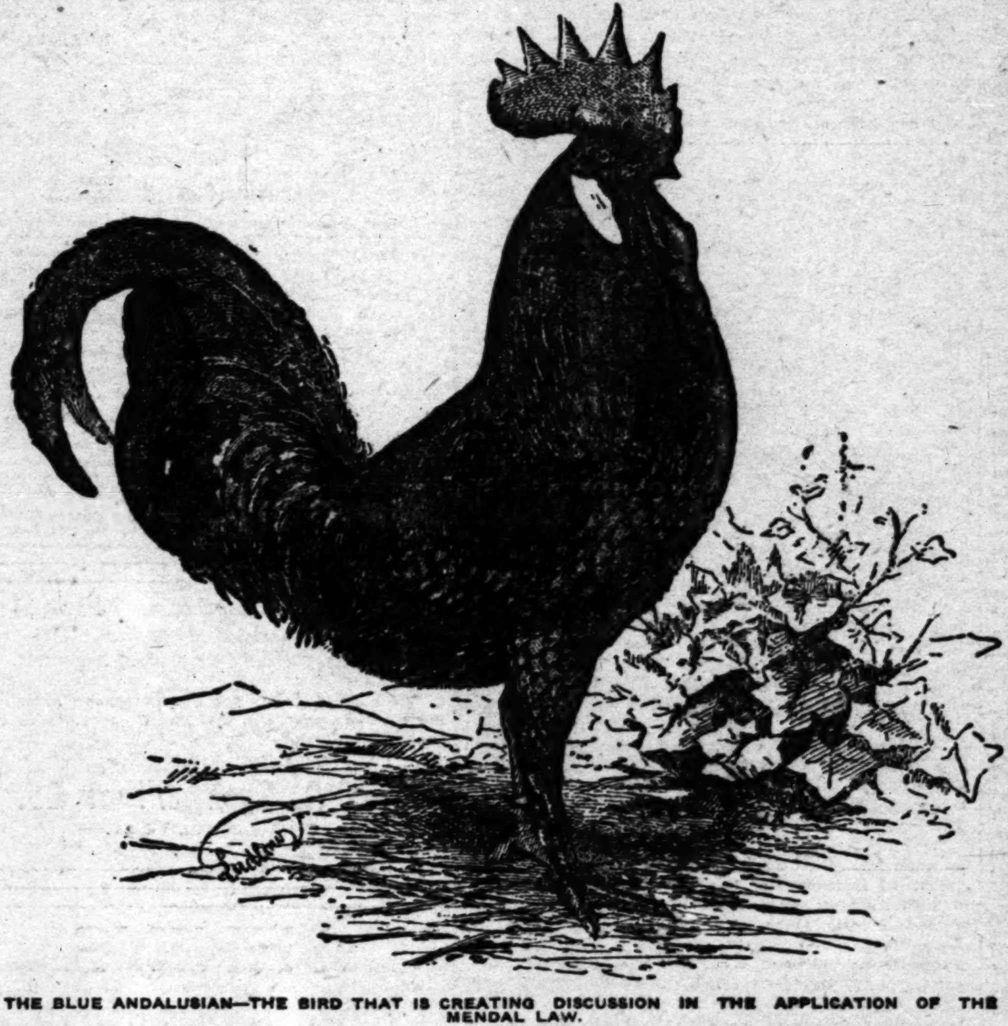
The exhibit of Light Brahmas was one of the strongest number we have seen this year, showing good quality. This sterling breed has not been so much in evidence of late years as formerly, which is to be regretted, because possessing fine attractions for table purposes, especially as roosters.

In the English class the Buff Orpingtons occupied first place, followed by the Red Caps and Cornish fowl. The two former showed some high quality specimens, but the latter were somewhat deficient in the elements constituting a first-class show specimen.

In the Bantam class the Golden Sebrights were in the ascendency, showing good quality. The Buff Cochins were also a noticeable lot, some of which were a trifle light and mealy in the plumage.

Besides the poultry there were pheasants, pigeons and a few miscellaneous breeds. It was quite noticeable that the exhibit contained no turkeys, geese, ducks, guineas or pea fowl, all of which add much to the interest of a poultry show.

A drive over the Pomona Valley revealed substantial progress in commercial poultry culture. Flocks ranging all the way from 300 to 3000 head are not uncommon, the breeds being mostly of the American class. This was somewhat of a surprise, as the Mediterraneans have been most in evidence where eggs are the chief consideration. The Pomona breeders find an excellent market for their product, it being about equally divided between Phoenix, Ariz., Nevada mining towns and Los Angeles. From a cursory trip over the valley the writer would say that it contains something like 50,000 head of poultry of all breeds. Many have put their flocks out in the orchards, which is certainly commendable in the case of deciduous trees, as they afford plenty of sunshine in the winter months and shade in the summer. In the case of citrus groves, it seems to us that they would be too damp during the cold and wet season. The arrangements of yards and houses were good and up-to-date, and evinced a thorough knowledge of poultry-keeping. The Times is pleased to learn of this progress and development, and here expresses the hope that the industry will develop much as it has in Sonoma county.



THE BLUE ANDALUSIAN—THE BIRD THAT IS CREATING DISCUSSION IN THE APPLICATION OF THE MENDAL LAW.

The Winnings of the Birds.

The show campaign in Southern California which has only just drawn to a close has been successful in a broad sense. The entry fees and gate money in each case have been ample not only to meet current expenses, but in each case leave a handsome surplus. The Los Angeles show, with its entry fee raised to $1, was certainly a winner. The show not only "won out" on the new deal, but made a handsome profit. The board of directors have now under consideration the purchase of a suitable site at some central point and the building of a handsome hall for exhibition purposes and a permanent home for the organization. The Breeders' Society reports a similar condition of things, aims along the same lines. The Pomona over the velvet from Thursday noon attendance was good, with entry fees fixed charges. Here the breeders are ise a permanent society, and make the regular annual fixture of that town. The San Diego shows also did much to try. Verily, a diversification of agricultural growing apace, and the American hen is spurs.

Black Minorcas sport an albino or white chick, frequently.

According to Mendel, the blue fowl has two unit characters, a compounding of a black and a white unit, but will transmit only one to progeny. If she can transmit black and is mated to a blue sire able to transmit white, blue chicks will come of them; but if he can only transmit black also, black chicks will issue. In poultry Mendel students would say that blue color is not a unit character, but a compounding of two units in affinity, one white, one black, and that blue parents are liable to give one unit once and the other another time, hence the three colors that usually come of blue mating. In pigeons and doves the blue is a unit character, or an inherent quality of structure certain to reproduce in progeny.

The scientific breeder of Andalusians understands a little of the mystery, and grows his Black and White Andalusians with pride. The public doesn't care about them, as he never exhibits them. The nearer to perfection in black or white, the finer his strain of birds must be, and the finer blue he will be able to get in progeny. The writer hopes that next year poultry shows will contain all three kinds of Andalusians; and why would it not be interesting to exhibit blue mongrel birds, bred from any pure white and pure black, in a demonstration of the Mendel law of heredity, exhibiting the parent stock with the progeny?

Different people who have been equally successful apparently advise differently. The defense of either way of feeding has been found to be the housewife's economy frequently. Many a woman would dread to get the hot mash ready in the morning, while another would dread to get it at night. It is a lot of work to make a mash right, and according as one's other work goes, so may go the mash. Where one has a stove in an outhouse, fuel from the orchard cuttings, and dinner at night, it seems policy to make the mash in the morning and feed as early as possible, but 8 o'clock is good service to a family flock. If fed regularly, the laying will come later than in a flock fed early. The digestive processes with mash cannot be as well carried out on a perch. The crop is more distended with a varied food, and it digests fast and differently according to what the mash may have in it. Fowls fed mash at night perch with a quondam crop filling, not always a fortunate one to sit down with in a line of birds. If one bird feels uncomfortable from overfeeding, she disturbs all the others on that perch, and the temptation to overfeed is greater with a mash, because of the varied condition of the mash in color and form of bits. To whet the appetite in the morning adds zest to the day. The hen gets a crop full and goes to lay. The bulk is above the maternal organs, and not in the way; and she is quiet while the digestive processes go on. By the time the egg is laid and she is resting a bit, the organs get busy to take care of the refuse from the crop, and then she is ready for green food. Many times mash fed at night digesting fast stays too long as refuse. Heat goes with the digestive process, and where digestion is fast, too much heat of a sudden disturbs the fowls and makes them restless; and when digestion is fast the heat is gone when the coolest part of the night comes on; one always feels cooler after being overheated, and our nights are always cool. If much heat goes with the morning digestion of mash, it benefits the hen laying, especially if she insists upon laying in a dark, cool corner, as is usually the way; being alone on a nest, she can get rid of the extra heat if it beset her. Rapid digestion in the morning means new hunger and activity at noon, and getting and eating green foods, that also digest quick, makes the fowl ready for the night meal after varied experience.

The experience on the perch at night should be uneventful, peaceful. The digestion should be slower and always attended with the same quiet manifestations. The feeding of cracked corn at night means quiet digestion, always the same slow heat adding to the body heat, accumulating gently as the night grows colder. Fowls need to sleep at night regularly. Corn is more lasting in digestion than other grains, and a good night feed when nights are cool. It is judicious to feed a lasting food when heat is needed by fowls, otherwise it goes to fat. Exercise in daylight can keep up heat, and the muscle-making foods and protein be fed. The writer sees no reason for feeding a hot mash only in the morning, unless to favor the housewife's economy with time. The light housekeeping in Southern California quite insists that other things adjust themselves to it regardless of losses.

MATRIMONY IN MARYLAND.

Judging by the annual report of the Pennsylvania Health Department, the Pennsylvania bachelor is an uncommonly alert and elusive person. In many counties of the State old maids swarm like bees in a hive and widows patrol the countryside in vast, terrifying phalanxes, but all the same the majority of bachelors there are bachelors still. Last year, for instance, the census takers found 937,630 single men of marriageable age in the State, and yet but 59,237 of them were lured to the altar during the twelvemonth. In other words, there were sixteen that escaped to one that was enmeshed.

It must be admitted, in common honesty, that no such record stands to the credit of the bachelors of Maryland. Their factor of safety is probably nearer eight than sixteen, and certainly it is not more than twelve. But in considering their comparatively abnormal susceptibility the quite uncanny charms of their opponents must be taken into account. The girls of Maryland, in the opinion of all competent observers, are the most beautiful in the world. They have dash; they have skill at coquetry, and they have style. Their eyes are stars; their lips are rubies, their hair is gold, copper, sealskin or ebony, as the case may be. Their smiles are radioactive. They have intellect. They are good cooks. They know how to dress. No wonder that the bachelors of Maryland run extra-hazardous risks and are dragged to the rail so often.—[Baltimore Sun.

Hako of the Pawnees.

THE SACRED CEREMONY WHICH NO WHITE MAN MAY WITNESS.

From Memphis Commercial Appeal.

ONCE every ten years the Pawnee Indians emerge from the tepees and earth lodges which dot the prairies around this meager town of frame structures and perform the rites and rituals of the Hako, the most alternately solemn and riotous ceremony of the nation, which appeals to the Great Spirit that the tribe may increase and be strong and that its people may have long life, enjoy plenty and be happy and at peace.

The embers of the great camp fire around which they held the concluding functions of the last Hako are still smouldering near the Pawnee Indian Agency in Oklahoma. For two weeks warriors, squaws, priests, medicine men, boys and girls paraded the wide plains, stopping ever and anon to chant or dance or execute other impressive incidents of the function. At the head of the long procession walked three men, the Kurahus, venerated for his knowledge and experience, holding before him a brown eagle feathered stem of ash wood; on his right a chief, grasping with both hands a wildcat skin and an ear of white mother corn, and at his left the assistant Kurahus, bearing a white eagle feathered stem.

The trio wore white buffalo robes with the hair outside. Their faces were anointed with sacred ointment and red paint. Behind them walked the doctors, with their insignia, the eagle wings; then the singers with the drum, and behind them the men and women of the party with the ponies laden with gifts and needed supplies of food.

Over the vast prairie for miles and miles this order was preserved day after day until the journey came to an end. Everything seen was regarded as a manifestation of the supernatural powers under whose favor the ceremony was taking place. Hence the trees, the streams, the mountains, the buffalo were each addressed in song. Water was treated as one of the lesser powers and used only for sacred purposes. Tobacco was employed only for the offering of smoke to Tirawa. In olden times the red man did not smoke for pleasure, but only in religious ceremonies. The white people have taught the Pawnees to profane the use of tobacco.

No impious paleface is permitted to view the weird ceremonies of the Hako. The government, fearing the venting of aboriginal wrath over intrusion, sends out a general warning to settlers. It is an unneeded precaution, for no white man cares to tempt the anger which his presence would arouse. Maj. Gordon W. Lillie ("Pawnee Bill,") whom the Pawnees once honored with the title "White Chief," is probably closer in their regard and confidence than any other white man. It was through his offices that occasional glimpses of the Hako were obtained.

Mouth-Waving-in-Water, a very old Kithehahki medicine man and one of the oldest living Pawness, inaugurated the performance of the function by selecting the Kurahne to have complete charge and naming November 16 as the day when the preliminary rites were to be done. For Kurahus he chose Little Chief, the present chief of the Chani and great-nephew of Pitelesaru, once head chief of the Pawnees. He is the keeper of a sacred bundle and of a buffalo pipe which, when exposed, causes windstorms. On November 16 Little Chief entered a sweat lodge to purify himself.

In two hours he reappeared, placed sweet grass on a small pile of coals, sat down and drew a robe about himself and the coals, that the smoke of the sweet grass might reach every part of his body. He then mixed with red paint a bit of consecrated deer fat and anointed himself. Putting on moccasins, leggings and a buffalo robe, and fastening a white, downy eagle feather in his scalplock, he reported to Mouth-Waving-in-Water and picked two assistants.

At the lodge the chiefs and leading men of the nation were assembled, with those who had agreed to be of the party and had contributed the requisite gifts. At the west end of the lodge, facing the east, the Kurahus made the initial prayer of the long function and then the picturesque cavalcade started on its peregrination. Over the forty square miles of the Pawnee allotment it wended its way, making camp wherever night overtook it. No white man will ever know the songs and prayers and invocations and weird ceremonies of the way.

Story telling was a feature of the evenings. The warm friendship of the old and leading men of the nation toward "Pawnee Bill" soothed their prejudice and allayed their fears to the extent of permitting the "White Chief" and the writer to sit for an hour by their camp fire and listen to the narratives of legend and tradition and ancient folk lore. The "White Chief's" knowledge of the Pawnee language is intimate and familiar.

The Pawnee clearly recognizes two great categories of tales—those which are true and which are supposed to relate to things or events which actually happened and those which are false and which are considered to have been invented by the Pawnee, especially by the old men, for the purpose of impressing some moral precept, illustrating some phase of ethical life or conveying a warning.

There are many stories of the heavenly beings, describing events which the red man believes actually took place. They are told only during ceremonies, especially during the intermissions or pauses which occur from time to time during rites, or when resting in the chanting of a long ritual. Any one of those present may ask the priest for such a tale, but especially is it the privilege of the one who has made the ceremony possible by providing the food for the sacrifice and feast. Collectively they form a popular account of the Pawnee belief in the performances of the supernatural beings.

Another set of stories also related only during formal ceremonies are known by the Pawnee as "ready to give" tales. They are clearly recognized as fictitious. In all of them the hero, usually a poor boy, overcomes the enemy or dangers, and thus benefits the tribe, or he brings the buffalo to a famishing village, or performs some other act of general tribal benefit.

Thus the hope is expressed that by the relating of the tales the corresponding amount of bravery and fortitude will be shown in present-day life and some similar element of good fortune may result. Often this mythology was renewed during the Hako, at which time a grass lodge was erected for the priest, and the girls were encouraged to prepare a feast.

Another group of stories explains the rites and ceremonies of the medicine men or the origin of the medicine powers of the individual medicine man. They are not told on ordinary occasions, and never except on payment of objects of value or of money. They are, therefore, considered as private property and belong either to a group of medicine men controlling a medicine ceremony, or to individuals who naturally possess the story of the origin of the medicine power which they use in their practices.

Coyote tales, in which the animal of that name plays a conspicuous part, are a popular feature of these gatherings. They may be related at any time and upon any occasion except during summer, at which season the Pawnee believes that the star known as Fool's Coyote would inform the Snake Star, which in turn would inform the snakes, who would bite the teller. They teach specially the ethics of tribal customs and beliefs; in a word, they form a code of living. They are always told at night. Many of them are accompanied by songs, during the singing of which the children dance. Thus the tales are supposed also to free the young of bashfulness and shyness. Many of these coyote tales have elements of the cultured hero, at least in many of them is some element which may serve to encourage the poor boys and girls to arouse their ambition.

Here is a specimen tale told by Thief, or Jackson Crusoe, now one of the oldest members of the Kitkehahki tribe, and formerly of the recognized rank of warrior. It was narrated to the young people to teach them that the coyote, by running after the buffalo, scattered out over the earth:

"There was a coyote lodge upon the banks of a stream of water somewhere in the northern country. Coyote Man went off on a hunt. While he was gone, a bunch of buffalo came past the lodge. The children all turned out and began to run after the buffalo. The mother of all the children came running and told them to run on after the buffalo, that they might as well run after the buffalo as to stay there and starve. The coyotes, with their mother, ran after the buffalo. They began to run in the morning, and in the afternoon they were somewhere in the southern country.

"The youngest of the coyotes began to give out. As he fell behind and was about to fall down and die, his father overtook him and passed him. The young coyote began to sing, 'My father will now catch up with the buffalo and kill one or two of them.' One of the young buffalo gave out, and the coyotes surrounded it and killed it. When they had eaten the buffalo, the old coyote said: 'Old woman, you and I must go back to our lodge in the north. What shall we do with these children?' Young coyote said: 'Let us all scatter here and each one go wherever he chooses. In this way the whole country will be filled with coyotes.' They all decided to scatter out, and did so. This is why the coyotes are found everywhere in the country."

Where the Hako ceremony originated and through how many generations it has come down to the present time no historian has been able to determine. The original instigation was probably a desire for offspring, that the clan might increase in number and strength and be perpetuated through the continuous birth of children. The eagle and the ear of corn represent in general the male and female forces. Each ritual, it is explained, is complete in itself, but all are so related to each other as to form an unbroken sequence.

A PRESENT-DAY UTOPIA

The happiest and most beautiful spot on earth today is the Island of Moorea, one of the Society Islands in the South Seas. Whenever you are thirsty a word will send a lithe, brown body scrambling up a tall palm-tree trunk, and in two minutes a green cocoanut is ready for you to quaff—the nectar of the Polynesian gods. It is worth the trip down here to eat the native "vittals," for you get at every meal things you never tasted before, and each seems better than its predecessor. To see your dinner of fresh-water shrimps, sharks' fins and roasted sea urchins. The bananas you eat—there are eleven varieties—baked, raw, fried, dried, grow a few rods back in the valley; ditto the bread fruit, the pineapples and about everything else on the board. It's nice to have your morning coffee grown in the back yard. Guavas grow in such profusion they are used as pig food, grated cocoanut is fed to hens, while sensitive plant is considered excellent fodder for cattle.

For perfection of the human body the Tahitian is unexcelled, if, indeed he is anywhere equaled. They are a large race, both men and women being noticeably taller and more fully developed than Anglo-Saxons. Every man looks like a picked athlete, with sloping shoulders and bared chest. A crowd of them together reminds one of the scene in a "locker building" toward the end of the fall when the 'varsity squad is narrowed down and the afternoon's practice is just over. I doubt if any Society Islander ever went through a whole day in his life without having a wreath of flowers on his head or a blossom behind his ear. The love of flowers is innate with man, woman and child; they can't pass through a patch of woods without emerging with a garland. Every gay mood calls for flowers on their hats, in the hair, behind their ears, and their life is an almost unbroken sequence of gay moods. Scarcely a native on the Island of Moorea can speak a sentence of English, but every one you meet greets you with a courteous smile and the welcoming words, "Ia-ora-na" (Yorana.)—[Hugo Parton, in Outing Magazine.

Farming in California—The Land and Its Products.

CONDUCTED BY J. W. JEFFREY, STATE COMMISSIONER OF HORTICULTURE.

FIELD NOTES.

The Fallen Monarch.

IT was in the main street of a large California city that I saw lying prostrate and blocking the entire street a giant cottonwood tree. Negroes were sawing up into stovewood the massive limbs, and innumerable boys were see-sawing in the tops with great appreciation. This tree measured five feet in diameter, but it had to come down by order of the City Council. Its sole offense was "spitting cotton," and an old ordinance had been discovered making the forty-year tenancy of this giant illegal. It was easier to remove the tenant than to repeal the ordinance. On the other side of the street stood a row of sycamore, planted at the time the giant was set out, but these trees were small and did not fly "cotton" to fleck the decorations of the passers-by. Technically it is not vandalism to destroy this monarch, but the effect is the same. The first settlers were standing around like a body of mourners at the bier of a dead friend.

Will They "Fire" Him?

FOR the first time in years, if not the first on record, a Board of Supervisors have been petitioned to discharge a Horticultural Commissioner. The case is in Siskiyou county, and will have a hearing on the 7th of February. Last July the Supervisors of that county organized a Horticultural Commission, appointing James Estes, George Chambers and L. J. Hebbring. The latter is a large apple grower at Gazelle, and, strange to say, he is the commissioner to be tried for bias and incompetency at Yreka next month. As the case is interesting to every fruit-growing county in the State an account of the trial will be given the readers of The Times if the hearing amounts to anything. It is of great interest to me, as I am occasionally a full-fledged member of the board of which Mr. Hebbring is president, and from which he may be "fired."

The facts in this controversy, as I learned on a recent visit, seem to be as follows: Before the advent of the moth and San José scale, Siskiyou county was famous for its quality of apples. But the orchards have now become so badly infested that most of them have ceased to produce sound fruit, but have been left in that condition from year to year. Mr. Hebbring"s apple orchard is in a neighborhood of 200 acres of apple trees. He sprays his trees three or four times each year, but the surrounding trees receive little or no attention. The farmers of the county know nothing about the workings of the horticultural laws of the State, and many of them resent any infringement of what they consider their right to maintain their orchards in their present condition. Mr. Hebbring has been very active in trying to better these conditions, and has fallen heir to the disapproval of at least thirty-one orchardists, who have signed the petition for his removal. The Supervisors are very intelligent men, and promise to give careful attention to this controversy, and will no doubt give a just decision when the merits of the case are set forth. Siskiyou county is at the threshold of an apple boom, and the prospective planters should see that a good, working Horticultural Commission is maintained under all circumstances.

White Fly Parasites.

DR. L. O. HOWARD, chief of the Bureau of Entomology at Washington, writes me that his department is trying to establish the parasites native to the common white flies of this country. He is working on the theory that these natives may in time adapt themselves to the imported white fly of Florida. Such adaptation has frequently occurred, but in this case we must consider the fact that the Aleyrodids are not perceptibly diminished in California by their natural enemies. In the cañon above Oroville the native white fly abounds abundantly with its parasites, yet Dr. Howard's experiments are well worth the making. That is one of the missions of the economic entomologists. At present the State Board of Horticulture is gathering data from all over the State upon humidity, temperature and other conditions that may determine the liability of the Florida white fly's getting a hold should it be imported into the citrus centers of the South. The fly seems able to adapt itself to our dryest climate.

State Quarantine Work.

FEW fruit growers of California realize the magnitude of the quarantine inspection at San Francisco done by the office of the State Commissioner of Horticulture. During the year 1907 Mr. Ehrhorn's report shows the arrival of 250 steamers at that port. They brought in 61,642 crates, packages, etc., of fruit and vegetables, and 3458 cases of trees and plants, and in addition, 1180 loose packages in the hands of passengers were examined. This total of over 66,000 packages was not all clean by any means, for 10,329 lots of these plants and fruits were destroyed. When it is necessary to destroy over 15 per cent. of the arrivals the amount of infection sought to be foisted upon the State may be seen. One of the freaks or derelicts of quarantine inspection was a carload of peach trees which found its way unclaimed to Alameda. It was held a long time, and finally the case was closed by the burning of the entire lot, and the mystery of the arrival still remains unsolved.

The report shows that both the Tussock and the Gypsy moth were intercepted and destroyed by the quarantine office. They were not of the species that have been so terribly destructive in the New England States, but the family names are enough to cause rejoicing at their destruction. As late as December 12 the good work was still going on. Then 100 boxes of Japanese oranges were dumped into the sea on account of the prevalence of a fungoid known as Cladosporium citri. Photographs of these "afflicted" oranges were sent to the main office, and it would make a citrus grower full of apprehension should he believe his fruit should ever become possessed by this fungous disease. The steamer China, outward-bound, dumped this lot into the sea, so far out that even the favorable Japan current could never return the fruit. Another shipment contained gardenia plants infested with Aleyrodes aurantii, a name very close to the dreaded Aleyrodes citri which caused such excitement throughout the State in 1907.

A New Parasite.

SOME progress is being made in establishing the new parasite for the black scale, which was received from South Africa about a year ago. This tiny chalcid fly should become a side partner of the Scutellista, as it is a body parasite of the scales while the other destroys only the eggs. The State Insectary has been working with this late importation with some success, and now Commissioner Cundiff, of Riverside, reports that he has been liberating it from his own breeding jars. The fruit growers of California are too old to be caught with parasitic promises and have wisely decided to go on with their own destructive agencies, well knowing that the horticultural officials of the State will not abate their efforts to propagate and distribute every beneficial insect of promise. Should the new enemy of the black scale prove as successful as the Scutellista, the two would prove effective in the control of the black scale to the exclusion in many sections of spraying and fumigating.

Useless Remedies

H. E. L., Carpinteria, writes of his guavas, stating that the black thrips are destroying his plants. From half an acre he harvested $700 worth of guavas in one season, but the plants are becoming useless since the attack of their enemies. The black thrips is not usually considered a harmful creature. They are prevalent everywhere, yet in small numbers as a rule. One species is exceedingly destructive to the deciduous fruits at San José, so harmful in fact that the Department of Agriculture has a special agent there investigating the pest. The black thrips may have multiplied enormously in the case of the guavas, and I will write to the complainant for particulars, specimens and time of infestation. If the farmers would more frequently follow this gentleman's example and report all such outbreaks to the university, or to the State Commissioner of Horticulture, more help could be given, for these offices maintain specialists for just this kind of investigation. Let us hear from you oftener.

Dan to Beersheba.

I HAVE now seen California from Siskiyou to San Diego—from Zuleka to Tia Juana, a distance of over 700 miles in a straight line. While on a trip into Siskiyou county the first week of this month I saw some of the grandest scenery on the continent, and so much of it that one cannot grasp its magnitude. For the first time in fifteen years the once-familiar crunch of snow was heard under my brogans, and it was music to my ears—for a little while. Yreka was the point on which I held my way. It is a town of 1200 people, boasting of nine men over 84 years of age and seventy men over three score and ten. There were more people in Yreka fifty-five years ago than abide there now, and the district of which this mining town was then the center has given the world $150,000,000 in gold. Frank Wiggins justly enlarges upon the agricultural products with which he invaded Shasta Springs, but his Chamber of Commerce would sit up and wonder at the gold-quartz exhibit of the Yreka Chamber of Commerce. They show the same art in setting up virgin gold there for exhibition that Mr. Wiggins shows in displaying the fruit products of his country, and as one views these invaluable collections he readily believes that $60,000 worth of "the precious" was taken from 100 square feet of bedrock, and that the biggest nugget ever found on the continent was taken from Scott's Bar in the early days.

However, it is not all gold that glitters in the big county of Siskiyou, which is as large as Connecticut and Rhode Island combined, and which I verily believe would be as large as Texas if the mountains were spread out into a plain. The lowest point of land in Siskiyou is 200 feet above the sea level and the highest (Shasta) 14,444 feet. Much of this land is out of sight, as Shasta almost always hides his presumption behind a bank of clouds. Interspersed between these magnificent peaks are about 900 ranches, stock and fruit farms, and the farmers there are said to enjoy the lowest tax rate in the State, being but $1.50 on the $100 valuation. The diversity of scenery is not more marked than is that of the trees. One can see the lower portion of the pines distinctly, but there is a reason why one cannot see the tops at one look. And in the lower Klamath Valley there stands a cherry tree over three feet in circumference. From these great trees comes much of the lumber used by the citrus growers in packing their fruit, the town of Weed having the largest box factory in the world. The county of Siskiyou is awakening to the possibilities of fruit culture. I heard the scores of apple orchards, one being 150 The first Board of Horticultural Commissioners pointed last July, and its number are tive work in the suppression of the San José the codling moth, the only serious so far. Siskiyou is rich in mining mances and interesting historic facts. I there is a mountain fastness just where a few men can withstand an army, strated in the Modoc Indian war. It is impregnable than the Alamo or famous

Yellow Scale Parasite.

THE yellow scale is the only serious Butte county, and as yet it has not commercial orchards to an appreciable question is often asked why the parasite the southern part of the State has not lished in the northern citrus fruit sections. tion would be applicable to San Bernardino I presume no one knows why insect do uniform work all over the State. It is ingly difficult problem to determine, but the the reason, is well known. In the San almost any season the parasites of this scale merous that they may be captured from the the trees by hundreds, and I have seen them numbers upon lemons and oranges after the been delivered to the packing-house. They colonized into hundreds of localities where they not take hold of the scale, and it would be Butte county growers to await their coming meantime allow the yellow scale to become these fine groves.

Gardening in California—Flower and Vegetable.

Eucalyptus Culture.

OF such general interest has become the cultivation of eucalypts in California that the following account of the best garden methods will prove profitable. It is from the Rural Californian:

"Most all varieties require a little different treatment, but a general cultural direction will be found to cover all requirements in a general way.

"There are two ways of raising the seedlings, the seed bed and seed boxes. Each has its advantage, but we prefer the boxes.

"For the seed boxes treat as follows: First prepare your soil, which should be a good loamy soil, well drained and sifted finely through a screen. The boxes may be made of any size, but the regulation boxes are three inches deep by twenty inches square. Some are using eighteen inches square, the latter being mostly made of shakes sawed in half, using inch pieces for ends and split shakes for the sides. This makes a box 16x 18x3 inches inside measurement, and does very well.

"The boxes should be carefully filled with soil and lightly pressed all over with a slight tamping in the corners. Then smooth over carefully to make level and over this sprinkle the seed thinly, about ¼ ounce to the small box above described. Then cover seed by screening fine soil over it to a depth of ⅛ to 1-16 inch, never deeper. After this cover boxes with cloth or lath and keep damp, but avoid too much water and also care should be taken never to wash the soil, using a pressure spray. As soon as seed begins to sprout care should be used in watering, as this is the critical period and too much water will cause 'damp.'

"After plants are up two inches they must be 'hardened off' by giving them full sun. This should be done gradually, after which they can be transplanted.

"Planting in beds can be done in the same manner as for boxes, but the beds should be so located that they can be 'hardened off' also, as this greatly helps in successfully transplanting, which is as follows:

"After thoroughly hardening down prepare the soil in boxes as for seeding, and if you have regular-sized boxes take a piece of board, same length as inside of box, and divide the distance in ten divisions by driving small nails in the edge and ¾ inch from each end of board. Press this marker into the soil, making ten rows each way, or a total of 100 plants to the box. This marks the distance to plant. Then take a small peg (sharpened) size of large finger, or better, a small dibble made for the purpose, and put in the plants, firming the soil about the roots, carefully water and set in complete shade for a few days. Then gradually harden again to the sun, and after growth starts they are ready for planting in a permanent place.

"The Blue Gum (Eucalyptus globulus) is most largely used for wood. The Red Gum (E. rostrata) is a favorite for railroad work and telegraph poles, also E. tereticornis and E. corynocalyx are great favorites for same purpose. The latter will withstand more drought than the others, while rostrata and tereticornis will endure most cold. E. resinifera, or Mahogany Gum, is fine for furniture, millions of feet being imported by railroad companies for finishing inside of cars, etc., and is called 'Mahogany' by many furniture dealers, and is also quite hardy. E. pilularis is used in same way, and for same purposes.

"E. polyanthema is a fine bee feed, blooming several months of the year.

"E. cornuta is a branching tree, and is good for shade and cover in pastures, thriving close to sea and in alkali soil."

How to Plant Onion Seed.

WE rented a nice piece of sandy soil out toward Glendale, and began the work of raising onions.

I did not know one man could be so many kinds of a fool, as the neighbors called me.

"Any one ought to know that onions would not grow in these interior valleys."

But the writer has great confidence in California soil, water and sunshine; and $2.25 a pound ought to buy good seed.

I counted ten persons who stopped to warn me of failure, because they had planted onion seed repeatedly without getting an onion.

Imitating the practice of the Italian gardeners, I combed out the side beds, to be free of trash, scattered the seed over the surface, as near two inches apart as I could, then covered with some fine earth as near ⅜ of an inch as I could; then firmed, literally tamped the whole down with a board.

I am quite sure I saw the man I had helping me put a stone in his pocket at this stage of the game.

Then, in addition to a thoroughly dampened earth with which I started, I kept the beds wet—not just damp but wet—for the ten days the seed was coming up. I also soaked the seed for fourteen to sixteen hours before planting in the water I used to wet the beds, for sameness of temperature. I am confident I did not lose a seed.

The needle-like plants were very brittle, so care had to be taken in weeding. Also as soon as the young "shoots" were two inches high, I made a sieve of a box and wire screen and sifted a mulch on top of beds one-half or three-fourths of an inch thick.

Whether sown "broadcast" or in rows, the same rules apply, of course. Soaked seed, shallow planting in fine earth, the beds thoroughly "firmed" and kept wet until the plants appear, from nine to eleven days, and success will come.

Few things pay so well as high-priced onions. Many a corner would help to a splendid purpose, if onions were planted there. And to raise onions successfully, be assured you will have to work; they take a lot of babying.

As this little paper is addressed to "newcomers," I want to add, do not judge California by back-East conditions. This sunshine, earth and water will raise anything in generous measure if you will do your part.—[William R. Lee, in California Cultivator.

Kitchen Garden.

WHILE each month brings its work in the kitchen garden, January seems to usher in the active work of the spring. Now we are in the midst of the rainy season, and we may confidently look for warm days to succeed our rainy days and good growing weather to prevail. It is, of course, too early yet to trust the more tender vegetables in the open, but all the more hardy will do well if planted during the present month. Among the many vegetables which may be planted this month, we may enumerate beets, cabbage, cauliflower, celery, cress, dandelions, kale, kohl-rabi, lettuce, mustard, okra, onions, peas, radishes, spinach, turnips, etc. Tomatoes, egg plants and vegetable marrow may be sown for early planting. These must, of course, be sown in boxes and grown under cover, for we are likely to have frosts before the young plants are ready for planting, which would cut them down if they were not protected.

Peas should be in early, and a good dwarf variety is preferred. Peas are very hardy and may be grown early, provided care be taken to protect them, when they are first appearing, against the attacks of birds, which are very fond of them and will pull them up unless they are guarded.

These are very hardy and a choice early vegetable. Really, the English or Windsor bean, as it is sometimes known, is worth more attention than it receives from us. It is a favorite food in England and on the continent, and would be so here were it better known.

Lettuce and radishes for salad can be grown to perfection now. Both of these delight in cool, moist weather and our winters produce them in perfection. The best way to grow lettuce is to start it in a box under glass and then set out the young plants in the open as soon as they are ready.

Turnips and onions may yet be set out, but if already in the seedling stage they should be thinned out to proper distances apart.

Celery plants should be ready for setting in the open now, and there should be a supply of cabbages, cauliflowers and kindred plants ready for bedding out. We can have these vegetables in monthly succession, and they do better in the cool winter or early spring months. It is well to have a stock of young plants coming on in order to keep the beds going.

Rhubarb and asparagus plants should be set out early this month; a small bed of each will supply an ordinary family. Every family should have a good parsley bed, a few plants are sufficient for flavoring, and seed sown now will give thrifty plants for the summer use.—[Town and Country Journal.

Ecuador Cacao Culture.

CONSUL-GENERAL H. R. DIETRICH, of Guayaquil, writes as follows relative to the cost of production of cocoa in Ecuador. "Some years a cacao tree yielded considerably more than a pound. A moderate estimate is an average yearly yield of a pound. The cost of plantation, and of care until the trees are in condition to bear, which is about eight years, is from 30 cents to 35 cents per tree, including interest on the capital invested. I know of no plantation having been offered for sale here, with all the trees in good bearing condition, for less than 50 cents to 75 cents per tree, including the land, and if in exceptionally good condition, with valuable improvements, such a plantation would bring a still higher price. This demonstrates that it would be profitable to plant and cultivate the trees whenever practicable.

"It is estimated that 40 to 45 per cent. of the crop will pay the running expenses of the plantation, including harvesting, marketing, and interest on the capital invested, leaving 55 to 60 per cent. as a net income to the owner. The value of the crop will, of course, vary as the price here has been 15 cents to 20 cents per pound.

"Cacao trees are usually planted nine feet apart. The trees require plenty of shade, and when clearing the land some trees are left standing promiscuously for shade. When planted on cleared ground, shade trees must also be planted."—[Consular Trade Reports.

When Knighthood Was in Flower.

AS Pat O'Hoolihan was walking down Broadway he was accosted by a distinguished-looking stranger, who wished to know the quickest way to the City Hall. Pat told him, and then inquired cheerfully: "And who might ye be?"

"I," said the stranger, drawing himself up proudly, "am the Hon. John Kenneth Edgerton of London, Knight of the Garter, Knight of the Bath, Knight of Malta, Knight of the Golden Fleece, Knight of St. John, Knight of the Royal Legion and of the Iron Cross. And whom have I the honor of addressing?"

Pat was staggered for a moment. Then he in turn raised his head proudly and replied: "Ye have the honor of addhressin' Patrick O'Hoolihan of Hoboken tonight, lasht night, night before lasht, night before that tomorrow night and ivery other dom night in the wake."—[Woman's Home Companion.

The Country Beautiful.

IT is now but a short time until rural California will be looking her best. Under the stimulus of the winter's rains and the gentle heat of the low-circling sun all dormant nature becomes responsive, until hill and dale, cañon and mountainside, all show an awakening later to be clothed with a heavy, living mantle of brightest green.

We must not be altogether lost in the contemplation of all this beauty and allow the marvelous development to overwhelm us with its responsibilities, for weeds will grow as well as nobler and more beautiful plants, and hoe and rake must be kept busily at work if we are to keep pace with nature in this race for the goal for beauty.

It is well for us to begin in time and clear away all rubbish while yet 'tis in plain view and we are unhampered by weed growth. All rubbish that is combustible should be gathered up and burnt and the ashes scattered and worked into the soil. Tin cans, baling wire, etc., should be carted away to some friendly hollow where they will be hidden from view and may also aid in stemming soil erosion by winter floods. Flower beds and all cultivated ground remaining unoccupied should be spaded deeply and left lying in a rough state so that it may become thoroughly aired before pulverization and planting. While in the rough scatter over well-rotted manure, and the first rain will carry it down into the soil. Then pulverize and work over thorough, and you may rest secure in the assurance of good results to come by reason of proper preparation. You are then in a fair way to do your share in making the country beautiful at the time when the soil is most responsive and garden work therefore most inviting. If you are not interested at this season you will never be satisfied with your premises later on when all others are clothed in beauty.—[Rural Californian.

Powell's Return.

MR. G. HAROLD POWELL has returned to Southern California to further round out his experimental work in the handling of citrus fruits. This is his fourth winter in this field, and he has become in this time the personal friend of hundreds of orange and lemon growers throughout the State, as well as the professional helper of every grower in the State. Mr. Powell has told me and written me time and again in appreciation of the willingness of his constituents to help in full measure in the investigations he has under way. Of these men Mr. C. E. Rumsey of Alta Cresta, Riverside, is one of the most enthusiastic and helpful. He is building a unique packing-house, and providing all the accessories necessary to carry out the Powell methods, and to put into practice his own ideas in the scientific handling of citrus fruits.

Mr. Rumsey will require every picker to cut the stems twice, and to wear a glove on the left hand, and to mark the box with a ticket for identification in case any of the fruit is found injured at the packing-house; before taking the fruit in it will remain one night in the orchard after picking, to allow for cooling; all the roads leading to the packing-house have been graveled and the wagons provided with springs; at the packing-house the boxes will be picked up six at a time on rubber-wheeled trucks and carefully placed on the floor.

After being carried horizontally to the grading table, without elevator or dump, the fruit will be carefully inspected and assigned to its proper grade. Passing to the canvas bins, another precaution is provided. The bins are automatically weighted to prevent the fruit from dropping too far, and, like the picket, the packer will be required to have the left hand gloved.

An order has been placed for a gravity conveyor, a feature that has not yet been adopted by the houses in this section of the country. Aside from its convenience and economy, it would seem to be in line also with Mr. Rumsey's idea of sparing the fruit all possible jar in handling. By this method the fruit will leave the packer on an inclined plane to the presser and the nailer. The latter workman will then place the box so that it may continue on its way to the car and to either end of the car where other workmen store the fruit without the necessity of carrying it any great distance.

REMARKABLE FATHERHOOD

They were talking about a certain famous statesman's remarkable fatherhood—at 70 he had children three, four and five years old.

"I can tell you of fatherhood still more remarkable," said a physician. "There was the historic case of Sir Stephen Fox, to whom, at the age of 99, a daughter was born. Then there was Joel Vaughan, of Cincinnati, who had 27 children, the last being born when he was 79 years old. The late Earl of Leicester was 71 when his last son was born. The Earl of Essex was 67 at the birth of his daughter, the Hon. Beatrice."

How the Chinese Live.

HOW the Chinese, who continually violate many of the hygienic laws that we hold most important, can maintain a high degree of health and vigor, is a problem that often puzzles observers. The editor of this department believes it may be explained by the fact that, during thousands of years of keen struggle for existence, the weak among the Chinese have gone to the wall, and the "fittest"—for life under such conditions—have survived.

This question has more than mere sociological interest. It has a direct bearing upon what we are pleased to call the problem of the "Yellow Peril."

The following article is contributed to the Care of the Body by J. M. Scanland, who has a more than usually intimate acquaintance with the Chinese of Los Angeles in their home life:

"There is less sickness and death in the Chinese quarter, comparatively, than in Los Angeles proper. This seems strange, considering that the Chinese ignore some of the laws of health, or rather rules for cleanliness which we consider as essential. One of these is the lack of fresh air in their stores, and sleeping-rooms especially; another is, or was, the lack of sewerage. Recently, the Health Department made a campaign of education in Chinatown, and the written law was read. The leading Chinese called a meeting of their "City Council," or Chamber of Commerce, and explained to their people that the out-houses must be kept in better condition, connection with the sewers must be made, refuse should not be thrown into the streets, etc. Some of the "fossils" rebelled, holding that they always had been healthful, as their ancestors were before them, under such conditions. They asked, "What for make a change?" It is true that they were healthful, under such sanitary conditions as would almost produce an epidemic among Americans.

About 60 per cent. of the deaths are from tuberculosis. A prevailing ailment is skin diseases—various forms of eczema, doubtless owing to impure food, vitiated air, and uncleanliness of the person. Scalp disease is common. It is quite prevalent among the children, which may be owing partly to shaving the head, the scalp being tender and subject to colds. The living-rooms are not clean, nor well ventilated. In some instances a family of five or six will live in a room of ordinary size, which also serves as the kitchen, and there is only one small window. They live as compactly as possible in order to save rent, and seem to have no discomfort in breathing the impure air of a crowded sleeping-room, or the fumes of the kitchen. On the contrary, they close the window at night, to shut out what they term the poisonous vapors.

They are very heavy eaters, evidently have an expansive digestive apparatus, and, from our standard, defy all rules regulating a healthful diet. They eat three heavy meals daily—breakfast at 9 in the morning, dinner at 5 in the afternoon, and supper at 11 at night, just before turning in for a sleep until 8 o'clock next morning. The late supper has no injurious effect on the system, though Caucasian doctors usually prescribe against eating late at night. The principal food of the Chinaman is rice, pork, poultry and vegetables, topped off with tea, and a wine made of boiled rice and usually drunk as hot as they can swallow it. It would seem that a heavy supper of this mass would make work for the Coroner, but it does not. They also eat largely of watermelons, cucumbers, green or ripe. They drink very little water, and only when it is boiled. Tea is their favorite beverage, and is drunk at short intervals during the day. In every house and store there is a pot of tea and tiny cups from which the employés and visitors help themselves whenever they feel thirsty. This does not affect their nerves or general health. Comparatively, they are temperate, and perhaps it is owing to the liberal use of tea.

A Chinese butcher shop is a repulsive sight to a Caucasian. In the butchers' windows on Apablasa and Marchessault streets are hogs reeking with grease. The entire hog is cooked and the outer skin is baked almost to a crisp. It is sold in chunks. The housewife chops it into bits convenient for swallowing, and fries it in oil or fat. Meats and vegetables are hashed into small bits, as the Chinese do not use knives in eating. Furthermore, they claim that when cut into small pieces, the food is more thoroughly cooked, and is therefore more digestible. It is also cooked quicker, and this saves fuel.

Two or three vegetables are boiled together, and the mass is thus eaten. Onion seasoning is used, very little salt, milk or butter. They do not eat bread, nor cheese, which they call "rotten milk." Nor do they eat puddings, cakes, creams, or pies and such things. Radishes, squashes, pumpkins, gourds and carrots, are among their favorite vegetables. The dishes are not served with any regularity, but seem to be as well digested. Usually, the meal begins with boiled rice, a meat follows, then fruits, and then a stew, or anything that seems to be within reach of the cook. After stuffing himself to his fill he washes his face in a basin and dries it on a towel, which is also used by all the others at the table. They do not consider this a fracture of the rules of health, though it is certainly conducive to the spread of skin diseases.

The Chinaman does not like cold water, and he is never so dirty as when attempting to cleanse himself by bathing, which is at long intervals. Usually, he leaves most of the business to the barber, which consists in shaving the head, the lobes of the ears, and the nose to the tip, with an exploration into the ears. The barber then washes his face and neck with a towel steeped in hot water, and this finishes the job. The basin of water and the towel are reserved for the "next," and so on, as is done in some of our barber shops.

The same lack of the use of water is seen in their living-rooms. The "scrub lady" is evidently neglectful. These rooms are redolent with the fumes of opium, but there is a noticeable absence of beer, cats and pet poodle dogs, which are infested with disease-breeding germs. Nor do the women feed their babes on cow's milk or dubious "baby foods."

There are about twenty "learned doctors" in Chinatown—all doctors are learned. Yet, no special education is required, nor do they undergo an examination, or require a diploma, thus saving $10 for the "sheepskin." The doctors do not depend upon their practice for a support, as there is not enough sickness. Some of them keep various shops, some are vegetable dealers, and several are interested in gaming-houses. The man who desires to practice blossoms out into a professional after he has absorbed and digested the contents of several medical works, all of them very ancient. In most cases, his father was a physician, and, naturally, he is supposed to inherit some of the wisdom of his ancestor. If his grandfather was also a physician, he is still wiser in medical lore, having inherited the entire stock. Some of our M.D.'s might note this idea. From these books of his ancestors he learns all that it is necessary to know. They were wise in their generation, and nothing more can be added—the same diseases prevail now as then, and like medicines will have the same effect.

However, the Chinatown doctors have made one change—a change for the worse—from the practice of their ancestors, whose pay was stopped when the man was sick, and payment made only to keep him well. They have adopted the western custom of charging when the person is sick, and as much as the patient will bear. When the man who thinks something is the matter with him calls on the doctor, the learned medico at once assumes the usual look of gravity, or thinks he looks wise. He feels the several pulses of the patient. There are, according to their ideas of anatomy, two pulses in each wrist, one in each forearm, and one in the sole of each foot. He feels the wrists, arms, and feet, thumps the man in the chest, looks into his eyes, at his tongue, asks a few general questions, and then asks for a dollar. Sometimes more, according to the complaint, or the finances of the patient. He never saws off a limb. According to the belief they share with other orientals, a mutilated body cannot enter the Celestial Paradise. That is why a Chinaman who is wounded in a tong war objects to going to a hospital, and considers himself as good as dead when sent there.

The patient takes the prescription to the druggist, who has a book in which all diseases are described, under appropriate headings. He turns to that paragraph, compounds the mixture, and with a wry face, expressive of a sorrow as great as if he had lost all of his relatives, hands it to the patient, and asks for 50 cents, or more, according to the quantity and quality of the "dope." Their medicines are mainly based on plants, yet almost everything in nature is used, such as extracts from animals, snakes, and reptiles. The Chinaman knows what he is swallowing, and grins and bears it. Of the various "animal wines" used are: Tiger-bone wine, mutton wine, tortoise wine, and snake wine. These are employed instead of alcohol, and therefore the patient is not "educated" to the whisky habit, nor is the craving transmitted to his children. Pills are given in capsules of wax, are as large as pigeon eggs, and swallowed with some difficulty. The capsules preserve the compound from contact with air, and are broken as soon as they strike bottom. An oil is given for headache and "brainstorms." The basis of the oil is camphor, various animal substances being added. All medicines are given in very large doses, on the theory that if a little is beneficial a larger quantity will work a quicker cure.

The Chinese eats many things that would make a westerner sick, and they wonder how we can eat certain things, and live. For their diseases they take medicines—and recover—which, if swallowed by a European, would perhaps end his earthly career. They live in comparatively filthy surroundings, obey sanitary regulations only when compelled to do so, and give very little attention to cleanliness of person. Yet they are as healthy—even more so—than the Caucasian.

"Soft Drinks" and Patent Medicines vs. Whisky.

THE following article appeared in the Care of the Body a few weeks ago:

"There is one phase of the prohibition wave that is sweeping over the country to which little attention has been directed. This is the great interest which manufacturers of 'soft' dope have in restricting the field of open saloons. Also druggists, especially those whose stock in trade includes large glass jars of (Sp. temperance craze in the South is the effort of the manufacturers of so-called "soft" drinks to help it along. Thus, it is openly talked that stopping the sale of beer, whisky, and wine through the South is worth millions of dollars to the manufacturers of "Cocoa-Cola," "Moxie," and the other such drinks. It is even said that these people have contributed largely to the temperance cause, knowing that they would get their money back and more in the increased sale of their mixtures." '

"By the way, Dr. Wiley, of the Department of Agriculture, who seems to have a mania for 'poison squads,' is, we are told, creating a new one, for the purpose of determining the wholesomeness of so-called 'soft drinks.' The inquiry is the result of a request from the War Department for information regarding the different varieties of aërated drinks that are sold at army canteens. Dr. Wiley will select a class of young men, upon whom he will experiment with the drinks usually sold at soda fountains, and in 'pop' bottles, to determine the effect, whether deleterious or otherwise.

"The editor extends his sincere commiseration to the members of this squad, and trusts that none of them have families dependent upon them—or, at least, that their lives are insured. He also reiterates his opinion that the stuff sold over drug-store soda-water-fountain counters is more injurious, from a hygienic point of view, than the stuff dispensed in the average first-class saloon."

In regard to this, the manager of a St. Louis advertising company, which handles the advertising of the coca cola people, writes to say that he does not approve of the article. The editor did not expect that the manufacturers of "soft drinks," or those who depend upon them for a living, would be pleased at the article. A man does not generally smile and say "Thank you!" when you tread upon his corns. It would be as reasonable to expect the manufacturers of blended or doped whisky to smile when they read the editor's criticism of some of their products.

The advertising company further writes: "If you have any evidence that would justify the assertion that the coca cola company might in any possible manner foster the prohibition movement, we should certainly like to be advised of your authority." The editor did not state anything in regard to this subject. He simply quoted the above passage from a contemporary without comment. It is, of course, quite natural that the manufacturers of "soft drinks" and patent medicines should be interested in knocking out the whisky traffic, just as druggists are always glad to knock out the saloons.

The editor has not the proofs, but he has heard from several sources, and on what appears to be good authority, that one patent-medicine firm, whose product has been extensively used in place of whisky in prohibition sections of the South, expended not less than $40,000 to aid the prohibition campaign in one Southern State.

As to the relative injuriousness, from a hygienic point of view, of the "dope" sold over a soda-water-fountain counter, and the other stuff sold as patent medicines, in comparison with pure whisky, the editor repeats what he said in the above article.

Here is an extract from a recent number of that sterling newspaper, the Brooklyn Eagle:

"The death of another boy from drinking ice-cream soda renews the occasion for urging caution, if not in the drinking, then certainly in the making of summer beverages. The poisoning may have resulted from ptomaines developed in the cream, which was more likely milk thickened with starch, or it may have been caused by deleterious qualities in the flavoring extracts, or by the action of these extracts upon the milk. It is pretty well known that in the cheaper of the syrups that bear the names of the fruits which are supposed to yield them, there is not a trace of strawberry, raspberry, vanilla and what not. The materials that give flavors approximately to those of the fruit juices are taken from coal tar and are by-products of the gas-house. Coal tar furnishes saccharine, perfumery, drugs, dyes and other articles used in the arts, the dyes being the well-known anilines, which are brilliant, even shrill, but keep their color for only a little time and fade into dingy and unpleasant browns.

"The physiological effect of the flavoring extracts is probably not understood as yet, but it is said that they have a tendency to disturb the digestive process and even to weaken the heart's action. Certainly we should not assume that they were so readily assimilable as the fruit juices which they counterfeit. Yet they are gradually replacing honest goods, and with the best intention of avoiding them, nobody can tell when he may find them in his food and drink, at hotels, dining-rooms, even in domestic cookery."

As to coca cola, it does not, as some suppose, contain cocaine. The stimulating effect is due to caffeine, which is added to a fruit syrup. Therefore its name is misleading. The stimulating effect of a glass of coca cola is about equal to that from a cup of strong coffee. It would be more sensible—and from the editor's point of view, more palatable—to take coffee in the regular way. In June last, the War Department forbade the sale of coca-cola in army canteens.

Again, in regard to one of the best known of the patent medicines, take the widely-advertised Peruna, containing about 28 per cent. alcohol, or more than five times as much as is found in California light wines. In an article in Good Health, for January, by C. E. Stewart, M.D., he gives the results of tests made to show the influence of alcohol upon the resistant force of the blood or resistance to disease. He made tests first with two ounces of port wine, and then with two ounces of Peruna, the result being that the reduction in power of resistance was much greater after taking Peruna than after taking the same amount of port wine. Yet, how many, who would be horrified at the idea of tasting port wine, regularly consume this and other "patent" alcoholic dope. If you must—or think you must—consume whisky, take it "straight." It's less harmful, and tastes better. If you are wise, however, avoid the "medicinal" whisky sold at drug stores. Get some of the pure kind, that is sold to people who drink it because they like it.

Much better, however, leave alcohol and other stimulants, like caffeine, alone.

Foods and Fads.

J. D. H. writes as follows:

"A great many experts in dietetic matters claim that fruit should never be eaten in combination with other foods, and that not more than one kind of fruit at a meal is allowable. Must one make a meal wholly on fruit or not touch it?

"In your opinion, is it harmful to take bread and a starchy vegetable, such as the potato, or two such vegetables, at the same meal? Are green peas, fresh, included?

"There are many excellent reasons for eliminating meat from the diet. Dr. Tilden and others say that peas, beans, and lentils are difficult of digestion, and should be combined with nothing more damaging than a raw vegetable salad. Dr. E. R. Moras, in his book 'Autology,' claims that nuts should only be eaten alone, and then not later in the day than noon; milk tends to produce catarrhal symptoms and billiousness in many cases. Now, where is the flesh and muscle-building part of our diet to come from?

"Do you consider the best grade of ripe olives (canned) such as may be purchased in any grocery store, a wholesome article of diet?"

This is an example of the difficulties into which people are led, who have not a solid substratum of knowledge in regard to food values, and dietetics in general, and who therefore become confused, through the greatly divergent views put forth by various food faddists. There is not a single article of food that can be named which has not been more or less denounced as injurious by some one or another hygienic crank. Meat of all kinds, fish, flesh and fowl, eggs, pulse, grain of all kinds, nuts, fruits and vegetables are included in this list. Therefore, evidently, if a person should set out to do everything he is told in regard to diet by all these people, it is manifest that he would wind up by living on air, which is not a satisfying menu, even in this mild climate.

Don't worry too much about what you eat, so long as you eat clean food, that is not emasculated, but contains the necessary organic salts. Eat dry, chew thoroughly, and eat only when you are hungry. If you do this, you will not go far astray.

Do not be afraid that if, for instance, you should happen to eat strawberries and raspberries at the same meal, you might jeopardize your health, and even your hope of future salvation.

Ripe olives are a wholesome food, in moderate quantities, provided they are not put up with preservatives, or, on the hand, are not too salt.

Since Dr. Moras wrote "Autology" he has been arrested for insanity. When it was noticed that Dr. M. denied absolutely the influence of heredity the editor suspected there was something wrong.

To Keep Out Noises.

REFERRING to a recent article in this department on unnecessary noises, and a suggestion in regard to putting cotton in the ear, a correspondent writes that paraffin is better than cotton. He says:

"Soften a piece of paraffin the size of a walnut by holding it in your hand or over a flame. Shape it so that a little projection is left on one side. Stick this into the ear cavity, and press the mass flat, so as to nearly fill the external ear. Be sure to press it tight enough to the flesh to exclude sound.

"This will give nervous persons rest and sleep, in spite of noise."

This might work at night time, but it would be impracticable in the case of one who has to be constantly answering a telephone, and so forth. Also, as the editor has said, it is questionable whether such closing of the ear for any considerable length of time might not be injurious.

By the way, it appears that an ordinance has been prepared by the Los Angeles City Attorney, dealing with unnecessary noises, but it has not yet been acted upon by the City Council. It's a good thing. Push it along.

To Relieve Throat Irritation.

A CORRESPONDENT sends the following suggestion for the relief of irritation and tickling in the throat. It is to press the finger in front of the orifice of the ear—not over the orifice—open the mouth, and breathe through it, so as to open the air passage from the mouth to the ear. This, he says, will speedily allay the itching and tickling. This, of course, is only a temporary relief from symptoms for which there is some more remote cause that should be discovered and eradicated.

"Manufactured" Raw Foods.

AMONG the hygienic fads that have sprung up of late have been the "manufacture"—or rather the putting together—of raw foods. One man, in New York, has a company, capitalized at a million dollars, and seems to be doing a big business. There certainly ought to be a fair profit in buying wheat at a dollar a bushel, or thereabouts, mixing it with a little dried fruit, and selling it at 15 cents a pound, or more.

As the editor has previously observed, he has no particular use for these put-up raw-food products. If you want to eat raw food—which is a good idea—buy hard red wheat, grind it in a small mill, as also nuts, and get the product fresh. Some of these makers talk about mysterious combinations of food, that have specially beneficial qualities, all of which is more or less poppycock. In one respect, these foods are superior to all kinds of mushes, because they are hard, and need thorough chewing, which is one of the secrets of good digestion.

The editor had a call recently from Frank C. Clark, formerly of Avalon, whose wife had been for many years an invalid and cured herself by following the laws of health, as set forth in these columns, especially by the use of raw food, which she imported from New York. Mr. Clark, who now lives at Glendale, is putting up what he calls "New Food. It is about as new as "New Thought." It is in the form of thin, hard cakes about two inches square, composed of bran, dates, figs and peanut butter, pressed together, without cooking. It is quite palatable. The mildly purgative effects accredited to it come, of course, from the bran. Bran, or entire wheat, should be avoided by persons who have inflamed stomachs. Otherwise, when the stomach is normal, the bran acts as a sort of broom, to sweep out the intestines. Such food as this should be regarded as a temporary expedient, to use when the bowels are constipated, rather than a regular diet.

As stated, the sensible way to do, if you want to adopt the raw-food diet, is to buy your grain, and nuts, and fruit, in the market. There are, however, many people —in fact, a majority of people—who are in the kindergarten class, so far as the care of the body is concerned. They must have something wrapped up in neat packages, with a special name. There is no need for these people to send away 3000 miles for their food, when such provender may be obtained at home.

A Boon for "Tenderfeet."

A MAN who has an orange grove in the San Gabriel Valley, near the end of an electric-car line, has hit upon a good idea. Realizing the craving of "tenderfeet", to pick real oranges, from a real tree, he advertizes that any one can go into his orchard, and pick the biggest oranges he can find, for the reasonable price of 25 cents a dozen. Thus, he kills two birds with one stone, realizing a high net price for his oranges, while saving the cost of picking, packing and shipping. It is something like the old-fashioned sanatorium, where they would set the patients to work sawing wood, as a means of cure.

On the other hand, some of the owners of orange groves in the valley have had to resort to barbed-wire fences, printed notices, rewards, and even shotguns, to keep visitors from pilfering oranges from the trees along the road. Now that these people have a chance to pick them on a business-like basis, there is no longer any excuse for this sort of thing. Nor yet to stand up and be photographed beside a fake orange tree in a gallery.

This idea might, with advantage, be elaborated, so as to take in other varieties of fruit, besides oranges. As the editor has previously suggested, it would be a good thing for all concerned if there were opportunities in this section for people to make what they call a "fruit cure," in Europe, and what some people call in America a "fruit fast," living for several weeks or months on fresh fruit. Inexpensive accommodations, in the shape of tent cottages, might be furnished, in orchards where there is a variety of fruit, and the patient could do the picking as well as the eating, thus getting a little gentle exercise, as well as a wholesome diet. Perhaps some of our owners of orchards, who have a variety of fruit, may be inclined to take up this idea.

A Life Saving Law.

A FEDERAL law goes into effect on March 4, restricting the work of telegraph operators and train dispatchers to nine hours a day, and train and engine men from working more than sixteen consecutive hours, without rest. This law was framed, not so much for the benefit of the thousands of railroad employés, as for the millions of passengers. It is a wise law, and will doubtless do much to lessen the fearful frequency of fatal railroad accidents. As an eminent English physician recently showed, there is a certain definite limit to the period during which the human mind can be kept at high tension. He showed that a lapse of a fraction of a second on the part of a weary "engine driver" might be sufficient to cause a catastrophe. This was believed to be the cause of a horrible accident that occurred a few months ago in England.

In this country, during the past few boom years, it has not been uncommon for locomotive engineers to be at work, without rest, and with little chance to take any refreshment, for as long a period as thirty-six hours at a stretch. That this involves great danger to the traveling public, as well as to the men themselves, no intelligent person need be informed.

The railroads are reported to be concerned as to how they can manage to move freight, and pay dividends, under the new law. These questions are of small importance, in comparison with the lives of thousands of passengers, now sacrificed every year to the railroad Moloch. At least, those will think so, who have seen a man pinned down by railroad wreckage, and begging to be shot before the flames reach him, while his agonized relatives look on powerless to help. Mistaken orders! Brain fag! Overwork!

Influence of Habits on Old Age.

THE papers frequently publish notices of persons who have attained to an unusual age, and try to deduce from their personal habits some causes for such long life In a great majority of cases this effort is futile.

For instance, we were recently told of Dr. William M. Starr, who, on the 13th of October last, in the city of Washington, celebrated his hundredth birthday. According to the report, he ascribed his health and age to the fact that he never used tobacco or alcoholic beverages, that he never ate as much at a time as he felt inclined, that he always ate a little less, that he always went to bed at sundown, and arose with the sun in the morning, holding this to be nature's law, from the beginning of the world.

On the other hand, a few days previously, in the same paper, appeared a notice of an American rabbi who had attained to the great age of 104, yet remained so active and vigorous that he could tire out his grandchildren. This man had smoked continuously, and freely, since he was a young boy. At the present time he smokes a pipe all day long, and often gets up at night to take a smoke.

So there you are.

Again, a well-known citizen of Los Angeles, a man of wealth, who recently died at the age of 86, is said to have consumed a quart of whisky daily, during the past sixty years.

Evidently, therefore, the awful things that are said by well-meaning but misguided reformers, in regard to the horribly deadly and rapid effects of alcohol and nicotine, are grossly exaggerated. In this way, these people do much more harm than good, for after people find out that they have been telling untruths, they are apt to go to the other extreme, and believe that there is no harm in alcohol or nicotine, which, of course, is not true.

The fact is, as the editor has frequently said, that it depends largely upon circumstances, how much or how long you can use this narcotic, and this stimulant. Once more, the editor would call attention to the fact that, where people are able to thus break natural laws with apparent impunity, you will find that, in every case, they have inherited good constitutions from their parents, who did not so break these laws. You will also find that their habits, otherwise, were sensible. As, for instance, the 104-year-old rabbi above referred to, who also went to bed early, took a nap after the midday meal. You will find that, in a great majority of cases, these people followed an otherwise healthy, natural life, getting plenty of fresh air, taking plenty of rest, and not worrying.

Yet, if they don't suffer directly to any perceptible extent from these causes, their children will inevitably do so—and their children's children. Also, as previously pointed out, these people cannot possibly have lived their lives to the full extent which their natural ability made them capable of.

Metchnikoff, the eminent bacteriologist of the Pasteur Institute, who has largely succeeded to the place formerly filled by the founder, Pasteur, has for many years been making a study of the question of longevity. He has arrived at the conclusion that the cause of death (in human beings at least) is the failure of the body to eliminate the poisons which are the natural result of the various bodily activities. In this, Metchnikoff is undoubtedly right. This, however, he shows, is not the immediate cause of old age, but only a predisposing condition. The actual degeneracy of the tissue is due to a destruction of the tissue cells, by wandering cells, found in the body, which he describes as "macrophages." In an article descriptive of this theory, Dr. J. H. Kellogg writes as follows, in Good Health:

"These cells move about from place to place, and while the body remains in its normal condition, devote their energies to the destruction of waste particles, organic débris. They, in fact, play the role of scavengers, like the turkey buzzards, which regularly visit the backyards and alleys of tropical cities to consume the daily accumulating refuse.

"So long as the macrophages confine themselves to this work, all is well; but when the vigor of the body cells has been reduced by the accumulation of tissue poisons, these scavenger cells attack the living tissues and actually destroy them. This is one of the remarkable discoveries which Metchnikoff has made in relation to the causes of premature old age."

Therefore, if we would prolong human life, we must make the conditions of life such that the premature accumulation of body wastes or poisons shall be prevented. We must take in as little waste or poison as possible, and let out as much waste or poison as possible. A temperate life is then, according to Metchnikoff, the means most essential to longevity. Quoting further from Dr. Kellogg's article:

"Coming to greater detail, attention is especially directed to the diet as having a direct bearing upon the length of human life. While it is noted that certain flesh-eating birds, as the eagle and the falcon, are very long-lived, attention is called to the fact that carnivorous animals in general are short-lived; and the reason for the greater longevity of carnivorous birds is found in the fact that flesh-eating birds have a very short colon —special study of this subject showing in general a direct relation between the length of life and the length of the colon—the longer the colon and the longer the retention of fecal matters in it, the shorter the length of life. The reason for this interesting fact Metchnikoff finds to be the enormous development of poisons by germs which find entrance to the colon, take up their abode there, and subsist upon the remnants of foodstuffs which have escaped digestion. Strasburger claims to have proved that some trillions of bacteria are discharged from the colon daily. Nearly all of these produce poisons, some of which are highly deadly in character."

Incidentally, Metchnikoff calls attention to the fact that a South American bird, which lives upon bananas and other fruits, is exceedingly long-lived.

Therefore, if you wish to live long, eliminate from your dietary, as far as possible, those substances which naturally promote the growth of germs in the colon. The substance which constitutes the most suitable food for these poison-producing forms, and in which they develop with the greatest rapidity, and produce poisons of the most deadly character, is the flesh of animals. It may be added that these same substances, which encourage the growth in the colon of germs that poison and destroy the body, also add unnecessarily to the labor of the liver and kidneys.

In other words, eat freely of sub-acid fruits and green leaves. Colon flushing may be resorted to, occasionally, for the sake of cleanliness, but it is a for the eating of foods which tend to presence of injurious bacteria in such menace health.

Draughts and "Colds."

This was certainly an unreasonably severe draught theory. The correspondent, as he sweating profusely under a feather bed—an the devil. He was consequently in a feverish bilitated condition. When in such a condition, concentrated draught of very cold air impinges small part of the body, it is, of course, natural congestion should result. This condition, as the shown, can only occur where there are impurities

Here is what the editor of New Thought Magazine, Chicago, writes about AUTOLOGY in a recent number:

"Dr. Moras broke away from the old drug system years ago and devoted his scientific training to advocating and disseminating knowledge of 'Nature's Remedies.' In reading the volume we kept marking the paragraphs we wanted to quote for the benefit of our readers, but when we finished and looked back at the unbroken line of marked pages we gave up. Read it for yourselves! It is thoroughly practical, thoroughly original, thoroughly valuable. When you've read the chapter 'What You Are Made of and Why You Eat,' when you've considered 'The Origin of Diseases,' 'Nutrition and Mal-Nutrition,' when you've mastered 'What to Do and What Not to Do,' and when you've got the strong meat out of the chapters on 'Prejudices in Your Way,' the essence of good sense in 'Natural Remedies'—when, in other words, you have read this book, you'll urge your friends and neighbors to go and do likewise."

The cold clothing and live an entirely natural life, but we should try to get as near to it as we can, hardening our bodies by simple diet, an occasional fast, exercise, fresh air and the exposure of the skin as much as possible to the sun and air. The inner hardening should take precedence. Then, you will be able to take up the air bath, cold sponge baths, and so forth. After you have hardened yourself in this way, you may, as the editor has said, take a bath with your clothes on and ride downtown on the dummy of an electric car without catching cold.

By the way, it has been noticed that those who use salt are much more subject to colds than those who do not. One writer in a hygienic magazine recently stated that abstaining entirely, as a rule, from salt, she noticed that whenever she used it for a day or two it was followed by a cold—that is to say, a fever.

In regard to what Capt. Lynch says about the bottle and the boiling water, glass is not a natural substance, but an artificial product of man. A piece of natural rock, hollowed out, would not act that way.

Oh——!

FOLLOWING is from an article for children in "The Life," a Kansas City magazine. It is written by one of the editors—a woman:

"One Sunday a very large buck with big horns took refuge from a pack of hounds that were chasing him, in a corner of our stable lot fence and stood there fighting off the dogs. I think my father would have shot him if it had not been Sunday. He believed it would be wrong to do so on Sunday, but not other days. I think now it would have been wrong on any day. Don't you? But some hunters did come up on horseback pretty soon and killed the poor fellow. I felt very sorry about it."

The editor might comment briefly upon this, but he fears that, if he did so, the blue pencil of the managing editor would promptly erase it. Or, should it escape his eagle eye, then the postal authorities might hold up the number. He, therefore, leaves his intelligent readers to make their own respective comments.
